from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], a question or two before I proceed. To the appropriation bill, carrying as it does $138,150,100, it is now proposed to add $4,000,000, making in all $142,150,100.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman has stated the amount in the original bill correctly, that is right.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Why were not these $4,000,000 placed in the original bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Because at the time the bill was passed the committee did not have the information upon which it bases this appropriation.

If the gentleman will read the hearings he will see that the Commissioner of Pensions sets out fully that two millions and a half of this deficiency results from the bills passed by Congress and by certain constructions put upon the law by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, which increased the amount of money that was necessary for the present fiscal year.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. In the report item 1 reads: "Pensions to those who heretofore have served in the Confederate army or had deserted from the Union Army, but afterwards served in the Union Army." That is one of them, is it not?

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will permit, it was held that when a soldier was honorably discharged from his last service—I believe the gentleman's committee reported such a bill?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes; and we stand by it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And it passed the House and passed Congress that when a soldier was honorably discharged from his last service and had served ninety days, that that wiped out his former record as far as a claim for a pension was concerned.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That was an additional item?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And the next item is, "also the adding of certain organizations to the pension roll, as, for instance, those who served in a number of Indian wars and others."

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is another item.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And a third item is "the increasing of pensions for total deafness."

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is another.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Also the "restoration of widows, dependent mothers, or dependent sisters, who had married."

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is another.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And "the increase of pensions to those who lost limbs in the service of the United States." That is another.

Mr. HEMENWAY. All of these items combined make up the $2,500,000. Now, the million and a half of dollars is put on in the way of a deficiency because under a proper construction of the law the old soldiers can complete their claims so much more rapidly than they could if they had to prove what the Commissioner of Pensions now knows is true.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Now, if the gentleman will permit me to proceed for a moment, I would be obliged. Item 1, pensions to those who heretofore had served in the Confederate army or had deserted from the Union Army, but afterwards served in the Union Army, was enacted July 1, 1902, was it not? And if that was enacted more than a year and a half before the 1st day of March, 1904, to when the Commissioner now estimates, why was it not included?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman knows that the law was passed. Claims had to be filed and adjudicated, and no one could estimate in advance just how many claims would be filed or how many allowed.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. But from June, 1902, to March, 1904, is nearly two years, is it not?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations has always allowed the exact amount estimated for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then, after the gentleman's explanation, I desire to proceed for a moment. I take it for granted that the Commissioner of Pensions desires in good faith to execute this order.

I am not criticising, because the amount is too small; my motion is to increase the amount. I do not believe the order can be properly executed by an increase of $4,000,000. I would make the amount sufficient for a liberal execution of the order. I would also state definitely what Congress expected of the Commissioner of Pensions.

This order has defeated all legislation for this session of Congress, and I would make the rule of Congress so plain that no Commissioner of Pensions would dare continue the narrow and strict interpretation against the soldiers.

As we can't get any legislation, I want to make this order as much like a service pension as possible. I would make an honorable service and an honorable discharge entitle him to pension certificate. Then I would add to it 1 cent for every day between his muster and his discharge. I would deal fairly by the old soldier.

The present situation confirms me in the belief that I had when the appropriation bill was presented, that the calculation had been made by the Pension Bureau on so economical a scale that the expenditures could not possibly be met by $138,000,000. I would not stop at anything short of justice to the country's defenders.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Does he oppose adding to the deficiency bill a sufficient amount of money to meet all the legislation which may be passed on the subject of pensions?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. "The gentleman" does not.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And will the gentleman, when Congress meets next December, oppose an addition to the amount, if necessary?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. "The gentleman" will not.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And does the gentleman believe there will ever be a day or a minute when any pension will remain unpaid because of lack of funds to pay it?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. "The gentleman" believes that if the policy as now applied is to proceed, possibly that case may arise; but not if I can have my way.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In what particular has "the gentleman from Indiana" ever refused to join in appropriating one dollar estimated for pensions?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I am not reflecting on my colleague; it is the policy of those in power that I am talking about. "The gentleman from Indiana" has put to me the question whether I am willing to add to the appropriations in a certain contingency when I was trying to show that the present appropriation is too small.

My amendment provides an increase. Instead of $4,000,000, this appropriation shall be $5,000,000; and if you will honestly execute this order and the laws already on the statute books, you can not meet the necessities of the case with $10,000,000. Your $4,000,000 will be $6,000,000 short.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then we will make it twenty millions.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If the Commissioner of Pensions had not issued this order, and had allowed Congress to enact a pension law, the amount would have been fifteen millions, instead of what may now be considered necessary, and we would have had a law that was definite and certain, and not subject to be changed at will by the Commissioner or anyone else.

Let me show the gentleman how this law is to be executed. Under the general act there are already on the rolls 87,984 men who are drawing pensions at the rate of $6. Now, it can not be said that the law does not——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Make it ten minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I hope the gentleman will be able to get through in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] asks that his colleague be allowed five minutes additional. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. To increase those $6 pensions would require $1,425,000. To increase the pensions of those drawing $8 would require $1,660,000. To increase the pensions of those drawing $10, $374,000 would be required. So that if this order is executed, it will take $3,470,000 for those persons drawing pensions under the June act. For those drawing pensions under the general law it would take $1,177,412.

Now, what are we going to do? You shut off all legislation. How are you going to execute this law? Are you going to execute it by requiring an examination, or are you going to execute it, as was said by the gentleman from Indiana, by saying that there shall be no examination? If you are going to execute it without any examination, as ought to be done—for every soldier's honorable discharge from service ought to be his pension certificate—then you can not execute this law short of $15,000,000 a year.

I desire to some way make it definite if there is to be an examination; so now, but don't later use that as an excuse to hold the old soldier off.

Now, will my colleague permit another question? The $1,500,000 is to cover what period of time?

Mr. HEMENWAY. To cover the time up to July 1.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Two months and a half.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The law went into effect——

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. On the 13th of April last.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Of course, time will be required for applications to be filed under the order, and the Commissioner of Pensions estimates that one million and a half of dollars will cover the expense up to that date; but if it does not there is money on hand, as the Commissioner informs us, to cover the expense up to July 1.

He further states that if it is not possible for anyone to estimate accurately just what number of persons will be added to the roll by reason of the recent construction of the law, or by reason of aiding the soldiers in getting their evidence in promptly, then, when Congress meets next December, we can make such additional appropriation as may be necessary.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I am not talking about those not on the roll, but I am talking about those now on the roll. If there is to be an examination, then this order is a gold brick. If there is to be no examination and this order liberally construed, it will take near $4,000,000 to execute it as to them, to say nothing about the $10,000,000 and more money to execute the order for the men not now on the roll.

My amendment proposes an increase to $5,000,000. This is not enough, but would help some. If you expect the order to be liberally executed, we had better show some purpose of that kind by our actions.

If the gentleman puts it on that ground, that is a very different proposition; but when he puts it on the ground that it is required for the purpose of covering the laws passed in 1901 and 1902, and the law placing widows on the roll, then it brings me back to the other proposition. This calculation was made originally on so economical a scale that there must be an additional appropriation.

So far as I am concerned I am standing here now ready to say, "Let us make an appropriation large enough to meet the deficit. Let us not have it lie at the door of Congress that it was unwilling to furnish the money required." Then criticise the Commissioner of Pensions; his burden is already great enough.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will just call the attention of the gentleman to the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. He says:

I ought not to call that an estimate; in fact, it is a conjecture, and not an estimate.

And then the Commissioner states that there are ample funds on hand to take care of all claims that could be made until Congress convenes again; that after an experience of some months he can determine accurately——

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If there is a sufficient amount on hand, why require any appropriation? Besides, he says it is only a conjecture. I respond "Let's make it definite and not conjecture."

Mr. HEMENWAY. This is to July 1, and the bill the gentleman is discussing is for the year beginning July 1, 1904, and running until June 30, 1905.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. This $4,000,000 is to go until July 1, 1904.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. What provision is made for July, 1905?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I forget the amount of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Which bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905. That bill is still pending in the Senate, and we gave the amount estimated for.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. You gave $138,150,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That was the amount estimated for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then if $138,150,000 was required, were these items that make this $4,000,000 taken into account?

Mr. HEMENWAY. This $4,000,000, added to the appropriation already available, the Commissioner informs us, will be ample to pay all pensions up to July 1, and of course after July 1, this Congress is now making provision for that.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Of course, that is a matter that can be thrashed out afterwards; but if it is sufficient it will be because the order is given a narrow interpretation. But I submit, if you are going to meet the requirements by reason of the items stated by the Commissioner of Pensions, you ought not to make it $4,000,000, you ought to make it $5,000,000, and even more.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Commissioner seemed certain that $4,000,000 would be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen are to continue to get continual extensions we will be here all night.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Has unanimous consent been granted to the gentleman from Indiana? If not, I ask it.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will allow the gentleman from Indiana to proceed for five minutes longer.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If some limit is to be fixed, I have no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the other side is going to shut down on everybody else, why not find it out now?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw my objection; but I say to the gentleman from Indiana that he may not be able to keep his votes here all night.

Mr. HEMENWAY. They are not my votes, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio. Gentlemen here are Members of Congress, engaged in the performance of a public duty. They are at liberty to go whenever they feel disposed to do so.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this order provides—

And if all other legal requirements are properly met——

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest to the gentleman that he obtain leave to print and cut his remarks as short as possible. I am being criticised by gentlemen around me for not expediting the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I believe unanimous consent has been granted to the gentleman to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I believe the Pension Department ought to be placed on the same business plane that the Treasury Department, the Post-Office Department, or any other Department is. We have the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions of March 1, 1904, stating that he asks for two million and a half of dollars on account of pensions to those who were entitled to pensions for more than a year before his estimate was given. As a matter of fact, the law was passed in January, 1903.

He had all the facts before him on March 1, 1904—a year and three months afterwards. Why should he come in now for the purpose of bolstering up that state of things and ask for $4,000,000 for a law that had been in existence for three months? Then he stated these widows that were restored. Well, you all remember that that act was passed March 3, 1901. Now, if that act was passed March 3, 1901, why was not that included? Also those who have remarried.

Then he gives the increase of pension to limbless men. That passed in 1903, more than a year ago. Why was not that taken into account. It should have been and he should have asked for $150,000,000. Congress would have granted it——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I desire to ask about this proposition. What authority has the Commissioner of Pensions to say that 62 years of age is prima facie evidence of disability? In other words, what power has the Commissioner to declare what is evidence of disability? When he says 62 years of age is prima facie evidence of disability, since Congress has not so declared, is not his declaration that 62 years is such evidence legislation?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I think the Commissioner of Pensions has the right to apply the law at all times.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We will all grant that.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Let me answer your question.

In applying the law, as the Pension Bureau has for near forty years been considering men's disabilities, and if they have found a universal law, or so nearly so as to amount to universality, that when a man is 62 years of age he is half disabled, and they have found that when he reached 65 he is two-thirds disabled, and they find that when he is 68 he is five-sixths disabled, and they find that when he is 70 he is totally disabled.

That becomes a universal fact. There is no use, there is no necessity, there is no law that ought to require an old soldier to make that proof. [Loud applause.] But, on the other hand, with Congress in session, with the law formulated by the committee, ready to report—not only the committee ready to report but the House ready to act—I think it was exceedingly bad taste and much out of judgment for him to do that thing. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] It takes from Congress a privilege and makes only an estimate where Congress would have enacted a definite law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, now, will my friend allow me to ask him this question?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not legislation for the Commissioner to say that 62 years of age is evidence, and prima facie evidence, of disability?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I do not think so. He only applies a universal law, founded on long experience.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has the Commissioner any right to say what is prima facie evidence, and declare that this and that or any other thing is prima facie evidence, when Congress has not declared so by statute? Does not the Commissioner in doing this give the claimant a "right" he would not have without this declaration or order?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I think that Congress has the right, and it is the duty of Congress to do it; but, upon the other hand, if the Department finds universally that a man is in a certain condition at 62 years of age, and the Department has investigated his disabilities and finds them to be a certain thing, I do not see why we may not as well accept that as a universal thing. The objection, in my mind, to this order is that the Commissioner or his successor may apply another rule or set this aside. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this item and amendments thereto be concluded in twenty minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will not make the time as short as that. I want to occupy perhaps ten minutes of the time, and I know the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] will want ten minutes, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] wants five minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think ten minutes will be little enough for me to say what I want to say.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The minority side has had the greater portion of the time, and I propose to close debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But, then, there is this amendment, and there has been no time taken except by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I hope the gentleman will agree to closing the debate in that time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will extend it for ten minutes, as I want to have ten minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent that debate close in thirty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the request of the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto may be closed in thirty minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I object.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then I move that debate close in twenty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I think if the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the question first. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I was trying to get the attention of the Chair a moment ago. I think if the gentleman will ask that all debate be closed within a time which will give to this side twenty-five minutes, that there will be no objection, but that much time I know now to be desired on this side.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate be closed in thirty minutes, and that twenty-five minutes of that time be given to the minority side.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest that I desire to be heard for ten minutes on this proposition.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentlemen will have to decide that on their own side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that debate upon the paragraph and pending amendments be closed in thirty minutes, the minority to have twenty-five minutes of that time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. To that I object.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will change his amendment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, Mr. Chairman, at the request of many gentlemen on this side of the House I move that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendments thereto be closed in thirty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I trust the gentleman will arrange it so that we will have twenty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and the Chair will state again the motion of the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on the section and all amendments pending thereto be closed in thirty minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. To one amendment, the one I offered myself, the gentleman from Indiana opposed a point of order. What became of the point of order? Is it not to be considered, or is the amendment to be acted upon without consideration, or does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the point of order, of course, will be in the discretion of the Chair. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HAY and others. Division!

Accordingly the House divided; and there were—ayes 134, noes 16.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment a little while ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. BADGER. What time can I offer a further amendment to this? I understood they were to be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order now; it may be later.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the little speech made a moment ago by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] was beautiful and enthusiastic. It had a great deal of rush and élan in it, but under the light of cold analysis it is sad to confess that it will be discovered to be a mere ebulition, an unsubstantial fabric of oratorical pyrotechnics.

The gentleman says we have been trying to find issues. Why, issues have been growing up about us by Republican action and nonaction so thick and fast that I feel as if I was in a wilderness. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] asked the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] what difference there was "in principle" between fixing the age of 75 years and the age of 65 years as an age at which there should be presumption of disability.

I answer him that there is none. I answer him, moreover, that there is none between fixing 65 and 55, and none between that and fixing 45; none between that and fixing 35, and none between that and fixing 25. Now, Mr. Chairman, this very general order confesses that to be true. It says:

> Whereas old age is an infirmity, the average nature and extent of which the experience of the Pension Bureau, etc.

Confessing that it is a question of "average" only, confesses that there are exceptions. Now, the law of 1890 provides for a case of facts. Here is a presumption that a fact exists without proof, and if it is to be presumed, merely because an Executive order is issued, to be a fact—if it shall be presumed at 65, it could be presumed at 35, and the presumption would be in law of the same force and effect, whether it were in fact the truth or not.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, I have not the time. They have cut off debate. I am very sorry, but I must go on. If I had the time, I would be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to this: If it is true in the year of our Lord's grace 1904 that reaching the age of 62 means a certain fact of disability, and that reaching the age of 65 means a certain fact of total disability under the law of 1890, then that was equally a fact in 1892; so that it was true in 1892 that men of 62 then and that men of 65 then were totally disabled under this ruling.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman, if that be true, what are you going to do to recompense those who reached these respective ages in 1892, 1894, and 1896, and who have died and gone beyond the shadowy line before this so-called fact had been found by construction of the law of 1890 to be a fact? And what are you going to do with those who reached it then and who are still living? I want to ask the gentleman if this is not simply another illustration of recent Executive usurpation? Some of the usurpations are so gross that they are absolutely ridiculous.

Here, not long ago, an underling of this Government decided "officially," as the admiral in Pinafore said, that frog legs imported into this country are dressed poultry, and not very long ago another underling decided that a little piano hammer, a triangular piece of wood with a little piece of felt upon it, put on at the end to keep from hurting the wires when you are tapping the piano to see if it is in tune, was "a manufacture of wool," because somebody in this country had started to make these little triangular hammers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to get back to this special question, why not accept the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and remove all doubt from this transaction? If you want this service pension, make it a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for another five minutes. That five minutes seemed a mighty short one. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HEMENWAY. That five minutes to be taken out of the thirty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], when this amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] was offered, said that he would make the point of order on the ground that it is "a change of existing law," and he now says that he will make that point of order at the proper time.

Remember that the amendment is in the exact words of the Executive order, so that if the amendment is a change of existing law the Executive order is a change of existing law, and the Commissioner of Pensions has committed an impeachable offense, for undoubtedly amongst the high crimes and misdemeanors that were charged against Charles I, and for which he lost his head, all of them were based upon this idea of executive usurpation of legislative functions.

Then the very next moment the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] said that he is opposed to the gentleman's amendment—and why? Because it is merely a redeclaration of existing law, and therefore "unnecessary" and a game that is played "for political effect." Let the gentleman reconcile himself to himself. It is no wonder that he accused the gentleman from Alabama with misrepresenting him, when that gentleman merely mentioned the fact that he had made the point of order that it was a change of existing law. This very order carries within itself the answer to what the gentleman has said.

It says that "whereas by act of Congress" certain things took place with regard to Mexican pensions, and "whereas thirty-nine years have now elapsed"—what has all that got to do with a construction of law upon a statute book—and "whereas old age is an infirmity, the average nature and extent of which" the experience of the Pension Bureau has established with reasonable certainty, as I read a moment ago—why all these whereases of legislation if this executive decree is not legislation? But this last clause, above all others, is the one to which I wish to direct attention:

"This order shall take effect April 13, 1904, and shall not be deemed retroactive."

How can a construction of the law of 1890, if it is a proper construction, if it is not an executive decree, if it is not an executive usurpation, if it is not executive-made law—how can it "take effect" for the first time on April 13, 1904, and "not be deemed retroactive?"

How can a proper construction of a law passed in 1890 have decreed about it by an executive officer of this Government that it shall not date back to the time of its passage?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as I have remaining of the five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment to this bill, as follows:

After the word "Provided," in line 6, page 44, insert:

"All persons who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who now are or shall hereafter reach the age of 62 years, shall receive a pension thereafter on account of such service at the rate of $6 per month after attaining the age of 62 years; at the rate of $8 per month after attaining the age of 65 years; at the rate of $10 per month after attaining the age of 68 years, and at the rate of $12 per month after attaining the age of 70 years: Provided, however, That the pensions hereby granted shall not be in addition to the pensions allowed by existing law."

It is in substance the Executive order mentioned. My friends Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi and Mr. UNDERWOOD have both discussed it, perhaps better than I could do. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] made the gratuitous remark that this amendment was offered for party purposes. The gentleman from Indiana is mistaken. I do not desire to use any stronger language than that. He had no right to make such a remark. Nothing that has occurred in this debate justified it. There is nothing that ever occurred on my part or on the part of this side of the House that justified it. I desire to say to him now that if he be the gentleman I have assumed him to be he will withdraw that remark from this RECORD.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I had no desire to reflect on the intentions of the gentleman from Tennessee; my remark applied more to the course of the minority side generally than to any gentleman in particular.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. This is not the first time, nor the second, nor the third, nor will it be the last time that I shall conceive it to be my duty to stand upon this floor to give such aid as I can in the protection of the interests of the American soldier. [Applause.]

I offer this amendment because I believed—ah, sir, I know, as every other sensible lawyer knows—that there is no law upon the statute books this minute authorizing this Executive order or the order of the Bureau of Pensions, which is substantially embodied in the amendment I have presented. Having offered this amendment, I ask this House to pass it that there may be no doubt on the question, because I believe the order a wise and sensible one if enacted into law in pursuance of the Constitution by this sovereign body, Congress—the one power that has the right to make laws for these United States. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

And in all seriousness, sir, looking alone to the interests of this Republic and those who defended it in the days of its greatest peril, I call your attention to the declaration which no lawyer on this floor dare controvert—that there is no law this day for this order. Listen:

SEC. 4698 (U. S. Stats.). Except in cases of permanent specific disability, no increase of pension shall be allowed to commence prior to the date of the examining surgeon's certificate establishing the same, made under the pending claim for increase; and in this as well as in all other cases the certificate of an examining surgeon or a board of examining surgeons shall be submitted for approval to the Commissioner of Pensions.

What is the meaning of that section? It means that the facts must be determined by a medical board before the pension is granted. It means that no rating can be made by the Department except upon an examination by the board.

Where is the statute that provides for senility at 62 years of age, or at 65, or at 70? How do you get around the mandates of the positive statute requiring that a rating as to disability be made on the certificate of surgeons? Why not say that at the age of 75 or 85 or 90 the pension shall be $20 or $30 or $40?

Sir, this is an arbitrary assumption on the part of the executive department. It is a usurpation of the power of this House. It is legislation. Why? Because the statute requires a fact to be established—a substantive fact—before a pension is granted. Although you may assume, yet you have no right to do so, that disability comes with senility at a specified age, yet the degree of disability and the rating to which the pensioner is entitled are substantive facts to be established by proof. How can that proof be obtained? Only under the rules of law and evidence. What right have we to assume a fact to exist that the law says shall be proven before judges who are to pass upon that fact?

Gentlemen talk of inferences of law. You may speak also of inferences from fact, but no tribunal has ever yet attempted to predicate a judgment upon an assumption of fact when the law required it to be established before that judgment could be entered.

You tell me, sir, that I have no interest in this question, with 8,000 Federal soldiers in my district who bore arms under conditions that testified to courage on their part greater perhaps than that shown anywhere else in this nation. [Loud applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask that the gentleman be granted five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Tennessee be permitted to continue five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will not object if it comes out of the time on that side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Are they not interested, gentlemen? Pensions have been granted all over this Union to soldiers of the Federal Army. You have neglected the soldier of the Federal Army from the South, who turned his face upon his native land, upon his home and his fireside, to cross over the mountains and stand under the Stars and Stripes and battle for this great Union. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The sons of the Confederates to-day in Tennessee recognize the courage and the splendid manhood of that magnificent soldiery, and representing that people in this House and elsewhere they will demand that you shall make certain the rights of these people, and not leave them to the uncertainties of Executive orders. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Do you want to do that which is right? Do you want to do justice to these people who have not yet in hundreds of instances received the pensions that are due them, because, forsooth, they happen to live south of Mason and Dixon's line and have not the influence in the Republican party to obtain the rights to which they are entitled under the laws and Constitution of their country? If you do, then enact into law this order that you call an "Executive order," an order in itself illegal and unjustifiable when emanating from the Executive, but an order that still would be wise and judicious emanating from the lawmaking power. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Make certain these doubts: Let the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] withdraw his point of order and let this section pass. If this be subject to the point of order because it is new law, then I beg you not to make the point of order, in the interest of the American soldier. If you say that it is the law now, I defy you or any other living man to lay your hand upon the statute or any honest and intelligent man to give a construction under the rules of law that will justify that interpretation.

If you say that the Commissioner has the right to make such regulation, again I ask you by what authority can the American Congress delegate to subordinates of this Government the power to legislate? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The people have a right to be protected; the soldier has a right to be protected. You occupy a very peculiar position. I will not say, because it is not for me to judge, that this order was made for political purposes and effect. I care not what it was made for. If you will make it effectual, if you will make it beneficial, if you will make it constitutional and lawful, enact it into law under this amendment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit some remarks upon the bill now pending and the amendments offered thereto, and in order that we may have clearly before the House the exact question which has excited so much opposition from the Democratic side of this House to-day I will read that part of the general deficiency appropriation bill relating to pensions. It is as follows:

For army and navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $4,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

Two million five hundred thousand dollars of this appropriation has become necessary, as usually happens at the end of a Congress, owing to unexpected contingencies which have arisen since the passage of the general pension bill, which appropriated $138,000,000 for this purpose. The other $1,500,000, because of the recent order No. 78, issued March 15, 1904, by the Commissioner of Pensions, under which it is presumed that when a soldier arrives at the age of 62 years he is one-half disabled and without further proof entitled to $6 per month; at 65 years to $8 per month; at 68 years to $10 per month, and at 70 years to $12 per month, as for total disability. This very just and beneficial order increases the amount to be paid for pensions principally because it hastens the allowance of the claims. It is not necessary under this order for a soldier to prove his disabilities, but simply to prove his age, and thus this appropriation is necessary at this time, because it is thought that a great many soldiers who do not now receive the above-named sums can speedily obtain relief by simply proving age.

To be sure, the soldier can continue to prove his disabilities and obtain more of a pension than his age would entitle him to under this order, if he so desires. It is estimated that this order will save to the Government and the soldiers $500,000 per year in the way of examinations. It will save more than this sum to the soldiers themselves, who will not be obliged to spend time and money and much effort to go to take their examinations. It is a matter of vital importance to the soldiers, who are, many of them, very poor, to save every single expense in the way of railroad fare and hotel bills, as well as the fatigue and exertion incident to going sometimes long distances for examination. I am indeed sorry to see the solid Democratic opposition to this pension order and appropriation. It is simply a wise holding on the part of our Government and puts into force the long experience of the Pension Office, which shows conclusively that, on the average, soldiers who have arrived at the age of 62 years are one-half disabled, at 65 years are two-thirds disabled, and at the age of 70 years totally disabled.

If the soldier should, however, allege other disabilities and take an examination and that examination should show that he was not disabled in the proportion indicated by this order, the evidence of his real disabilities would be followed and he might not get the amount of pension which the order would have given him had he not taken the examination.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] offers an amendment striking out $4,000,000 and inserting $2,500,000, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] offers an amendment as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any claimant for pension under order No. 78, issued March 15, 1904, by E. F. Ware, Commissioner of Pensions, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

These proposed amendments simply show hostility to the increase of pensions. The gentlemen may argue that they are offering these amendments simply for the purpose of preventing violation of law, but behind it all the real purpose is to serve the interests of their constituents, who are opposed to the whole pension system, and to create in the minds of the southern people the impression that the Government of the United States is doing a very wrong thing in protecting and caring for the soldiers of the Union.

The fact is there should be passed a general pension bill giving to soldiers of the civil war who served ninety days $12 per month without regard to disabilities. Such a bill I introduced at this session of Congress. Three or four months of study of the conditions which exist in this Congress, sent from all parts of the United States, soon convinces a man from the great West, where so many thousands of soldiers live, that there is great hostility to a service-pension bill and that no such universal measure would be likely to pass both branches of Congress. And the spirit which has been shown on the floor of this House to-day further convinces me that, under one specious pretext or another, there is a determination here to suppress general pension legislation. I believe that in all the States of the West and Middle West and in most of the States of the East there is a widespread and general sentiment in favor of a further extension of pension legislation and a desire to give to the soldiers of the Republic a further compensation for the hardships and dangerous service which they endured in the great war which saved the nation.

These soldiers are old; most of them are very poor. Many of them suffered in prisons and on the long and weary marches. Diseases were contracted which it is now difficult or impossible to trace to the service, but which, nevertheless, had their origin in the exposure of camp and field, from the assaults of rain and snow, from privation and deprivation, from bullets and from bayonets, and all the countless trials and hazards that make the woeful tale of war. For the defense of the nation they offered all they had to give. Home and happiness and life itself were freely given that a nation might be saved and men made free. And now, when forty years have passed, and age, disease, and poverty are slaying more than did the bullets in the time of strife, we should not, must not, refuse what little comfort we can lend to their declining years.

I know from what I have seen and heard upon this floor to-day that the Republicans of this House will unanimously vote down the amendments proposed by the gentlemen from Alabama and Georgia, and I know that they will also pass this appropriation in spite of Democratic opposition, and yet further relieve the present necessities of this magnificent soldiery. They are the pride of history. If the world knows to-day that this nation is to be feared, honored, and respected, it is because a million soldiers under Sherman and Sheridan and Grant won a victory for the right over an equally valiant and mighty host on southern battlefields.

England has embalmed in song and story the heroic deeds of her soldiery at Waterloo, at the Vale of Inkermann, and the historic charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava. France has recorded with enthusiastic admiration the inspiring history of her regiments at the battle of the Pyramids, at Ulm, at Austerlitz, on the steppes of Russia, and in the last desperate charge when the Old Guard died, but would not yield, surrounded by Wellington's Men of Iron, when Napoleon's star went down. Germany has handed down the history of Frederick the Great and his disciplined men, who built up the German Empire, broadened and expanded and made forever strong by the valiant hosts of Von Moltke and Bismarck. All men are touched to tears by the pathetic story of William the Silent, who desperately fought the hosts of Spain under the remorseless Duke of Alva and, in the final bitterness of despair, cut the dikes and let the North Sea in to sweep the Spanish from the land.

Some of these armies fought for vulgar glory, for plunder, and for spoils; some of them fought for native land and the God-given rights of the free. It was left for a later day and in a newer world for the mightiest host that ever assembled under the flag of war to fight for the liberty of an alien race and the emancipation of the slave. In the greatest battles known to history—at Shiloh; at Vicksburg; at Chickamauga; at Missionary Ridge; at Gettysburg, where remained at the end of the desperate contest 50,000 wounded and dead; in the gloomy Wilderness, where 20,000 Union men died amidst thickets and entangling vines; at Cold Harbor, where perished in twenty minutes more soldiers than all who fell in the Spanish-American war; at Petersburg and Richmond and countless other battlefields—the soldiers of the Republic, of whom we talk to-day, bared their breasts to a storm of shot and shell unequaled in all the annals of war, and it is for the cause of them I plead, who stand in the sunset of life's declining day, asking of the mightiest nation on the face of the earth justice—simple justice.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the Republican party in Congress has forgotten the old soldiers of the war from 1861 to 1865. They have forsaken him in this Congress. They have neglected his appeals and spurned his petitions.

Early in this session Republican Members, fresh from their districts and soldier constituents, rushed to introduce more than a score of general pension bills. None have been considered. They are now rushing to adjourn Congress to get away from the consideration of them.

Is this the measure of your patriotism?

Across Pennsylvania avenue at the close of the war, as the soldiers were marching through, was a banner inscribed "The only debt the nation can never pay is the debt she owes her soldiers."

Let that be the sentiment now. Banish the false pretense and hypocrisy that rushed to introduce bills, never to be passed, and that rushes to adjourn Congress so you need not pass them.

The iron rule could not prevent you from introducing them, but you have a majority to get consideration for them. Instead of faltering to make steady to do your duty, you are running away.

Every year the soldiers' steps are growing more tottering. Every year Congress is growing colder.

Here you are with the power of the House, urged by the soldiers to pass a service-pension bill.

The Grand Army of the Republic at San Francisco, in August, 1903, passed this resolution unanimously:

That the committee on pensions to be appointed for the ensuing year be, and they hereby are, directed to present to Congress for passage a bill which, while not disturbing the beneficent provisions of existing laws, shall provide that every survivor of the war of 1861–1865 who served for a period of ninety days and who was honorably discharged and has passed the age of 62 years shall be pensioned at the rate of $12 a month, and that a pension of the same amount be paid to the worthy widow of such soldier when deceased was married to such soldier prior to the 27th day of June, 1890.

The committee met in Washington. They drafted a bill. It was early introduced in the Senate and House.

This is one of the bills:

A bill to pension all soldiers and sailors who served in the military or naval service of the United States at least ninety days in the war of the rebellion, and who were honorably discharged therefrom, at the rate of $12 per month, and also placing upon the pension roll of the United States the widows of such soldiers and sailors who were married prior to June 27, 1890.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act, all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who served at least ninety days in the military or naval service of the United States during the war of the rebellion shall be entitled to receive a pension of $12 per month, and that the army record of such soldiers or sailors shall be the only voucher necessary to entitle him to such pension. This act shall not be construed as an additional pension to any soldier or sailor now in receipt of a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

SEC. 2. That the widow of such soldier or sailor who was married prior to June 27, 1890, and who are without other means of support than their daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, shall be entitled to receive a pension at $12 per month.

From that time they slept and are now sleeping. The committee saw the President. The history is written. Congress has orders from omnipotent power to adjourn, and to not stand on the order. "By their fruit ye shall know them."

The soldiers ask for this legislation by petitions by the thousands and by letters. They tell you of the injustice of this order 78, and what is your answer? You run the word along the line to adjourn to avoid action, to avoid petitions and entreaties. You give them a stone. Such is your generosity to them; such is the gratitude of a Republican Congress.

If it were fortifications in some distant land, how eloquent you would be on "ingratitude," on "lack of patriotism," for the soldier, but you slink away like cowards from doing your duty to the Union soldier, and why? Because, forsooth, the money power as it has been said, "you know is against pension legislation."

The fates will follow you. The gods will not smile upon you for thus writing your ingratitude to those who are growing old and tottering and who for that reason should be the objects of our special solicitude and care.

The soldiers' disappointments in late years have been multiplying.

They were disappointed years ago, when Jacob F. Raub, acting under orders of Commissioner of Pensions H. Clay Evans, who, also acting under orders, started to cut ratings and discard the home pension boards. They were disappointed by the retention of Pension Commissioner H. Clay Evans.

Their hopes were raised just before each election by politically designed circulated reports of his intended resignation. He was found in the confidence of the Administration and out of the confidence of the soldier firmer than ever just after each election. This political farce of attempted deception of the old soldier continued till the Administration promoted Pension Commissioner H. Clay Evans to a splendid foreign mission. The Commissioner getting his orders from higher authority, and the current at no time rising above its source, the policies of the former Commissioner, now continued, are not more satisfactory, and this Congress, subservient to the same line of policy, which forces it to "run away" from its duty, will not inspire for it a confidence in the men who bore the brunt of battle. They did not "run away" or move to adjourn till their duties and obligations were answered.

The disappointments of the soldiers resulting from your unfulfilled promises are many, but not so many that they have forgotten. Don't entertain in your ardent hope that the old soldier will forget. They may forget the studied snub of General Miles, the promotion of General Wood over soldiers more deserving and of longer and better service. These they may not remember; but do not felicitate yourself that they will forget a snub this Congress gives to every rank-and-file soldier by adjourning and running away from their service-pension bill.

The Union soldiers have grown old and weary, but they can still remember. Remember the days they suffered, "days of toil and nights of waking," the forced march, the hunger and thirst, the wounding and bleeding, the emaciation in hospital and prison. Yes, they can remember all these incidents of the ghoulish ravages of hellish war, with its tens of thousands of dead and wounded victims. They can remember this and more. They can remember your broken promises.

Have you Republicans who are running away from your duty, hastening to adjourn to avoid passing the service-pension bill, have you forgotten the labors, the losses, and the sacrifices—the disease, disability, and death they faced—of these untold thousands who fought and fell and died?

Have you forgotten from Bull Run to Appomattox? Have you forgotten Chickamauga, Shiloh, the Wilderness, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, the siege of Richmond, and scores of other great conflicts? Do you still remember the battle of Cold Harbor, where, in twenty minutes, 10,000 soldiers were swept from earth? If so, why do you run away now, why move an adjournment till you perform your duty in kind?

Do you say that you have been liberal in appropriations? This is the act of all the Members. All Members of Congress of all political parties have for years unanimously, without a dissent, voted these appropriations for pensions, and will continue to do so. This is and has been the generous act of the whole Congress.

We charge you Republicans in control of the House of Representatives and of the Congress with a running away from your duty to the soldier, a breaking of your pledges, an utter neglect of the defenders of the Union.

This is proven by the frantic effort you are making every day to adjourn Congress, to shirk your responsibility and get away from the petitions and entreaties of the Union soldiers. You resort to a deception to recoup your lost prestige. You did the same thing last Congress. My colleague last Congress favored actively a bill, and in season and out labored with the committee having it in charge and afterwards for consideration in the House, and finally, when there was but thirteen hours yet remaining of the life of that Congress, and with the necessity for the bill passing both Houses in that time, and rush of business, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who had assisted my Indiana colleague [Mr. ZENOR] with the measure, asked for and got consideration for it.

It was a soldier measure asked for by the national encampment, Grand Army of the Republic. It had lain unacted upon; spurned by a Republican Congress, refused consideration, and then when it was dead, when the life of that civil-service soldier relief bill had been crushed out of it by the crushing force of all of two years' session of Congress, when only thirteen hours remained of the session, it was gently taken up by the gentleman from Ohio and tenderly passed through the House in its closing hours, when every man knew it was a subterfuge and a trick of the part of the Republicans and that a Republican Senate would never consider it.

I do not complain of General GROSVENOR; he did the best he could. His party would not consider it in time to give it a chance of passage in that Congress, and potent as he was as a cog in the Republican machinery of the House, a member of the Rules Committee, with all his effort and power, he labored all that Congress to pass it; but the Republican party on this floor would not yield even to his entreaties till the last day of the Congress had come, and it was known that it would not pass the Senate. Here is that bill:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1754. Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness, and officers and enlisted men who served in the armies or navies of the United States between April 12, 1861, and August 25, 1865, being honorably discharged therefrom, shall be preferred for appointment to and retention in civil offices and employments: Provided, They are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices or employments."

When the matter now before the House was under discussion the other day a Republican Member and a soldier interrupted with some show of feeling and inquired the attitude of a Member who was speaking on the subject of a service-pension bill.

Opposed by the Republicans on the floor and prevented by them from expressing his own vote on the subject of a service pension, he must, as we all must, restrain ourselves in the House. Under the iron rule of the Republican House we are powerless to vote on pension legislation except by its sweet will. When the friends of the soldiers here say, Will you give us a chance to vote on service-pension legislation? the answer comes back, Let us hurry and get away and avoid it.

Thus are the friends of the soldiers and thus are the soldiers bound hand and foot by a Republican Congress.

We have a good majority here to pass the Grand Army of the Republic bill. We only want it considered. Aye; no one questioned the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] while he was on the floor as to his attitude on a service-pension law. His State furnished thousands of brave men to both sides in that great conflict of the civil war. Had anyone questioned him on the floor he would have said, Confederate soldier as he was, brave man as he is—and I say it for him now—he will vote for the service-pension bill, and yet you deny us consideration.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan rose and was recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I have only a very limited time and prefer not to yield. I wish to correct an impression or two. I should like to make clear the construction given by Commissioner Lochren of the very law you gentlemen are attacking. On May 7, 1895, Commissioner Lochren ruled—

That no medical examination be required in cases where the claimant—

Not pensioner, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] sought to impress upon the House, but where the claimant—is granted the maximum rating on the ground that he is 75 years of age or over.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will my colleague on the committee allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not now; I regret I can not yield to the gentleman. That is simply the order; I have quoted it verbatim. Now, gentlemen, that is not a pensioner, but a claimant. Why this sudden spasm of virtue that denounces a violation of a law by one commissioner, when you have lived for years under a similar ruling without one protest. The gentleman from Mississippi, the leader of the minority, says that there is no difference in principle involved, does he not?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes. Do you want to know why I did not say anything about it? It was because I did not know anything about it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not one Democrat has ever lifted his voice in protest against the construction put upon that act of 1890 by Commissioner Lochren, but now they seem filled with indignation because Commissioner Ware applies the same principle, only on a larger scale.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not now, I want to say to the gentleman; I have not time.

Mr. CLAYTON. You ask us questions and then refuse to let us answer you. Any school boy can answer them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I quote now from one of the gentlemen on that side, Mr. BENTON of Missouri, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, who, in the course of the debate upon the pending measure, said:

The Republicans pretend to be the friends of the old Federal soldiers; they pose as their special guardians.

I want to say to you, gentlemen, that the Republican party does pretend to be the friend of the Federal soldier. [Applause on the Republican side.] And it not only pretends but it has been and is at this time, and you now take advantage of a mere technicality to appear to be what forty years of history show you have not been. [Applause on the Republican side]. You can not point, gentlemen on that side, to one single law in the statute books of the United States that your party has initiated or enacted in favor of pensions to the Union soldiers from 1861 to this hour. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit just one question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not now. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] My time is too limited.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I could put the question and you could answer it in a moment.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am simply stating the facts.

Mr. CLAYTON. You do not want it answered?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not only that, but your uniform course when pension legislation has been before the House has been to object, and the record shows that you have voted against every bill here presented having for its object more liberal pensions for the men who fought to preserve the life of the nation. It was passed in spite of you. If there is any one thing more definitely determined than another, it is that the party that conducted that great war to a successful issue has stood by the men who answered the summons of Lincoln to defend the flag. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The widows and the orphans of those who fell in battle and who died of disease and in prison have been cared for, not by the Democratic party, but in spite of them and their opposition. [Applause on the Republican side.] As well might the leopard undertake to change his spots as for the Democratic party to change its record for the last forty-three years upon the subject of pensions to Union soldiers. You know what I am saying is true, every one of you know it. It is the recorded history of your party, and you can not deny it if you would.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Suppose that is all true, does that in any way prove the legality of this order?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am answering a gentleman who said that we Republicans "pretend to be the friends of the old soldier."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That has nothing to do with the legality of this order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I want to point out this, so as to show when you come to this question that so far as the question of pensions is concerned your friendship for the old Union soldier is a hollow pretense with the most of you, and you know it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will yield to a question.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Do not take all my time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that twenty minutes of this time has been used by the other side, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may be allowed three minutes additional time, to be taken out of the thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may be permitted to proceed for three minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before that request is put to the committee, I want to remind the gentleman from Indiana that before I voted with him on that motion to close debate, that it was agreed by him that twenty-five of the thirty minutes should come to those whom I mentioned by name, and among those I mentioned by name was the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], who wanted five minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman is absolutely mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may be allowed to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. HEMENWAY. When I asked to close debate in thirty minutes and you should have twenty-five, somebody on your side refused and objected and forced me to make the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. When the gentleman asked to close debate in twenty minutes and I told him that we wanted twenty-five minutes on this side, I understood that I was to be given that when it was agreed that there should be debate for thirty minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PAYNE. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and gentlemen will resume their seats. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Michigan be permitted to proceed for three minutes?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I object, unless I can have have three minutes myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I desire to make another request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HEMENWAY. We have been discussing this proposition. I have got about three minutes of time, and I will use it up if I can get a chance. The Democratic party and the Republican party and every Member of Congress since the Lochren order was made and since the order was made by Evans have been ratifying these orders every session of Congress by voting to pay the appropriations for pensions, and we have not heard any objection to these orders at all.

There is no man in this House who can say——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not yield, and the gentleman can not stop me—that, in voting for these bills, knowing that these bills are being passed to appropriate money for the payment of pensions, but knew that every time he voted for an appropriation bill carrying appropriations to pay pensions he ratified the order of Lochren which first fixed the age of 75 years for total disability, and 65 later should be one-half disability, when by construction of the evidence it was known that the soldier was entitled to this, yet these gentlemen on the other side of the House always raise their voices and try to disturb, and notwithstanding the fact we will pass this bill which makes the construction of the law fair, which allows the old soldier to have his pension without being compelled to prove facts that have been established by a long line of experience in the Pension Office.

All this talk of amendment you gentlemen seek to get in will not change our purpose in the slightest. We are going to vote this bill through; we are going to give this fair construction of the law here which the Commissioner had the right to make. It is no change of existing law; it is simply a rule of construction of evidence that they had a right to make after long experience.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS].

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. You say there will not be any examination. I would like to ask you if it is your understanding of this order that the old soldier has to be examined—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Commissioner of Pensions said the passage of this appropriation bill, under a fair construction, will save $500,000 a year in the boards of examining surgeons.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman agree, as a proper construction, that there will be no examinations?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, there will be a great reduction in examinations.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a question of unanimous consent.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairmau, I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a request for unanimous consent is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will state his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to submit a request that time be extended for ten minutes, five minutes of it to be given to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, we might just as well be courteous. Now, Mr. Chairman, in explanation of that I want to state——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. There are three minutes left for debate, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is recognized.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this House hears my voice often enough to be very tired of it. The gentleman from Indiana, the distinguished chairman of this committee, got up here and stated that my colleague [Mr. MOON] was playing politics. He retracted as to Mr. MOON, but he states that we were all playing politics.

Now, here is the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY], who is an able man and an able lawyer, who has been at the head of that committee, I believe, five years, and who, I submit, knows as much about the pension law and its interpretation as any man in the United States, and who knows as well what existing law is as the Commissioner of Pensions, if not a great deal better, and yet that distinguished gentleman introduced a bill in this House, which was referred to his own committee, to enact a law in terms exactly what this order is. Now, was he playing politics? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, I will yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I want to say this, that in the first place there is not a statute under the stars that requires an examination of a pensioner for original pension under the act of June 27, 1890, and secondly I want to say that I have believed for years that that construction should be put on the law by the Commissioner or by the Secretary and this said to them, "If you don't put it there we will try and compel you to put it there." [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, if one Commissioner could make it—— [Loud applause on the Republican side.] Why, gentlemen, are you going to take the three minutes away from me? Mr. Chairman, I denounce it as a discourtesy after I have yielded to the gentleman out of my time, to have the Members on the other side of the House continue to applaud and thus rob me of what time I have. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I applaud the knowledge of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] as well as you do, and I am basing my statement upon his knowledge of the law.

Now, if I have a title to a tract of land and have been deprived of it for five years and after bringing suit recover it, I am entitled to arrears of five years' rent, if I am entitled to the land; and I say that every soldier under this order who arrives at the age of 62 since the enactment of the law of 1890 is just as much entitled to a pension as one who hereafter arrives at the age of 62, and there is no way under heaven to deprive him of it, and this retroactive clause in this order is null and void and of no effect. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

If the law since 1890 has been what this Executive order now declares it is and has been, then by false construction by an executive officer these soldiers entitled to pension by it have been denied justice and what is their legal rights. Now will Congress ratify the wrong done them by an illegal and improper construction of a subordinate officer? I say in justice to the soldiers who have been thus denied what was lawfully due them that we must pay them all arrears. They are as much entitled to that as to anything that may be due them by the United States.

It has long since been held that a pension under the law is a vested right. Then how can this executive order by so declaring deprive a soldier of what is justly due him, but has been wrongfully withheld by misinterpretation? But the truth is this order is nothing more nor less than executive legislation, nothing less than usurpation. If this has been the law, why did you, Mr. SULLOWAY, introduce your bill? You say to make them put this construction on the law, as though two laws were more binding than one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] should be enacted into law, could any subsequent Commissioner change it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no answer to that inquiry. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report, first, the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, and then the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again reported the amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MIERS of Indiana) there were—ayes 36, noes 132.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the intent of which is to perfect the paragraph, have precedence over an amendment to strike out a part of the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not have priority over the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, which is simply an amendment to strike out one figure and insert another. That is an amendment which is intended to perfect the paragraph. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were—ayes 17, noes 125.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I suppose the question comes up on the amendment to which I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending which was offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offered that amendment as an amendment to the one offered by the gentleman from Alabama. I could not hear what disposition the Chair made of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand it. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia is entirely independent of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama and has no connection with it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Has the Chair declared the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama as lost?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been rejected.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then I withdraw the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia is withdrawn. The amendment now offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] will be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will be read by the Clerk.

After the word "provided," in line 6, page 44, insert:

"All persons who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who now are or shall hereafter reach the age of 62 years, shall receive a pension thereafter on account of such service at the rate of $6 per month after attaining the age of 62 years, at the rate of $8 per month after attaining the age of 65 years, at the rate of $10 per month after attaining the age of 68 years, and at the rate of $12 per month after attaining the age of 70 years: Provided, however, that the pensions hereby granted shall not be in addition to the pensions allowed by existing law."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, upon that amendment I make the point of order that it is not germane and that it changes existing law. On this point I wish to be heard.

In the first place, I simply call the attention of the Chair—I know the Chair must be familiar with it—to section 2 of the act of June 27, 1890. It will be argued by some gentlemen that this is enacting into law the order made by the Commissioner of Pensions.

In answer to that I want to put into my remarks, alongside of the amendment, that order of the Commissioner. I believe this is all I have to offer at this time, simply calling the attention of the Chair to the law, to the fact that the amendment is not germane, and to the order of the Commissioner.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If the present Commissioner has the power to make an order of this kind, can not any subsequent Commissioner change it?

Mr. HEMENWAY. For information upon those questions I refer the gentleman for information, first, to the order of Mr. Lochren, former Commissioner; next to the order of Mr. Evans, former Commissioner; next to the order of Mr. Ware, the present Commissioner, and, knowing that the gentleman is an accomplished lawyer, I leave him to put his own construction upon those orders and determine whether or not any succeeding Commissioner may change them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. One more question, if the gentleman pleases. Would not the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] if adopted put it beyond the power of any Commissioner to adopt some unfavorable rule in the future?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman may himself construe the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself for just a moment to the first objection made by the gentleman from Indiana to this amendment. He says that the amendment is not germane. Well, that expression, "not germane," has grown to be a familiar expression in this House; and so many interpretations have been given to it that it is hard to tell exactly what a man means when he says that a proposition is "not germane."

But the amendment certainly relates to the same subject as the pending paragraph of the bill. It applies to the same appropriation. The pending paragraph is under the head of "Pensions." It makes provision for the distribution of the money appropriated by this House for the payment of pensions in accordance with the order made by the Department, which we say is void, but which we desire to perfect by making it lawful by legislating to the same effect in this House.

I concede, Mr. Chairman, that if the point of order were made that this is new law it would have to be sustained. There is no statute providing for an enactment of this kind. There is no law of this kind on the statute books now. That is unquestionably true; but if this amendment be ruled out on the ground that it is new law, then you must legitimately rule out the appropriation to meet the Executive order, because this amendment is a substantial copy of that Executive order. If this be new law which Congress can not enact on an appropriation bill, then how can the Commissioner of Pensions interpose a new law and enact it, and then demand an appropriation of $1,500,000 from this House to enforce it?

Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to conceal on this question. If this is new law, the point of order is well taken, and your President stands convicted of an act that ought to impeach him not only under the Constitution, but before all honorable men in this country for his usurpation of legislative power. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is new law; it does change existing law; it changes it in behalf of the soldiers of the United States. And I ask the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his point of order, that we may legislate effectually in the interest of the Federal soldier.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will ask the gentleman whether his amendment would add one dollar to the pensions that the soldiers are to receive under the order issued by Commissioner Ware?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It would add legality to that which is now illegal, and constitutionality to that which is unconstitutional.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But I say to the gentleman that the order is absolutely legal; it has been ratified over and over again in the passage of appropriation bills in this House; and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I know it is not so. This amendment would make that certain which is now uncertain, to say the least of it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I insist, if the gentleman will permit, that it is not uncertain.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman lay his finger upon the law that makes it certain, then?

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will permit, Mr. Commissioner Lochren passed a similar order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Suppose Mr. Lochren did usurp the power of Congress. What right has your Commissioner to do it?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Evans passed a similar order. We have by many acts of Congress, in passing pension appropriation bills, ratified both these orders.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman is mistaken. Mr. Chairman, departing for a moment from the main issue, if the gentleman says, and he now so says, that it does not change existing law, then we have a right to reenact it, to make it certain, if there be doubt about it. Why object, if it does not change existing law? Certainly it is not subject to the point of order, if it but reaffirms and makes certain a statute that you say already exists.

But, sir, it does not exist. He had no right to make an order that fixes 62 years, or 65 years, or 70 years as a point of senility that entitles a pensioner to a certain rate. If he had a right to do that, he had a right to fix a higher number of years or a higher amount, a lower number of years or a less amount, and it would be subject to the will of the Pension Commissioner. Do not attempt to override the Constitution of your country because your party has made a mistake. It would be more honorable for you as Representatives to say that a mistake was made, and that you will correct it by legislation, than to attempt to stand by a fraud, intended possibly for political purposes, thereby overriding the Constitution and your oaths of office as Members of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. Rule! Rule!

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I just want to say, before the Chair rules, that this amendment might have the effect of cutting down pensions that are already allowed. I think there is no question about it.

Several MEMBERS. Rule! Rule!

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. There is no question that the amendment is subject to the point of order. The gentleman who proposes the amendment confesses that fact. It is clearly new legislation. It is not of the same character as the order recently promulgated by the Commissioner of Pensions and popularly known as order No. 78. That order undertakes to prescribe a rule of presumptions in the decision of pension cases. It provides that a certain age shall be regarded as prima facie evidence of a certain degree of disability; but that presumption is subject to rebuttal. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] fixes an absolute right to certain rates of pension at certain ages without regard to the extent of disability. So it is clearly new legislation, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If I may make a parliamentary inquiry, in what respect does the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] differ from the order of the Commissioner of Pensions?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has endeavored to state it. Order No. 78 simply makes a certain age prima facie evidence of a certain degree of disability. It does not fix it absolutely.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. According to my recollection, this is an exact copy of that order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no; not at all. Mr. Chairman, on page 57 there is one item which we passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment, and I wish to withdraw that amendment and to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], chairman of Committee the on Elections No. 2, to offer an amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois will be withdrawn. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amend by adding between lines 3 and 4, on page 57, the following new paragraph:

To William Lorimer, $2,000.

Also the following additional paragraph:

To James J. Butler, $2,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I want to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman is chairman of the Committee on Elections that had these cases in charge, I believe?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And the claims have been properly filed and audited, and allowed by that committee?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is correct, Mr. Chairman. These bills for contested-election expenses came to the Elections Committee too late to be certified to the Committee on Appropriations before it had reported this general deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw the point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman if these accounts have been authorized by the committee?

Mr. OLMSTED. The committee has authorized me to offer this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman, Was that case pending in this Congress?

Mr. OLMSTED. These are cases pending in this Congress. The other parties to these contests have their expenses already provided for in the bill. In the case of Durborrow against Lorimer, Mr. Durborrow's expense is already allowed in this bill; and in the case of Reynolds against Butler, Mr. Reynolds's expenses are also provided for.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I asked the question because I had a case for election expenses in a previous Congress, but these, as I understand, are cases pending in this Congress.

Mr. OLMSTED. These are pending in this Congress.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. My amendment was ruled out because the case was pending in a previous Congress.

Mr. OLMSTED. These are pending in this Congress. They involve seats in the Fifty-eighth Congress.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman, because they are not subject to it, the statute having been complied with by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. May I ask whether it is necessary to increase the total?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am going to ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be permitted to correct all totals where amendments have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to correct the totals where amendments have been made. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRUMPACKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15054, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the question will be taken on the amendments in gross.

A separate vote was not demanded.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I rose to move, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to incorporate the order No. 78, made by Commissioner Ware, in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recognized for that purpose by the Chair.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill; and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman is too late with his motion to recommit the bill when the other motion is pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee was not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the Speaker of this House can not refuse to recognize a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker of this House did refuse to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee to make that motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question of recognition is not subject to appeal. If gentlemen will suspend for a moment, the Chair will make it perfectly plain. The gentleman from New York had requested of the Chair to recognize him to make a motion to recommit, and was on his feet for that purpose. The gentleman came to the Chair, as is usual in such cases, and asked for recognition, as other gentlemen have heretofore done on the minority side touching matters of this kind, and as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] himself came. The Chair informed the gentleman from New York that he would be recognized.

Therefore, with the gentleman from New York on his feet, addressing the Chair, and the gentleman from Tennessee also strenuously addressing the Chair, the Chair took occasion not to recognize the gentleman, but asked the gentleman for what purpose he rose. The gentleman proceeded to inform the Chair, and the Chair declined to recognize the gentleman for that purpose and recognized the gentleman from New York, who was upon his feet.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Now, pending the motion, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rose for the purpose of making a motion to recommit in good faith with instructions to incorporate the executive order made by Mr. Ware. The gentleman from New York may have been on the floor, but he had not been recognized in the open House by the Speaker.

Now, my inquiry is this: If the Speaker, having recognized a gentleman on one side of the House, whether that purpose had been disclosed to the Speaker or not for which he rose, after having recognized him and asked him for what purpose he rose, that gentleman having stated that it was for a legitimate parliamentary purpose, then is it right for the Speaker to turn from him and say he recognizes another gentleman who had not arisen until after he had stated his purpose?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in reply to the parliamentary inquiry, states that, as is usual in such cases even before the committee rises, Members are in the habit of asking to be recognized for a motion to recommit. On this occasion the gentleman from Tennessee did not make such application——

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Not in private.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. One moment. One parliamentary inquiry at a time. The gentleman from New York did. Both gentlemen were on their feet. The Chair, not knowing for what purpose the gentleman from Tennessee rose, whether for a parliamentary inquiry or for what purpose, asked the gentleman for what purpose he rose——

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I accept the apology of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. One moment. He was informed the gentleman desired to move to recommit the bill, and the Chair very promptly said to the gentleman that he was not recognized for that purpose, and the Chair turned to the gentleman from New York. There is the plain simple statement of facts; and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York, who moves——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to ask the Speaker whether the gentleman from New York had arisen in his place and addressed the Chair?

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (continuing). Prior to the time when the gentleman from Tennessee was recognized; and I wish to add this question, whether or not the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee was not within the rule and within his power to make, if recognized by the Chair; and I wish to ask the Chair whether a private agreement to recognize a gentleman takes precedence with recognition in the open House when he confesses the gentleman arose afterwards?

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to be put even in the position by the innuendo which the gentleman from Mississippi makes that the Chair is seeking to discriminate between Members of the House. The Chair will proceed to answer the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Another parliamentary inquiry on another question.

The SPEAKER. That will have to wait a moment. The gentleman from New York was not recognized by agreement. He notified the occupant of the chair that he desired to be recognized, was on his feet addressing the Chair at the same time that the gentleman from Tennessee was on his feet. The gentleman from Tennessee addressing the Chair was asked by the Chair for what purpose he rose.

The Chair did not know, and he stated for the purpose of moving to recommit, and the Chair at once said that the gentleman was not recognized, as the Chair had the right and the power to do from a parliamentary standpoint and a fair standpoint. This whole matter is easy of solution. The gentleman from New York moved the previous question; that motion is amendable by any germane amendment, provided a majority of the House does not cut it off by ordering the previous question. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman to recommit, to recommit with instructions.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I moved the previous question when I rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations and upon that motion demands the previous question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The impression prevails over here, Mr. Speaker, that the Speaker is in error in thinking that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] addressed the Chair before the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] did. What I desire now is to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] if he did address the Chair before the gentleman from Tennessee addressed the Chair and offered the motion?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, certainly I did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not propose to try the question of fact. The Chair saw the gentleman and heard the gentleman; and even if the gentleman had not addressed the Chair, the Chair had the right to decline to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee and to recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, if the motion of the gentleman from New York prevails, does that cut off the right to move to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from New York has moved to recommit this bill to the Committee on Appropriations and upon that motion has demanded the previous question. If the previous question is ordered, no amendment to that motion will be in order. If the previous question is refused, then any germane amendment will be in order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, upon ordering the previous question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 64, answering "present" 15, not voting 187, as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. DE ARMOND (during the roll call). I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Under what rule is the roll being called a third time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the second roll call is not complete.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understand that. But my parliamentary inquiry is, Why we do not complete the second roll call instead of making a third?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt that the second roll call will be completed before a third roll call is attempted.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I must appeal to the Speaker to enforce his own rules and not countenance a violation of the rule which provides for calling a second, not a third time, the names of those who fail to answer on the first call.

The SPEAKER. It is impossible for the Chair to rule upon any point which the gentleman may make touching a third roll call until a third roll call is commenced.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The Speaker and the House are being imposed upon by a third roll call before the second roll call has been completed. I ask the Speaker to maintain order, and require that the second roll call be completed before any third roll call is started.

The SPEAKER. By all manner of means everything should proceed in order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is what I am trying to have done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no knowledge in the premises, except that the Clerk has stated to the Chair that he is calling the roll and that the second roll call is not complete.

The Chair will be entirely frank with the gentleman. He will be very glad, indeed, to enforce the rules, and he hopes the gentleman from Missouri will help to enforce them. The Chair thinks that if we wait a little while longer two or three more gentlemen may appear. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, there has been a call by several gentlemen for the "regular order," which the Chair did not observe; but for some time we have been proceeding out of order. I call the attention of the Speaker to that fact, and hope that he will see that the House proceeds now in order.

Mr. Speaker, I ask why the roll call has been interrupted?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the roll call.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask whether my name is recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman is recorded in the negative.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I only asked the question because some one informed me that I was not recorded.

The Clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the names now being called are called for the third time, which is contrary to the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not informed on that matter.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I ask the Chair to get information from the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the second roll call is not complete. [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. I hope the Chair will get information from the Clerk as to whether he is not calling these names for the third or fourth time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the roll call.

Mr. DE ARMOND rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. It is really a parliamentary inquiry. My inquiry is whether the Speaker and the House can not as well wait without violating the rules as wait while violating them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman upon that inquiry. [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is an unusual distinction—to be called upon to answer a question which the Speaker admits he can not answer. The question I asked was whether the Speaker and the House could not as well proceed in order as out of order. The Speaker, from a delicate regard for the situation, has asked me to answer the question myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understand that the Speaker desires me to answer the question for him. I answer very candidly by saying that it appears the Speaker and the House can not proceed in order as well as out of order. If they can not proceed in order, then, as a matter of necessity, we must get along out of order.

The Clerk, resuming the roll call, called the name of "Mr. SULLIVAN."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The name of "Mr. SULLIVAN" has been called already as often as the rules provide for. I ask the Speaker to have the Clerk read the rule which the Speaker has evidently forgotten.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk says that he has not completed the call of the roll, and the Chair is informed that there are two "Mr. SULLIVANS" in the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. The names of both have already been called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information on that point.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask whether it would be in order now for the Speaker to have the rule read for the information of the House and the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take great pleasure in having the rule read. The gentleman from Missouri calls for the reading of the rule. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XV.

ON CALLS OF THE ROLL AND HOUSE.

1. Upon every roll call the names of the Members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, in which case the name of the State shall be added; and if there be two such Members from the same State, the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair unless the Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I ask that the Clerk read the rule relative to interruptions of the roll call.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I ask that the Clerk read the rule with reference to interruptions of the third roll call. [Laughter.] I presume that is the one the gentleman from Iowa refers to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the calling of the roll.

I present a petition of the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of the bill authorizing the extension, construction, and operation of the Great Falls and Old Dominion Railroad into the District of Columbia. The petition is brief, and I ask that it may be read and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the petition was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 11, 1904.

To the Senate of the United States:

The Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, representing 20,000 wage-workers, residents of the city of Washington, petition your honorable body to enact Senate bill 2833, "to authorize the extension, construction, and operation of the Great Falls and Old Dominion Railroad into the District of Columbia."

We respectfully submit that the construction of this road along the route proposed will afford street-railway facilities which are necessary for the development of our city, and for the comfort and convenience of our residents.

We believe that this improvement, which is generally desired by our people, can only be obtained by the enactment of Senate bill 2833 and the extension of the Great Falls and Old Dominion Railway along the route designated in said bill.

We further believe that the two existing railway companies are opposed to the proposed improvement, and that the proposition of the Capital Traction Company to construct a line as provided in amendment to bill 2833, recently introduced in the Senate, is not made in good faith, but is a scheme devised to defeat any measure which would give to the people additional railway facilities in the northeast and release our residents from the merciless grip of a street-railway monopoly.

We earnestly protest against any further gifts of franchises to existing monopolies without securing taxation, cheaper fares, or some other compensation to the people.

We pray that this opportunity to secure healthy railway competition be not withheld, and we therefore respectfully ask on behalf of the 20,000 constituents of the Central Labor Union, who with their families constitute 60,000 street-railway patrons, that the honorable Senate of the United States will enact Senate bill 2833 during the present session of Congress.

Mr. MARTIN. I also present a petition of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the Great Falls and Old Dominion Railroad Company the right to extend its road in the District of Columbia. I shall not ask to have this petition read, but move that it lie on the table.

ELECTRICAL WIRING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3) to regulate electrical wiring in the District of Columbia, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if it is not necessary to have the amendment read in full, I will move that the Senate agree to the amendment made by the House of Representatives. I have examined it very carefully.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it is going a little too far to adopt an amendment which has never been read in the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. President, and will ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think there ought to be some order in the Senate, so that we can understand the measure that we are acting on. We can not hear a word of it, and we are asked to adopt it now. Never having heard it, I think there ought to be sufficient order in the Senate so that we can hear and understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment of the House of Representatives, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have power to make from time to time such rules and regulations respecting the production, use, and control of electricity for light, heat, and power purposes in the District of Columbia, not inconsistent with existing laws, as in their judgment will afford safety and convenience to the public; and the Commissioners of said District are further authorized and empowered to prescribe such fees for the examination of the electrical wiring, machinery, and appliances in buildings as they may deem proper, to be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, and any such rules and regulations shall after promulgation have the effect and force of law: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall apply to the power plants or buildings of incorporated companies engaged in the production and distribution of electric current for public service or use.

SEC. 2. That the electrical engineer who shall be chief inspector of electrical work and his assistants are hereby empowered and required, under the direction of the Commissioners, to inspect any building in course of erection and during reasonable hours to enter into and examine any building where electrical current is produced or utilized for lighting, heating, or for power, for the purpose of ascertaining violations of any of the provisions of this act; and upon finding any devices aforesaid defective or dangerous shall cause to be delivered a written notice of any violation of any provisions of this act, or of any regulation of said Commissioners duly adopted, to the constructing contractor, owner, or agent of any building directing him or them to remove or amend the same within a period to be fixed in said notice; and in case of neglect or refusal on the part of the party so notified to remove or amend the same within the time and in the manner prescribed by the chief inspector of electrical work, and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the party so offending shall pay a fine of not more than $25 for each and every day's failure or neglect to remove or amend the same after being so notified, and in default of payment of such fine such person shall be confined in the workhouse of the District of Columbia for a period not exceeding one month; and all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of said District, in the name of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That in the place of the present electrical engineer now carried on the per diem roll there be, and is hereby, established, under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the office of electrical engineer, and the Commissioners of said District are hereby authorized and directed to appoint an electrical engineer, at a salary of $2,500 per annum, and said electrical engineer shall be an expert electrician, possessing a thorough knowledge of the most modern methods for the production, use, and control of electricity and electrical appliances, construction, wiring, and insulation, as well as such executive ability and adaptability to office work as is requisite for the efficient management of the said office. And the Commissioners are authorized and directed to appoint two electrical inspectors to assist in the work required by the authority of this act, at a salary of $1,200 per annum each, who shall perform such clerical duties as may be required by the Commissioners.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, or corporation generating current for electric light, heat, or power in the District of Columbia to connect its system and furnish current for electrical purposes to any building or premises, the wiring of which shall not have been inspected and approved by the chief inspector of electrical work.

Any person, company, or corporation violating the provisions of this section shall, upon written notice from the chief inspector of electrical work to do so, immediately remove said connection and cut off the current, and shall not again supply said current until authorized by the said inspector. For failure to comply with said notice the offending person, company, or corporation shall be fined not less than $5 nor more than $100 for each and every day's failure or neglect to remove said connection and to cut off the current.

The chief inspector of electrical work is hereby authorized and empowered, with the approval of the Commissioners, to cause said connection to be removed and the current cut off upon such failure of the offending person, company, or corporation, and to refuse to permit said connection to be replaced and the current to be used until the wiring shall be put in proper and safe condition.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect ninety days from and after the approval thereof.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the provisions of this amendment, or bill, are very elaborate and there was so much confusion in the Chamber that I was unable to hear just what is contained in the proposition.

I wish the Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, would state to the Senate, as he can, no doubt, very readily, just what the fundamental provisions of this bill are, whether they have been considered fully by the committee and by the Senate, and whether this large control that is given to the Commissioners on the subject of electric wires and their application in this District extends by any chance to wires that belong to or are connected with railways.

I could not tell from the reading of the first part, there was so much noise, to what this jurisdiction is confined; and I shall be entirely content if the Senator will give us the explanation, because I know he looks into these matters with great thoroughness.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a little time ago the Senate passed a bill on this subject, and the amendment just read is a substitute made by the House of Representatives for that bill.

The bill had very careful consideration by the Committee on the District of Columbia. We gave a hearing to all parties in interest, the Commissioners of the District, the representatives of the several railroads, the street railroads particularly, and the contractors; and after considerable discussion and interchange of views the bill that was reported to the Senate and passed was agreed upon.

The bill does not interfere with the operation of the plants of the railroads. Those are left in the care of the men who are engaged in that business, and who have experts perhaps superior to those employed by the District of Columbia to look after their affairs.

It does take charge of the small electric plants that are scattered over the city—that is, it gives jurisdiction over them to the Commissioners—some of which are very poorly constructed and which ought to be supervised in some way. It gives jurisdiction to the Commissioners to see that electric wiring in private residences of the District is properly put in and to correct imperfect wiring when it has been reported to them and when it has been determined that it is imperfect.

Mr. President, that is the substance of the bill and all that is in it, as I understand it, and I have taken a great deal of interest in it. I think it is an extremely important subject. There is no question but that a very large proportion of the fires that occur at the present time are due to imperfect electric wiring, and heretofore there has been practically no supervision of that matter lodged in the hands of anyone in this District.

I think that is all I can say about it. I feel sure that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. HALE. My concern in the matter does not come from any solicitude about the plants of the company owning the electric wires, but as to whether there has been or possibly can be under this bill any change in or encroachment upon the policy that has been followed in the city of Washington that all electric wires operating street railways shall be underground.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it does not deal with that question at all. I will assure the Senator that there is not the least danger of the Committee on the District of Colum ia ever permitting a backward step to be taken in that matter. On the contrary, we have recently introduced and reported a bill permitting (it may seem strange that it was necessary) the Western Union Telegraph Company to put its wires underground. The Committee on the District of Columbia has called upon all these corporations to get rid, as speedily as possible, of the last pole and the last overhead wire in this Distr ct.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad that is being done by the committee. I want to see the day when every overhead wire of any kind in the city of Washington, given to any purpose whatever, disappears, so that we may not have them anywhere over our heads.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I can safely assure the Senator that that day is near at hand.

Mr. BURROWS. I should like to ask the Senator, as I see that this is a substitute for the Senate bill, wherein the substitute differs from the Senate bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that a good deal of verbiage in the Senate bill has been eliminated. I think the House did a good piece of work in writing the substitute. It likewise reduced, and I am sure the Senator from Michigan will be glad to know that fact, the machinery and the cle ical force that was required under the Senate bill. That is about the only change made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

2. Whereas the matters stated in the memorial relating to the government of said state are such as to properly engage the attention of the Government of the United States, on the grounds and for the reasons therein set forth; and

3. Whereas it being proper that Congress, being thus memorialized and informed, should inform the President of their opinion as to the verity of the matters stated in the memorial, after due examination, so that the Government will be prepared, if it is necessary to bring the same earnestly to the attention of the signatory powers of the general act of Brussels of July 2, 1890, and the general act of the conference of Berlin in 1885; and also to the attention of the sovereign of the Independent State of the Kongo, in connection with our treaty with that ruler, proclaimed April 2, 1892: Therefore, it is

Resolved by the Senate, That said memorial, with all the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

2. Resolved, That said committee is authorized to report by concurrent resolution, for the action of the Senate and House of Representatives, such measure and in such form as is considered appropriate to express the opinion of Congress upon the situation stated in said memorial, and as to the action, if any, that should be taken for the relief of our citizens in the Independent State of the Kongo, and of the natives of that State.

3. Resolved, That the memorial and the documents submitted therewith be printed, and that the same, except document numbered 10, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I think I ought to make a word of explanation about this matter before I ask the Senate to act upon it. The Senate knows that the Government of Great Britain and the sovereign of the Independent State of the Kongo are in controversy, based upon the report of the British consul to the Independent State of the Kongo as to the condition of the natives in that State and as to the rights of Great Britain and other signatory powers to have an examination of these reports under the provisions of the Berlin act and also the subsequent Brussels act covering this subject.

The memorial which I have had the honor to present to the Senate has been considered by a body of very able Americans who are connected with missionary enterprises in the Free State of Kongo. It is an admirably prepared paper, very conservative, and at the same time very distinct and very firm, accompanying which is a statement, which for the first time appears, of these missionaries, in regard to their observation of the state of facts in that country.

In presenting this memorial and asking the action of the Senate on it, I would not on my part assume to state what the condition of affairs is in that country, although I have the most implicit confidence in every word that has been stated in these documents. I therefore propose to refer the whole subject to the Committee on Foreign Relations in the form that it is presented here for their consideration and examination, so that they may present the facts to the Congress of the United States as they believe them to exist, at least that portion of the facts that is included in the documents that accompany this memorial, and to advise the President, so that in acting in this matter he shall be assured of the verity of these statements so far as we can assure him.

An examination of the papers, Mr. President, is due to the very able and distinguished body of men who have brought the matter forward. It has occurred to me that that is the proper way to do it, and to make no recommendation at all of what the Committee on Foreign Relations shall do, but ask them to make an inquiry, to examine the papers, and pronounce their opinion upon their verity and authenticity.

The sovereign of the Independent State of the Kongo is in controversy with the Government of Great Britain upon the verity of the report of their consul, who is also the representative of the United States, by request, in the Free State of the Kongo. On my part, I have not the slightest doubt that his representations are entirely just and correct. Still that is a matter with which we have no concern, at least for the present, and we may never have any concern about it.

I wish to say also to the Senate that the American negro is not mentioned or alluded to in these papers at all; his status, political or otherwise, is not referred to in the slightest way. The question concerns entirely the condition of the natives of the Independent State of the Kongo, and deserves to be very carefully examined into.

The matter will probably not be considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I do not think it ought to be, until the vacation of the Congress, so that the committee will have ample time to study up the situation. There is a good deal of history connected with it with which the members of that committee are perhaps not very familiar. I trust that the resolution which I base upon this memorial will be adopted and the subject go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I submitted the matter to some members of that committee, and they seem to be entirely satisfied that that is the right course to pursue.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HALE. I rose to ask the Senator who has introduced the resolution if he knows the extent of the documents and papers that he has asked to have printed in the RECORD? Let me say here——

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I ought to have made a statement in regard to that.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator goes on, let me state that I ask this question because my attention has been called to the RECORD of this morning. A Senator—as he had a right to do—asked the Senate that certain documents might be printed in the RECORD relating to a subject-matter then before the Senate. I see, on examination, that some fifteen or sixteen or more pages of fine print embracing that matter are in the RECORD this morning.

Now, I do not find fault with the Senator who asked yesterday that this should be done, nor with the Senator from Alabama, who asks the same kind of thing to-day; but the object of the RECORD, Mr. President, is not that it should be filled up with matters of that kind. It ought to be a record of the actual proceedings of Congress—the speeches that are made or the remarks upon every subject whatever; but if we are to put into it every document which illustrates the subject-matter which has been before a committee or which has been before a Department, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is already so voluminous and contains so many big volumes that it is difficult to handle it or to follow it, will become so bulky and unwieldy that nobody will pay any attention to it. Therefore I have asked the Senator from Alabama to state to the Senate the extent of the documents and papers which he asks may be entered upon the pages of the RECORD.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, there are ten documents accompanying the memorial. The tenth document is the correspondence and report of His Majesty's consul at Boma respecting the administration of the Kongo Free State. I ask that that may be printed as a part of the memorial as a document, but not to go into the RECORD, for the reason that it is accessible through other sources to the American people, who feel a very profound interest in this question. The remaining nine documents are brief typewritten papers, which perhaps would not occupy more than three or four pages of the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. To that, of course, I should not object. I wish other Senators would take an interest in this matter, and help see to it that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not so stuffed with matter, which may in itself be good, but which ought not to go into the RECORD, which is published as the record of our proceedings. I do not object to the request of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I will be very careful not to load the RECORD with any matter that is not absolutely part of the memorial and which is otherwise accessible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]?

The resolution was agreed to.

The papers referred to in the resolution are as follows:

MEMORIAL CONCERNING CONDITIONS IN THE INDEPENDENT STATE OF THE KONGO.

To the Congress of the United States of America:

As authorized representatives of American organizations conducting missionary and philanthropic work in the Independent State of the Kongo in Africa, we would respectfully invite the attention of your honorable bodies to certain conditions at present existing in that State which affect vitally the well-being of the people, and concern also the rights and interests of persons from other countries desiring to reside in the State and conduct business or philanthropic enterprises. In the gravity of the case as related both to the present and future well-being of so vast a multitude of people and to our own interests and our honorable obligation as a nation, in the fact that statements are widely circulated not only making denial of the existence of these conditions, but tending to confuse the issue presented, and in the seriousness of the action we ask from you is our excuse for dwelling at length upon the considerations which we submit for your judgment.

THE INDEPENDENT STATE OF THE KONGO A CREATION OF WESTERN POWERS.

You will recall that the Government known as the "Independent State of the Kongo" was unique in its origin. It came into being by act of an assembly representing all the nations of the western world. In the original movement looking toward the creation of this Government, Leopold, the King of Belgium, bore a leading part, and invited the assemblage of the conference at Berlin, in 1885. A company of geographers, travelers, and philanthropists, representing a number of European countries, had been called together by him in September, 1876. By this conference an organization, known as the "International African Association," was constituted. A few years later a society was organized for a purpose described by one of its members as that of "studying what might be made of the Kongo River and its basin." This society, including at first representatives of several European countries of prominence in the commercial and monetary world, soon came almost exclusively under Belgian control. Having the same officers with the original International Association, it soon practically superseded that organization, and, though in no true sense international, it renamed itself "The International Association of the Kongo."

THE UNITED STATES FOREMOST IN FAVORABLE ACTION.

After some years spent in visits of exploration to the Kongo State, the association reported that it had entered into treaty relations with more than 400 chiefs of the Kongo territory and sought recognition as a quasi political power. Other plans found favor with certain European powers. A treaty was tentatively concluded between England and Portugal, involving large recognition of the rights of the latter country in western Africa. Representatives of the international association appealed strongly to our own Government in the interest of opposition to this treaty and to any other form of agreement unsatisfactory to the association. As a result of this appeal, after favorable recommendation by President Arthur, the United States Government, on April 22, 1884, granted recognition to the association in the following terms:

"In harmony with the traditional policy of the United States, which enjoins a proper regard for the commercial interests of their citizens, while at the same time avoiding interference with controversies between other powers, as well as alliances with other nations, the Government of the United States announces its sympathy with and approval of the humane and benevolent purposes of the International Association of the Kongo, administering, as it does, the interests of the free states there established, and will order the officers of the United States, both on land and sea, to recognize the flag of the international association as the flag of a friendly government."

This action, taken at this critical juncture, proved determinative of the issue presented in the claims preferred by the international association. The Government of Germany soon assumed a favorable attitude. The Anglo-Portuguese treaty was withdrawn. Conventions were made with the association by Great Britain and other powers. Meanwhile a conference, in which fourteen states were represented, including the American Government, was convened at Berlin, as a result of which, in January, 1885, definite sanction was given to the establishment of a free state in the basin of the Kongo, and principles regulative of its powers were adopted. Six months later, on the 1st of August, 1885, the association adopted formally the new title of The Independent State of the Kongo. Thus a new state, of which Leopold II was recognized as sovereign and sole administrator, was constituted. Such is the remarkable story of the way by which an individual attained to power, unlimited by internal, legislative, or judicial restraint, over a territory four times as great as that of France or the German Empire.

TERRITORY, CLIMATE, AND PEOPLE.

The Independent State of the Kongo includes a territory upward of a million square miles in extent. Having a frontage of about 400 miles upon the Atlantic coast, it broadens vastly in the interior, comprising nearly all the basin of the Kongo River. This great river, second only to the Amazon in the volume of its waters, with innumerable tributary streams, both enriches the land and affords access to all sections of the great area.

The climate in the coast district is unfavorable for protracted residence, but the elevated plateaus of the interior districts offer an attractive temperature and conditions in general favorable to health. Grazing for cattle is found on the grassy plains, and the timber lands, when cleared, prove at once reasonably fertile, producing the vegetables common in our markets, while the forests abound in tropical fruits. The most valuable product of the forest is supplied by the india-rubber vine, the Independent State of the Kongo leading all other sections of the earth in its supply of this commercial product. It is evident that the resources of the country rightly conserved and developed would secure for it wealth indefinitely great and a corresponding position in the world's commerce.

The native peoples, of many tribes and languages, are variously estimated as numbering between twenty and thirty millions. The earliest white visitors to the country give pleasant testimony to the traits of native character. As a rule, they were welcomed and found the people ready to receive instruction. In certain sections considerable progress had been made in the development of the arts. Dr. Hinde, for example, who accompanied the expedition of Baron Dhanis for the overthrow of the Arab slave power, speaks of his surprise in finding "masons, brickmakers, agriculturists, and ironworkers." (The Fall of the Congo Arabs, p. 194, cited in Civilization in Congoland, by H. R. Fox Bourne, p. 159.) Independence, alertness of mind, curiosity, and readiness to adopt new customs are noted by travelers as characteristics of the people. In no country has missionary work found a people more hospitable or more responsive.

There was therefore apparently all ground for the hope that the work upon which this newly created government was entering by sanction of the nations, while encountering many difficulties, would result in a constantly broadening development by which increasing blessings should come to the people, and the land should offer an attractive home to neighboring peoples and to any persons in our own country of African descent who might desire to find a home in their ancestral land.

THE PROFESSION OF DISINTERESTED PHILANTHROPY.

This hope was encouraged by the profession made by those seeking recognition for the State. The enterprise of King Leopold found favor because it was supposed to represent two noble ideals—a generous philanthropy and impartial freedom of commerce for all the world. The announcement made by promoters of the enterprise was definite and reiterated. The proposed State was not to exist for exploitation of the resources of the country with a view to gain to accrue to those establishing it; it was to exist for the benefit of the native people. Indeed, at one stage, the secretary of the association had written declaring that the movement had in contemplation "the establishment of a republican confederation of free negroes, the King simply reserving the right to name the president of the confederation." This thought was discredited by other promoters of the enterprise as offering too high an ideal for early realization; but the affirmation of the philanthropic character of the enterprise was incessant. Mr. Stanley, when speaking in advocacy of the movement before the London Chamber of Commerce, said:

"The founders of the International Association have been called dreamers. Some can not appreciate rightly, because there are no dividends attaching to it, this restless, ardent sentiment, which seeks to extend civilizing influences among the dark races, and to brighten up with the glow of civilization the dark places of sad-browed Africa."

Our own Government in taking the leadership in granting recognition to the State emphasized the high ideals which it was thought to represent. In his message to Congress in December, 1883, President Arthur dwelt upon the exalted character of these ideals. He said: "The objects of this society are philanthropic. It does not aim at permanent political control, but seeks the neutrality of the valley." Our Government's recognition of the State was in express terms an announcement of "its sympathy with and approval of the humane and benevolent purposes" of the association.

Equally explicit was the understanding determining the action of the conference at Berlin, in which our Government participated, but whose action it did not formally ratify because of the ideal controlling relations with foreign states. The preamble of the "General act of the Berlin conference" declares that the conference is "concerned as to the means of furthering the moral and material well-being of the native populations."

Prince Bismarck, in an introductory address to the conference, declared that in convening it the Imperial Government of Germany was guided "by the conviction that all the governments invited agreed in wishing to bring the natives of Africa within the pale of civilization * * * by giving its inhabitants the means of instructing themselves, by encouraging missions and enterprises calculated to spread useful knowledge, and by preparing the way for the overthrow of slavery." At the close of the sessions of the conference Prince Bismarck paid honor to "His Majesty King of the Belgians," as "the founder of a work * * * which should confer precious service on the cause of humanity," and added, "I pray for the prosperous development of the State and for the fulfillment of the noble aspirations of its illustrious founder."

These expectations were based on the purpose avowed by the King of Belgium himself. "Our only programme, I am anxious to repeat," he said in a published letter, "is the work of moral and material regeneration." President Cleveland was true to the impression widely made when in announcing the organization of the Independent State of the Kongo he wrote in his first annual message in December, 1885: "It is fortunate that a benighted region, owing all it has of quickening civilization to the beneficence and philanthropic spirit of this monarch, should have the advantage and security of his benevolent supervision."

FREEDOM OF TRADE GUARANTEED.

And not only is it true that the aim professedly controlling the founding of the Independent State of the Kongo was philanthropic, the understanding was definite that nothing of the nature of an individual monopoly was contemplated. The State was to be open to unrestricted commerce. This understanding appears in letters written by the promoters of the enterprise before its recognition by our Government, in the language of our state papers, in the pledges recorded in the act of the conference at Berlin, and in the explicit declaration made by the King when the name, the "Independent State of Kongo," was adopted. It was declared, indeed, that neither directly nor indirectly would the Government of the State trade or traffic.

President Arthur, in his message of December, 1884, says: "The importance of the rich prospective trade of the Kongo Valley has led to the general conviction that it should be opened to all nations on equal terms." Opposition to the tentative treaty by which England proposed recognition of the rights of Portugal in the Kongo Valley was based explicitly upon the fear that under Portuguese administration the commercial rights of other nations would not be safeguarded.

The general act adopted by the Berlin conference is explicit in its provision for assuring respect for the full and equal commercial rights of all nations. Its first article provides, under the heading "Declaration relative to freedom of trade in the basin of the Kongo, its mouths, and circumjacent regions," that "the trade of all nations shall enjoy complete freedom."

In closing the conference, Prince Bismarck said: "The resolutions we are on the point of sanctioning secure to the commerce of all nations free access to the center of the African continent. The guaranties which will be provided for freedom of trade in the Kongo basin are of a nature to offer to the industries of all nations the conditions most favorable to the development of their security."

Such was the understanding and the purpose of those through whose action the Independent State was constituted. It was not because national governments desired to give to one man commercial privileges of vast value that they consigned the government of this newly opened territory to his care. It was because they would retain these commercial privileges as a due possession for all peoples that this new State was given its being.

THE CATALOGUE OF WRONGS.

The fact to which our information concerning conditions in the Independent State of the Kongo makes it our painful duty to ask your attention is that the anticipated realization of these humane, liberal, and just ideals has not been reached by the Government of the Kongo State, but has been and is now directly thwarted by the methods of administration which the Government has adopted. Fidelity to the facts known to us compels the statement that the country to-day, throughout great sections, is suffering from a grievous oppression characterized by well-nigh incredible abuses of the people.

The story of personal sufferings is a heartrending one. Among the wrongs alleged in the documents accompanying our memorial are forced labor; the forced contribution of food stuffs and other supplies for the State stations and the stations of monopolist companies licensed by the State, and for the 30,000 men of the regular and irregular militia; forced military service under conditions unjust alike to the soldiers and the people; direct imposts dependent upon the arbitrary will of subordinate officials or commanders of detachments of the militia, and the exaction throughout the rubber-producing districts of a heavy toll of this product—all this without respect to the consent or desire and with slight regard to the ability of the people. The requirements become more and more burdensome as the population diminishes and the supplies obtainable in the territories adjoining native villages are exhausted. In many instances the people are required to make contributions to the State of articles which they do not possess and which they must purchase at a cost greatly in excess of the price allowed them for supplying it. Remuneration for the contributions made is slight. The right to remuneration, indeed, has been denied. An exponent of the policy of the King's Government declared in the Belgian Parliament that whatever remuneration is given is a gratuity.

It is—so the testimony presented by us indicates—in connection with the enforcement of these demands made by the State upon the people that the cruelties by which the land is scourged have developed. The native is driven to his task by a remorseless physical compulsion. For evasion of the task, or for failure to perform it to the full on account of whatever inability, punishments of a most shocking character are appointed. They include the seizure of women, who, chained neck to neck, are forced away from their homes and held as so-called "hostages;" the burning of villages; the indiscriminate slaughter of the people pursued and hunted in the forests to which they flee; the mutilation of the living and the dead.

Horror is added to horror in the dreadful catalogue of reported wrongs. It would be difficult to name a form of atrocity belonging to any history of shameless conquest or of primitive savagery which fails to find a place in this record. The impressing of recruits for the army and for the forces of laborers is accomplished by use of the methods made familiar by the slave raids, which it was thought to be the high mission of the Government of this State to abolish. Slavery practically is restored throughout the State by the exaction of long terms of service for those professedly freed from bondage, and in certain sections the slave market is wide open under Government protection. Grewsome stories are told of the customs of leaders of scattered bands of the militia of bringing in the hands of the dead as proof that the retribution required from them has been inflicted, and of orgies of cannibalism systematically permitted to prey upon the bodies of their victims as reward for their work of slaughter.

The testimony to these enormities is of such a character that, morally incredible as the stories seem, we are unable to doubt that they reproduce all-too faithfully conditions prevailing through wide sections of the Independent Kongo State. This testimony, now for many years, has come to the outer world from residents of the State in a steady, unintermittent stream. The list of witnesses includes missionaries, travelers, explorers, consular residents, and agents of the State who have wearied of the work in which confessedly they had participated.

THE RELUCTANT TESTIMONY OF MISSIONARIES.

It should be borne in mind that the missionary is a reluctant witness against the government under which he lives. It is his desire, and it is for his personal interest, to cultivate the favor of the government, and the missionary devoted to his work will bear much rather than risk a total loss of power to be of service to the people. The testimony of missionaries connected with our American societies, as offered by us, includes that of Rev. G. B. Murphy (Document I), whose statement was published in the London Times, November 18, 1895; that of Rev. J. V. Sjoblom (Document II), presented to the British Government in the year 1898, of whose testimony, as given at a meeting of the Aborigines Protection Society, Sir Charles Dilke, who was present at the meeting, has recently said:

"I undertake to say that there was not a single person present who was not constrained to believe every syllable he uttered. His statement has never been shaken in any way."

Another witness adds:

"Apparently almost a dying man, he spoke with broken voice, but intense earnestness, in simple language that left none of his hearers in doubt as to the absolute truthfulness with which he recounted his experience of five years' residence in the Equateur district."

Rev. Joseph Clark (Document III), Rev. A. Billington (Document IV), and Rev. C. L. Whitman (Document V), who are now at stations on the upper Kongo River, and Edwin A. Layton, M. D. (Document VI), and Rev. W. M. Morrison (Document VII), who are now in this country, are able, if this is desired, to supplement their testimony by personal words.

We would call particular attention to the testimony of Mr. Sjoblom, and to that of Mr. Morrison. The first, relating to a time seven years ago, is graphic and detailed, and the latter makes the reader almost a spectator of the scenes of horror as they are revealed in certain sections of the Kongo State at this very hour. Note his description of his colleague's visit to the stockade, where a marauding band of cannibal savages in the service of the State had murdered helpless prisoners, and where eighty-one severed hands were slowly drying over a fire.

To this missionary testimony we would add also that of two missionaries of the English Baptist mission. Rev. John H. Weeks (Document VIII) and Rev. A. E. Scrivener (Document IX). Both are living in the far interior of the State. The former tells the story of impressions made upon him on a recent return to Africa after a time of furlough, and the latter gives a detailed record of a journey made by him in the summer of 1903 through the domaine privé of the King.

WITNESSES OF MANY CALLINGS.

This testimony of missionaries finds impressive reenforcement in the testimony of more transient dwellers in the land. That of Mr. Ewart S. Grogan, who, in the volume From the Cape to Cairo, tells the story of a journey made by him in the year 1899 (see p. 227); that of Mr. Pickersgill, consul of the British Government, given in an official report in 1898 (see citations from this report in Civilization in Kongo Land, by Mr. H. R. Fox-Bourne, pp. 177–180); that of Colonel Williams (see Affairs of West Africa, by E. D. Morel, p. 320), an officer in King Leopold's army, who, in the year 1891, denounced to the King the outrages occurring under his administration; that of Major Parminter, a pioneer of the earlier days, who, in 1892, sought the assistance of the Aborigines Protection Society in exposing the conduct of the Kongo Government, but who afterwards was pacified by the King (see pp. 132–134, Civilization in Congoland); that of M. Moray (see p. 252 of Civilization in Congoland), a former agent of one of the great monopolist companies now licensed by the King; that of Senator M. Edouard Pickard, a member of the Belgian Senate, who wrote of impressions made during a visit to the Kongo in 1896 (see En Congolie, pp. 95–97, as cited in Civilization in Congoland, pp. 244, 245, 248, 249).

In these testimonies the same features grow cruelly familiar—the lash, the raids of soldiers, the terror of the villagers, the weighing of baskets of rubber brought in by trembling natives, the scourging with the chicotte, of hippopotamus hide, the burning of villages, indiscriminate masscre, the severed hands, the excesses of cannibalism.

A COMPANION OF MR. STANLEY.

Perhaps no one of these testimonies made in published volumes is more significant than that of Mr. E. J. Glave, for a time a subordinate of Mr. Stanley in the Kongo International Association, the author of the volume Six Years in the Congo, published in 1892, for which Mr. Stanley wrote an introduction in which he gave strong commendation of the character of the author. Mr. Glave revisited the Kongo after an absence of six years, and his record of the scenes witnessed by him as he made his way over the route followed previously with Mr. Stanley is given in articles contributed to the Century Magazine. (See articles "New conditions in Central Africa," vols. 53, 54.) At first he is perplexed and incredulous.

December 6 he writes: "I do not think the Belgians are going the right way to work." December 7: "It is said, but I must have it corroborated, that the white officer * * * has commissioned several chiefs to make raids and bring him the slaves. They are supposed to be taken out of slavery and freed, but I fail to see how this can be argued out. * * * Peaceful families have been broken up. If these conditions are to exist, I fail to see how the anti-slavery movement is to benefit the native." (See Century Magazine, vol. 53, p. 907.)

As he advances, the entries in his journal reveal the growth of his deep indignation and abhorrence. December 11 he writes: "The whole country is being beset by the dreadful and thoroughly unjustifiable conduct of the soldiers." (Vol. 53, p. 913.)

December 17 he writes again: "I do not think the natives are making much out of this partition of Africa. This antislavery movement has its dark side also. In stations in charge of white men—Government soldiers—one sees strings of poor, emaciated, old women, some of them mere skeletons, tramping about in gangs with a rope about the neck—naked, except for a miserable patch of cloth. They are prisoners of war. They form a miserable spectacle. (Vol. 53, p. 912.)

January 3: "This station is surrounded by villages paying tribute. It has 5,000 auxiliaries who are sent all over the country to beat the natives into submission." (Vol. 53, p. 915.)

February 28. "We left Equateur after taking on a cargo of 100 small slaves, principally boys 7 or 8 years old, with a few girls among the batch, all stolen from the natives. They talk of philanthropy and civilization. Where it is I do not know." (Vol. 54, p. 708.)

March 12. "Everywhere I hear the same news of the doings of the Kongo Free State—rubber and murder—slavery in its worst form." (Vol. 54, p. 709.)

April 5. "I saw the dead body of a carrier lying on the trail. He was nothing but skin and bone. These posts ought to give some care to porters. The heartless disregard for life is abominable. No wonder the State is hated." (Vol. 54, p. 713.)

Arriving at Matadi, where his death occurred a few days later, Mr. Glave wrote, April 5: "If the Arabs had been the masters, this would be styled 'iniquitous trafficking in human flesh and blood,' but, being under the administration of the Kongo Free State, it is merely a part of their philanthropic system of liberating the natives." (Vol. 54, p. 796.)

REPORT OF BRITISH CONSUL—ACTION BY BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

A notable confirmation and reenforcement of all this testimony is found in an official report made in February of the present year by Mr. Roger Casement, His Britannic Majesty's consul in the Independent State of the Kongo, by whom official service has been rendered to our own Government in the absence of consular representation in this State. We submit herewith his painstaking and comprehensive testimony, given after a journey through interior districts, the straightforward, regretful fidelity of which we think can not fail to be apparent to every fair-minded reader. (Document X.) A single citation from the elaborate document will illustrate its character. Mr. Casement paid a visit to a large company of refugees who had sought an asylum beyond the borders of the Kongo State. He says:

"I saw and questioned several groups of these people, whom I found to be industrious blacksmiths and brassworkers. The statements made to me by them were of such a nature that I could not believe them to be true. * * * On reaching Bolobo in September I obtained information amply confirming the statements." (For extended account of interview with these natives and the stories of massacre and mutilation given by them, see report of Mr. Casement, p. 60–64.)

In this connection we would call your attention to the fact that, even before the testimony of Mr. Casement had been received, the British Parliament, after an exhaustive investigation of the testimony submitted to it, by unanimous vote took action looking to intervention by the signatory parties of the Berlin agreement. It has addressed these powers upon the subject and has placed in their hands the report of Mr. Casement. The British premier publicly declared that the proofs of the existence of grave abuses were overwhelming.

ARRAIGNMENT IN GERMANY AND IN THE BELGIAN PARLIAMENT.

It is noteworthy also that the German Colonial Society, a body with a membership of 32,000, has issued a public appeal in a similar vein, expressing its conviction of the conclusiveness of testimony as to conditions in this State. Even in the Belgian House of Representatives a resolution was strongly supported demanding inquiry into administration of the government of the Kongo State on the ground that the charges against it were established beyond disproof or contradiction.

The documents and citations presented we offer in part as direct testimony and in part as collateral reports in support of the position we would urge, namely, that there is ample ground for inquiry into conditions in the Kongo State by those to whom right of inquiry belongs. The testimony varies in the gravity of conditions indicated, reports becoming more dark as districts more remote from the coast are touched. Of the situation in regions far removed from missionary stations and the path of travelers, where the native soldiers are quite without restraint in following out their impulses, a suggestion is given in the record of the journey of Mr. Scrivener through a section of the Domaine Prive and in a chapter of the report of Mr. Casement.

PROOF MADE SUPERFLUOUS BY OPEN ADOPTION OF AN INDEFENSIBLE SYSTEM.

But we have now to remind you that, decisive as is the evidence of wrong suffered by the natives under the rule of the Independent State of the Kongo, the presentation of specific proofs of wrong is made almost superfluous. For the government of the Independent State of the Kongo undeniably has followed a course which involves, apparently, a central breach of faith with the powers creating it and with the native people whom it was appointed to serve, and this course is such that by it the wrongs to which the testimony cited bears witness are invited and made inevitable. The root of administrative evils in the government of the Independent State of the Kongo is in its monopolization of the territory and the resources of the State.

The astonishing claim leading to this action is now traceable in a document issued July 1, 1885, which at the time was supposed to be dictated by concern for the rights of the natives. It declared that "no one may dispossess any native of lands occupied by him," adding that "all vacant land is considered as belonging to the State." Later, through successive public edicts, it became clear that the term "vacant" was to be interpreted as meaning all territory in the State with the exception of the sites of the native villages, and the gardens of such villages. Thus was consummated, without offer of compensation to the natives, this appropriation by the government of all the vast Kongo territory save the little areas occupied by villages and gardens.

Certain monopolist companies have been created in which the King has controlling financial interest, either through ownership of a majority of the stock, or through demands upon the revenues; but more than 800,000 acres are set apart as belonging to the "domaine prive" of the King. Forest and plain, hill and valley, the river and its affluents, are his private possession.

And the claim applies not simply to the territory, but all products of this immense region, native or developed by cultivation, are claimed as the King's personal property, even the produce of the gardens. The natives may not trade in these products; they may only bring them to the King's agents for such compensation as the agents choose to allow.

AN ARMY OF SAVAGES.

The relation of these extraordinary claims to the evils from which the land is suffering is easily traced. The products of the country must be collected by the natives, and, all true motive for industry having been destroyed, no resort remains but that of compulsion. A body of armed men is required for enforcement of the King's will. This body must be secured through raids upon the native tribes, and the more savage tribes are chosen by preference. The captives are taken far from their homes, and after a time of restraint are commissioned for the appointed service. This "force publique" in 1896 was a force of 8,500 men; six years later it had more than doubled in numbers. In addition to this native force, the monopolist companies are allowed to raise auxiliary forces, and savage tribes are made the allies of the State for prosecution of the same ends. This force as a whole is now believed to comprise a body of 30,000 men.

The character of the work of these men is indicated in the words of M. Edouard Pickard, a member of the Belgian Senate: "Their ferocity equals that of a pack of hounds hunting their quarry." (En Congolie, p. 201. See citation in Civilization in Congoland, p. 249.) Unrestrained by natural sentiments of compassion, held severely responsible for securing at any cost the appointed tributes from the people, officered by men incited to their task by promise of "bounties proportionate to the results obtained," these barbaric hordes are let loose upon the people. Their representative in the villages is "the sentry," whose work is to secure the appointed levy of rubber or other products, and who is practically without restraint upon his savage propensities. He is described by one visitor to the country as a "dare-devil aboriginal armed with a rifle, his power limited only by such repression as the government chooses to use." It was of these men Mr. Glave wrote, "The black soldiers are bent on fighting and raiding; they want no peaceful settlement. They have good rifles and ammunition, realize their superiority over the natives with their bows and arrows, and they want to shoot and kill and rob, * * * whether the victim be man, woman, or child, and no matter how defenseless." It is apparent that of such a system wrongs and atrocities are the certain product. (Century Magazine, vol. 53, p. 908.)

It should be borne in mind that the subordinate agents of Government, if continuing in its service, are made practically helpless. Receiving instruction to furnish a given number of soldiers and a certain amount of rubber, with the understanding that they must employ whatever means are necessary, they know of no methods adequate for the end except those involving appeal to fear. Mr. Glave says that most white officers are averse to the india-rubber régime of the State, but the laws command it. It would be unjust not to recognize that the conditions prevailing have aroused distress in men connected with the Government, yet it is to be feared that it is only a few of these who have the interests of the people at heart, and these are powerless to stem the tide of oppression. The punishment of subordinates, whether soldiers or white officers, even if honestly attempted, would not reach the evil. The fault is not theirs primarily. It belongs to the system and to the authority responsible for the establishment and enforcement of that system. Proofs of individual guilt become of secondary consequence as compared with the question as to the essential character and the certain results of the system which the Government of the State has ordained.

From the considerations thus presented it is apparent that the course pursued by the sovereign of the Independent State of the Kongo has laid his Government open to question in respect to violation of the trusts committed to it. Apparently that Government has not been true to the faith solemnly plighted in behalf of the native peoples. Before the world and before God the sovereign pledged himself in the Berlin conference to safeguard the interests of the natives and to insure to them the benefits of peace and of civilization. The few specimens obtainable of the treaties made by Mr. Stanley with native chiefs in the name of the International Association, before the Berlin conference had been convened, show that that association pledged itself to protect the people from oppression, but in place of protection and fostering care for their welfare under the Government in which the rights and powers of that association were merged, they have suffered from every form of ill usage which a savage inhumanity could devise, and the ruler who promised them protection has imposed upon them the one wholesale wrong, the parent of all lesser acts of injustice, the cruelty of dispossessing them of their ancient rights in their native land. In these lands they held dominion under tribal government, hunting in the forests and gathering the products of forest and field. Now the people practically are slaves upon their native soil. They may not for their own benefit collect its produce; they may not barter it for merchandise; they may only bring it to the agents of the Kongo for such return as it is the pleasure of the agents to make. This is slavery in fact. It is the imposition of bondage under the name of government.

THE TWOFOLD BETRAYAL OF TRUST—THE DEFRAUDING OF THE NATIONS.

And the crime against the natives is a crime against the nations. The people may not trade, and have nothing with which to trade. So the trader from another land may not buy. The Berlin agreement, in its opening article, affirmed that the trade of all nations should enjoy complete freedom. So solicitous was the conference at Berlin for the safeguarding of this right that in the protocol of the general act of Berlin it was provided that no modifications of the agreement should be introduced tending to hamper the liberty of trade. No other thought could have been in the minds of the members of this conference than that of freedom in the only kind of trade possible in Africa—the collecting and sale by the natives of their products in exchange for such European merchandise as they should desire to secure. Today, with the exception of the narrow district of the lower Kongo where free trade hampered by taxation still exists in diminishing volume, the entire territories of the Kongo State have been converted into a vast monopoly.

Above Stanley Pool trade does not exist. For fifteen years the great territory of the "Domaine Privé" of the King has been closed to all commercial enterprises. The territory along the Kassai River, for a time left to freedom of trade, has now been forced into a monopoly, with the State as its chief stockholder. The commercial companies representing the King were reconstructed a few years since, being brought under the law of the Kongo State, by which they are not required to make public their transactions. The earlier traders have been dispossessed and driven from the country. The purchase of products from a native by a foreign trader is now a crime, exposing the trader to severe legal penalties and severer arbitrary punishments. The story of the execution of Mr. Charles Henry Stokes (see Civilization in Congoland, pp. 200-202, 266-270), a trader in ivory, who was hanged by a representative of the Government in 1895, and that of the arrest and subsequent death of Herr Rabinek, who originally possessed a license for trade, but was refused recognition after reorganization of the Katanga Company, are suggestive of the fortune appointed for those who presume upon the binding force of the pledges given originally by the Government of the Kongo State.

Such is the system and policy openly adopted and defended by the Government of the Independent State of the Kongo, apparently the direct negation of the two principles made prominent in its original professions and determinative of the action at Berlin.

But a presentment against the Government of the Independent State of the Kongo might not inappropriately be based also on another ground, that of the result following from this rule. The development confidently looked for has not resulted from the experiment entered upon with the solemn sanction of western powers.

ACCUSING FIGURES.

One need but consult official reports to discover conclusive evidence of this. Among public expenses, we find an item of 7,700,000 francs for the public force, the soldiery, by whom the exactions of government are enforced, while for public works the expenditure is 1,000,000 francs.

Not less suggestive are figures relating to the commerce of the country. For the year 1901 exportation was $10,035,200; of this amount, exports of rubber and ivory represented $9,585,800. Thus the exportation of other products, representative of such industries as develop the capabilities of the people and the resources of the country, were but $449,400. It should be added that about 97 per cent of the small general trade thus reported is almost exclusively the exportation of palm products from the Lower Kongo by the Dutch house. Of the export of rubber about 50 per cent is from the private domain of the King, the remainder from territories worked by the monopolist companies.

Equally instructive is the comparative table of exports and imports. During a period of four years we find a total exportation of $35,800,000, the imports during the same period being $17,346,000, the importation thus representing less than one-half the exportation, a situation said to be without parallel in European colonies. When to this it is added that 70 per cent of this importation represents supplies for government, stores for the railway, arms and ammunition for the military force, it will be seen how small is the inflow to the State as a whole from the products of the world's industry and invention, and how insignificant is the tidal rill from the great ocean of the world's material wealth which trickles beyond the relatively favored district by the Atlantic coast. When it is recalled that Mr. Stanley predicted for Great Britain alone an annual trade with the Kongo of £20,000,000, the failure of the rule of its Government to realize the possibilities supposed to be opened before it becomes apparent.

THE ABSENCE OF THE SCHOOL AND THE HOSPITAL.

And we seek in vain in the Kongo State for those forms of service which it is the high privilege of civilized governments to render to their peoples. Where is the school system which it should have founded? Where is the hospital system with which it should have ministered to the physical need of the people? Apparently the one movement bearing a resemblance to philanthropic effort is the plan by which orphans, with the State's approval, may be taken under the care of religious or philanthropic associations; but these orphans are the hapless little ones left parentless and homeless by the military raids, and visitors to the country reproduce no more dreadful scenes than these connected with the transportation of these children from their village homes to those to whose care they are committed. Certain material enterprises, as the railway, bear witness to great energy and perseverance, though themselves identified with terrible cost to the lives of the natives; but these enterprises are connected directly with the one aim which unhappily seems to have absorbed the energies of the Government, that of enriching itself by a swift exploitation of the natural products of the State.

A BROKEN-SPIRITED PEOPLE.

This presentment against the Government of the State on the score of the results following upon its work is not simply of a negative character. The misrule of government affects directly the life of the people in that it takes away all incentive to labor by depriving them of the rewards of toil. In the interior districts the people have no heart for the planting of gardens or for the building of homes. They dwell in continual alarm, fearing the coming of the soldiery. Homes are ill kept; houses falling into decay are not repaired.

The picture revealed in the concurrent representation of impartial witnesses is a melancholy one. Mr. Stanley, arriving at the mouth of the Kongo, on the 14th of August, 1879, as the representative of the International African Association, set before himself a proud programme: "To ascend the river, with the noble mission of sowing along its banks civilized settlements; to peacefully conquer [the country] and subdue it; to remold it in harmony with modern ideas into national states, within whose limits the European merchants shall go hand in hand with the dark African trader, and justice and law and order shall prevail, and murder and lawlessness and the cruel barter of slaves shall forever cease." (See The Kongo, vol. 1, p. 59.)

As illustrating the unhappy contrast with this forecast presented in the conditions realized to-day, we may quote the testimony of the consul, Mr. Roger Casement, regarding one representative station in the State: "I must confess with pain and astonishment * * * that I felt I was visiting a penal settlement." (From letter of Mr. Casement to the vice-governor-consul of the Kongo State, September 4, 1903.)

THE EXHAUSTED AND DEPOPULATED LAND.

Terrorism holds sway. The methods of the slave régime are reinforced by the inexorable authority of the Government itself. Cannibalism is carried to regions where before it was unknown. The lands are depleted. The profuse bleeding of the rubber vines has brought about their destruction in wide areas. The State is reaching on for new territories over which its devastating work may spread. The deportation of young men, the massacres, and the flight of the people are draining the population of the country. In no one feature are the testimonies submitted by us in more painful agreement than in their description of the depopulation of the country. Every returning missionary, every traveler revisiting the land, bears testimony to this.

Mr. Scrivener, in his record of the journey recently made through a section of the Domaine Privé, says that one may walk for five days without seeing a single village where once village life abounded. "The most striking characteristic of the land," so another witness writes, "is the absence of human life. It is not, after you have passed the arid mountains of Palabala, poor or unfertile; but it is empty." (M. Mille Au Congo Belge, p. 49.)

M. Edouard Pickard, of the Belgian Senate, after his journey in 1896, speaks of "the desolation resulting from the engineering exploits," of the "mutilated forests where until lately villages had nestled," of "great heaps of cinders amid deserted palm groves and trampled down banana fields." He adds: "The terror caused by the memory of inhuman floggings and of massacres haunt their brains, and they go as fugitives to the hospitable bush or across the frontiers." (En Congolie, p. 95, cited p. 244 Civilization in Congoland.)

Mr. Grogan, in his work From the Cape to Cairo, says: "A country formerly well populated and apparently responsive to just treatment is now practically a howling wilderness. The scattered inhabitants live almost without cultivation in the marshes, thickets, and reeds, madly fleeing even from their own shadows; * * * the very white men who should be keeping peace where chaos now reigns supreme spend thousands in making of peace a chaos of their own." (From the Cape to Cairo, p. 227.)

But the natives may not all abandon the country. There are other perils in the outlook. It is apparent that the policy of the Government is not winning the friendship of the people. Mr. Robert Codrington, commissioner for Great Britain in the neighboring territory of northern Zambesia, who wrote after a tour in the Kongo district, says: "The natives are continually in rebellion, and the country is unsafe except in the immediate vicinity of the military commissaries and within the spheres of the missionaries." (Geographical Journal, May, 1902, p. 601.) Mutinies in the army are frequent. The Kongo State may yet work its own doom. The forces of savagry may turn upon it. The question raised by one writer is a startling one: "When the present rule is ended, what will remain for Europe and America to deal with? * * * A vast region with undying hatred of the whites—a great army of cannibal levies, trained in the usage of modern weapons and taught the worst vices of depraved men in civilized lands."

CHOSEN METHODS INEXCUSABLE.

It is clear that there can be no defense for this desolating and hazardous work. The dreadful story reveals no palliating feature. Had the cooperation of the people been sought in just enterprises, reasonably conducted, they would have been found willing allies. These peoples of Central Africa are not unamenable to gentle influences. Mr. Glave writes of his observations in one section invaded by the raid of rubber: "Everywhere the natives are friendly and polite. They are not lazy good-for-nothing people. Their fine powers are obtained by hard work, sobriety, frugal living." And again, in almost the last words written before his death, he says: "The methods employed by the Government are not necessary. Years ago, when I was on duty at the equator without soldiers, I never had any difficulty in getting what men I needed, nor did any other station in the old, humane days." He adds: "It is only the State officials who make war. Seldom do the traders (of the older class) have any trouble, and the missionaries never." (See Century Magazine, vol. 54, p. 714.)

THE GROUND OF MISSIONARY ACTION.

Our interest as missionary organizations in the record we have been presenting is due not alone to desire for advancement for the special work in which we are engaged, though this work, in its beginnings antecedent to the founding of the Kongo State, was formally recognized in the action of the Berlin conference, and in the proclamations of the King, as essential to realization of the philanthropic aims for which professedly the State was established. Our missionaries have sought, to quote the language of the Berlin agreement, "the moral and material well-being of the native population." What the State has failed to do they have endeavored to do. They have reduced languages to writing. They have taught the people. They are establishing schools. They are developing useful arts; and they are seeking to supplant the gross superstitions and inhumanities of the people by Christian beliefs and practices. This work, which the State had engaged to encourage and support, is sadly impeded by the conditions now developed.

Our complaint is not a personal one. Our missionaries personally have not been ill used. Yet we have definite complaint as respects the security of missionary work, which, as furnishing a definite instance of the failure of the State to regard its treaty obligations, we have submitted to the State Department of our Government. Lands, withheld in general from private purchasers, are denied to our representatives. Within the past four years it has been found quite impossible to purchase land or to secure leases of land for more than a very limited period of time. Thus the guaranty of permanence essential for the development of our work is destroyed. Our Government's treaty with the Kongo State definitely secured to missionary organizations the right to build, and thus implicitly the right to buy land upon which to build. While sales of land are refused, the law forbids that a missionary shall remain for more than fifteen days in any place in which he does not hold a title to land. Thus the stay of missionaries in the country practically is threatened. Our missionaries, moreover, at certain stations, becoming increasingly numerous, are forbidden to buy supplies from the people, even the sale of food products by the natives being prohibited; they must bring these to the State agents. The missionary would gladly buy of the natives at a fair price, but this privilege is denied him. Our missionaries, thus forced to depend on the station posts for all food supplies, are made involuntary abettors of the wrong practiced upon the people.

In other ways also the work our representatives would gladly accomplish for the uplifting of the people is thwarted. The people, terrorized, flee from the approach of the unknown foreigner. The missionary in his touring finds villages vacated and leveled to the ground. The periodical flights of the people in certain districts render continuity of work impossible, and the total extermination of the people, accomplished now in several sections, obviously is fatal to the purpose represented by the missionary's presence in the land. The humane aims of missionary effort, philanthropic and Christian, are hindered and defeated through the opposing blighting influence by which the land is desolated.

But a larger reason influences our representatives and ourselves in this appeal, that of regard for a people suffering from dreadful inhumanities. Those whose residence in the country gives them knowledge of these wrongs can not remain silent without guilt. Repeated representations made to the Kongo Government by our missionaries having proved ineffectual; they and we are compelled by motives of common humanity and by regard for justice to bring our appeal to a higher resort.

THE MISSIONARY A REFUGE FOR A HUNTED PEOPLE.

The missionary can not escape direct relation to this issue. The appeal of the people is constantly pressed upon him. Men, women, and children flee to the missions seeking protection. A white officer, unacquainted with the missionary whom he was addressing, after a cruel raid jokingly remarked that he had killed many people and secured a fine lot of curios. He said that while his soldiers were firing upon the villages the people ran wildly about crying, "Sheppite! Sheppite!" It was their name for Rev. W. H. Sheppard, the associate of Mr. Morrison, whom they were beseeching to come to their aid. The motive actuating our missionaries and ourselves, as we bring to you our request, is embodied in a sentence of a letter addressed by Rev. J. H. Weeks, of the English Baptist Missionary Society, to officials in the Kongo Government: "I deeply regret having to write this letter to you, but I can not sit quietly and see these unfortunate folk crushed out of existence by oppression and cruelty without making a protest in the name of religion and of humanity."

FUTILITY OF APPEAL TO THE STATE GOVERNMENT.

We think it will be clear to you that the case which we thus bring to your attention is one demanding the intervention of those responsible for the founding of the Independent State of the Kongo. May we urge that you will not fail to note that appeal to the Government of that State would not meet fittingly the requirements of the case? In responsibility for the conditions now prevailing in this stricken land obviously the Government is involved, and it is scarcely appropriate to ask an alleged offender to make inquiry as to his own wrongdoing. The testimony to the existence of wrongs is testimony also to indisposition in the Government to remedy these wrongs.

The possibilities belonging to appeal to the Kongo Government have already been exhausted. Delay in bringing the story of these enormities formally to the attention of western governments is attributable to unwillingness to believe that the facts could be known to the administration, and the hope that when known they would secure redress. But all reports, personal and official, private and public, if receiving any attention, have won at most only the renewal of professions of innocence and of disinterested and humane intentions. Investigations have not been so conducted as to satisfy the complainants. It is alleged that witnesses have been terrorized; indeed, the native dare not testify in a court whose highest authority is the government under which he suffers; he has no resort but a patient bearing of wrongs that he may avoid wrongs yet more dreadful. The victims of a shocking outrage, when told by an amazed visitor that they should complain to the State, replied: "We should not be believed; they would put us in chains at once;" and, when told they should carry the bodies of their murdered dead in canoes to the official, they replied: "We never could get past the sentries."

It is clear that, inasmuch as it is part of the testimony of the witnesses in the case that complaints have been made often to Government only to be disregarded; that the so-called investigations have been an evasion; that, indeed, the system to which the Government is definitely and persistently committed is the fons et origo of the evils, these testimonials will have received the attention due them only when provision is made for investigation by a power external to the State. All replies proffered by the Government of the Independent State of the Kongo to the accusations made against it essentially are this: "The accusations are false." The question of the truth or falsity of the charges is the question at issue, and inquiry impartially conducted from without offers the one rational method for reaching a just answer to this question.

INTERPOSITION A RIGHT OF THE POWERS.

The right of the nations to interpose for the suppression of these evils seems clear. It has indeed been claimed by the Government of the Kongo State, as, for example, in reply to the note of the British Government, that while the State was created by international action, having been created, it is a sovereign power, responsible only to itself for the administration of its internal affairs. If this claim were sound, it would be true that the action of the powers at Berlin, which gave the King a sovereignty unlimited by internal restraint, created the one wholly autocratic and irresponsible government in all the civilized world. The validity of this claim of one man to a gift of so fabulous value, involving so sweeping sacrifice of the primitive rights of more than a score of millions of people and the allied rights of all mankind, can not be thought admissible. The question of gravest international concern is this: Is it true that a sovereign and absolute power was created at Berlin which is responsible only to itself, and that the pledges solemnly made to other powers, including our own Government, are binding only in so far as in its sovereign discretion it may choose so to consider them?

The Independent State of the Kongo acquired its international status by a formal acceptance of the provisions of the act of Berlin. This act is its charter, unique, and in its spirit as benignant as any known to the history of Christian civilization.

As President Cleveland in his message of December, 1885, recognized, "the Berlin convention laid down certain obligations purporting to be binding on the signatories." In the binding nature of these obligations the right and duty of subsequent supervision is involved. It is a fact of the highest importance that this right and duty were recognized distinctly in the report of a committee of the conference, in which it is said:

"With regard to these native populations the conference must assume the position of an official guardian. The necessity of insuring the preservation of the natives, the duty of helping them to obtain a higher and better political and social status, the obligation to instruct them and initiate them into the advantages of civilization are unanimously recognized." But, in addition to these declarations of the purpose of the conference, it is also true that the Berlin agreement makes definite reservation of the right of revision of that agreement as belonging to the powers represented in the conference. Article 36 of the general act of Berlin provides:

"The signatory powers of the present general act reserve to themselves the right to introduce into it subsequently and by common accord such modifications and improvements as experience may show to be expedient."

It is furthermore true that the appeal made by the Government of the Independent State of the Kongo to the conference at Brussels in the year 1890 for authorization for the imposing of import duties involved definite concessions on the part of that State of right of supervision and revision as belonging to the parties creating it. If the State might without impropriety violate in respect of other features the compact made in the Berlin act, it might without impropriety disregard its prohibition of import duties.

Concession of right implicitly involves an admission of obligation. The great treaty powers have continuing rights as supervisors and directors in the enterprise conducted by the King. The King is their trustee to execute the powers conferred by the treaty and is answerable to them for the use of the powers intrusted to him. Is it too much to say that the great powers of the West are under obligation to communicate with the ruler of the Independent State of the Kongo concerning the statements relating to his rule, apparently so thoroughly supported, and to take such measures as will guarantee to these unhappy people the rights established for them in the treaty of Berlin?

RELATION OF OUR OWN GOVERNMENT TO THIS RESPONSIBILITY AND RIGHT.

This right and responsibility, belonging to other nations, we trust will be recognized as belonging to our own American Government. We are not signatories of the act of the Berlin conference. Does this fact deny to us the right of action at the present juncture? We think this position must be regarded as indefensible.

It may, we think, justly be held that the sacred primal right of membership in the family of states in itself would justify inquiry and protest under the laws of nations.

The foremost part borne by us in the recognition and practical creation of the Kongo State can not be regarded as without bearing upon the question of our relation to the present situation.

Our presence in the conference at Berlin and our implicit indorsement of its action, which fell short of a technical ratification only because of considerations of a technical nature, further accentuates our interest in a just discharge of its pledged obligations by the Government of the Kongo State.

The right involved in full participation in the conference at Brussels belongs to our Government. The charges made against the Independent State of the Kongo involve disloyalty to the understanding and the definite declarations of that conference as they involve disloyalty to the conference at Berlin.

Furthermore, obviously the right of a party to a treaty is ours. Our treaty of 1891 secures to us definitely the right of freedom of trade, the right of all citizens to reside and build in the state. And this treaty furthermore formally secures to us all rights of the signatories of the Berlin agreement and the rights conceded to the most favored nation. It is these rights which by common report are violated by the deeds and claims of the Government of the Independent State of the Kongo.

We would ask your attention to certain specific provisions of the Brussels agreement and of our existing treaty with the Kongo State. We are convinced that, if indorsing the position that this right belongs to our Government, you will hold that in our case also the right involves an obligation grave as the seriousness of the wrongs to which it relates.

PREAMBLE.

Being equally actuated by the firm intention of putting an end to the crimes and devastation engendered by the traffic in African slaves, of efficiently protecting the aboriginal population of Africa, and of securing for that vast continent the benefits of peace and civilization:

ART. II, SECTION 1. These stations shall have the following subsidiary duties:

1. To support and, if necessary, to serve as a refuge for the native population, * * * to initiate them in agricultural labor and in the industrial arts, so as to increase their welfare, to raise them to civilization and bring about the extinction of barbarous customs. * * *

2. To give aid and protection to commercial enterprises, * * * and to prepare the way for the foundation of permanent centers of cultivation and of commercial settlements.

3. To protect, without distinction of creed, the missions which are already or that may hereafter be established.

ART. V. The contracting powers pledge themselves * * * to enact * * * a law rendering applicable on the one hand the provisions of their penal laws concerning grave offenses against the person to those organizing and abetting slave hunting, to those guilty of mutilating male adults and children, and to all persons taking part in the capture of slaves by violence. * * *

From our treaty of 1891 we make these quotations:

"ARTICLE I. There shall be full, entire, and reciprocal liberty of commerce, establishment, and navigation between the citizens and inhabitants of the two high contracting parties.

"The citizens and inhabitants of the United States of America in the Independent State of the Kongo and those of the Independent State of the Kongo in the United States of America shall have reciprocally the right, on conforming to the laws of the country, to enter, travel, and reside in all parts of their respective territories, to carry on business there. * * *

"They can freely exercise their industry or their business, as well wholesale as retail, in the whole extent of the territories. * * *

"In like manner they will enjoy reciprocally the treatment of the most-favored nation in all that relates to rights, privileges, exemptions, and immunities whatsoever concerning their persons or their property and in the matter of commerce, industry, and navigation. * * *

"ART. IV. The citizens and inhabitants of the two countries shall enjoy in the territory of the other a full and entire liberty of conscience. They shall be protected in the free exercise of their worship. They shall have the right to erect religious edifices and to organize and maintain missions."

We would ask also that, in view of the provision of our treaty which concedes to us all rights accorded to the most-favored nation, the language of the Anglo-Kongo convention of 1884 be taken into consideration:

"They shall have the right of buying, of selling, of letting, and of hiring lands and buildings, mines, and forests situated within the said territories, and of founding houses of commerce." (Art. II, Anglo-Kongo convention.)

We would respectfully call your attention to the fact that besides those forms of procedure by which international inquiry and interposition may be promoted, a definite line of action is opened for our Government by Article XIII of our treaty with the Independent State of the Kongo. This provision reads: "In case a difference should arise between the two high contracting parties as to the validity, interpretation, obligation, or enforcement of any of the provisions contained in the present treaty, and it could not be arranged amicably by diplomatic correspondence between the two Governments, these last agree to submit it to the judgment of an arbitration tribunal, the decision of which they bind themselves to respect and execute loyally." By this provision, if in no better way, the question as to the consistency with treaty obligations of the fundamental system established in the Independent State of the Kongo may reach a definite, judicial decision.

THE GRAVITY OF THE OBLIGATION.

The obligation resting upon us as a government seems to us a grave and solemn one. The position of our Government is such that it can act without suspicion of unworthy motive and with influence indefinitely great. And independently of the demand for protection for a helpless people, a question is at stake which is of commanding moral and political interest. May a state appropriate for its own aggrandizement the land, the products, all the emoluments of a vast national territory? It is the issue of the closed door—closed against the people of the house and against the people of all lands. If the coming together of the powers were not demanded by need for inquiry into reported abuses, it would seem amply justified by the necessity for international judgment upon the astounding claim represented by the Government of the Independent State of the Kongo.

And the issue relates not simply to the Belgian-Kongo rule; it relates to the Belgian-Kongo theory. The evil practice of the Kongo State is infectious. Proofs of this are not wanting in other African territory. Shall this practice be further developed and the world's fields be appropriated for selfish aggrandizement? The menace is a serious one to the commercial interests of our Government and of all governments. The need is urgent that calm consideration and resolute action shall put upon this theory the stamp of international disapprobation and abhorrence. We believe that this is not a time when America can afford to keep silent. We are convinced that our Government would scarcely be willing that such an issue should be determined without its participation in deliberation and action.

It has been held, and with reason, that the Independent State of the Kongo should prove a second China as a market for the absorption of manufactured goods. Already rich areas are almost hopelessly impaired, and the depopulation of the land and the incitement of a brooding hatred in the hearts of the people threaten irrecoverable loss of the wealth rightfully belonging to the world.

It is on these high grounds we would bring to you our appeal—on the ground of concern for high political principles; on the ground of the rights of our citizens who would be branded as common thieves if they were to attempt in the Kongo State exercise of their just rights in respect of trade; on the ground of righteous protest against the violation of pledges solemnly given; above all, on the ground of that humane interest in the well-being of mankind which influenced our Government in its recognition of the Independent State of the Kongo and which increasingly is characteristic of its action in the parliament of the nations.

OUR REQUEST.

We therefore pray your honorable bodies that you will take such action as seems to you most fitting for the promotion of a strict and impartial inquiry into present conditions in the Independent State of the Kongo—through a tribunal external to the State—and that you will follow this action with such other action as may be found necessary and appropriate for the correction of the evils from which that State is suffering. We are convinced that by every worthy consideration related to the case this course is commended. Reports of alleged wrongs certainly are sufficient in volume and definiteness to justify inquiry. The Government of the State itself should desire such investigation for the vindication of its good name if it be unjustly aspersed. The action asked by us, moreovor, we are persuaded is favored by that instinctive love of just government and that compassion for helpless sufferers to which as a nation we are committed by the traditions of our past and by the generous sentiment and impulse of our people.

Respectfully submitted in behalf of the Conference of Missionary Societies.

DOCUMENT I.—Statement of Rev. J. B. Murphy.

[From London Times, November 18, 1895.]

The attitude of the natives of the Kongo Free State is everywhere unfriendly, and if the people do not universally rebel against authority it is because they are reduced to a state of despair. If possible they leave the territory. Two of the most flourishing towns in Mr. H. M. Stanley's time, situated at Stanley Pool, viz, Kintama and Kinshasa, are now no more, and the people have gone over to the French Kongo. Besides the natives of the towns I have named, many people have left the main river and gone into the interior in order to escape the arbitrary demands of the State. Difficulties had arisen, too, between the State and the porters, and as the requisite number of carriers were not forthcoming detachments of soldiers were sent with orders to capture all the women they could find.

I have been in the interior and have seen the ravages made by the State in pursuit of this iniquitous trade. In one place I stood by the side of the river and heard a little boy describe how he had seen the Belgians shoot people for not fetching rubber, and at the same time he pointed to the flagstaff to which the poor victims had been tied, and which still bore the bullet and blood marks. One day a State corporal, who was in charge of the post of Solifa, was going round the town collecting rubber. Meeting a poor woman whose husband was away fishing, he asked, "Where is your husband?" She answered by pointing to the river. He then asked, "Where is his rubber?" She answered, "It is ready for you." Whereupon he said, "You lie," and, lifting up his gun, shot her dead. Shortly afterwards the husband returned and was told of the murder of his wife. He then went straight to the corporal, taking with him his rubber, and asked why he had shot his wife. The wretched man then raised his gun and killed the corporal. The soldiers ran away to the headquarters of the State and made representations of the case, with the result that the commissary sent a large force to support the authority of the soldiers; the town was looted, burnt, and many people were killed and wounded.

Upon another occasion in the same month some soldiers ran away from a State steamer, and, it was said, went to the town of Bombumba. The officer sent a message telling the chief of the town to give them up. He answered that he could not, as the fugitives had not been in his town. The officer sent the messenger a second time with the order, "Come to me at once or war in the morning." The next morning the old chief went to meet the Belgians and was attacked without provocation. He himself was wounded, his wife was killed before his eyes, and her head cut off in order that they might possess the brass necklet that she wore. Twenty-four of the chief's people were also killed and all for the paltry reason given above.

Again, the people of Lake Mantumba ran away on account of the cruelty of the State, and the latter sent some soldiers in charge of a colored corporal to treat with them and induce them to return. On the way the troops met a canoe containing seven of the fugitives. Under some paltry pretext they made the people land, shot them, cut off their hands, and took them to the commissary. The Mantumba people complained to the missionary at Irebu, and he went down to see if the story was true. He ascertained the case to be just as they had narrated, and found that one of the seven was a little girl, who was not quite dead. The child recovered, and she lives to-day, the stump of the handless arm witnessing against this horrible practice. These are only a few things of many that have taken place in one district.

The natives in inland towns are, as a matter of custom, asked whether they are willing to gather india rubber. The question put to them is not, "Will you live at peace together? Will you acknowledge the Kongo government?" It is, "Will you work india rubber?" Well, many of the people are killed, and they try suddenly to disband, and refuse to bring the india rubber. Then war is declared. The soldiers are sent in different directions. The people in the towns are attacked, and when they are running away into the forest and try to hide themselves and save their lives, they are found out by the soldiers. Then their gardens of rice are destroyed and their supplies taken. Their plantains are cut down while they are young and not in fruit, and often their huts are burned, and, of course, everything of value is taken.

Within my own knowledge 45 villages were altogether burned down. I say altogether, because there were many others partly burned down. I passed through 28 abandoned villages. The natives had left their places to go farther inland, In order to separate themselves from the white men they go part of the way down the river, or else they cross the river into French territory. Sometimes the natives are obliged to pay a large indemnity. The chiefs often have to pay with brass wire and slaves, and if the slaves do not make up the amount their wives are sold to pay. I was told that by a Belgian officer. Native sentinels—who, of course, are the sentries referred to by Consul Pickersgill—are placed in the villages. The sentinels see that the other natives work. They are forced to build large houses for these sentinels, and have to leave their places and try to find other places farther away. The sentinels themselves have told me this. I have been in the towns and seen it myself. In the morning the sentinels will go to and fro in the towns to see that no man stays behind. Only a few slaves are allowed to stay at home besides the women and children. Often they say that they have been told by a commissary that if they saw a man staying behind in the village they must shoot him.

I will give you an instance of a man I saw shot right before my eyes. In one of my inland journeys, when I had gone a little farther, perhaps, than the commissary expected me to go, I saw something that perhaps he would not have liked me to see. It was at a town called Ibera, one of the cannibal towns to which no white man had ever been before. I reached it at sunset after the natives had returned from the various places in which they had been looking for india rubber. They gathered together in a great crowd, being curious to see a white man. Besides, they had heard I had some good news to tell them which came through the gospel.

When that large crowd gathered, and I was just ready to preach, the sentinels rushed in among them to seize an old man. They dragged him aside a little from the crowd, and the sentinel in charge came to me and said, "I want to shoot this man because he has been in the river fishing to-day; he has not been on the river for india rubber." I told him, "I have not authority to stop you, because I have nothing to do with these palavers, but the people are here to hear what I have to say to them, and I don't want you to do it before my eyes." He said, "All right, I will keep him in bounds then until to-morrow morning when you have gone; then I will kill him." But a few minutes afterwards the sentinel came in a rage to the man and shot him, right before my eyes. Then he charged his rifle again and pointed it at the others, who all rushed away like chaff before the wind. He told a little boy, 8 or 9 years of age, to go and cut off the right hand of the man who had been shot. The man was not quite dead, and when he felt the knife he tried to drag his hand away. The boy, after some labor, cut the hand off and laid it by a fallen tree. A little later this hand was put on a fire to smoke before being sent to the commissary.

All except the old chiefs, etc., are forced to go away and work rubber. It is very difficult for the natives to get it. It has been difficult from the very beginning. They have to wade in marshes. I have seen them often when they passed. They have knives in their hands and they cut until the sap drops, drop by drop, and they stand in the water. It is difficult for them to work close to their own towns, but as they have to bring a large amount they have to cut the trees constantly until they dry up. Then they go to another place, and by-and-by they will have to go still farther inland, where the State is not yet fighting the natives, and they have to stay away many days at a time.

The sentinel told me that the natives there are not able to carry any food with them, and it often happens that they stay away for days at a time and that they die in the marshes of fainting and starvation. The sentinels are from the wildest tribes. They were wild already, but when they get to this work they are many times worse. They are really small kings in the towns, and they often kill the people for the sake of india rubber. They often rob and steal and plunder, and take whatever they can get hold of. At the beginning, when I saw that, I told the commissary about it, but he turned in anger on me and, in the presence of the soldiers, said that he would expel me from the town if I meddled with matters of that kind any more.

If the rubber does not reach the full amount required the sentinels attack the natives. They kill some and bring the hands to the commissary. Others are brought to the commissary as prisoners. Hundreds are constantly taken down in large steamers. Lying in the steamers there are the dead bodies of prisoners who are being taken down to the coast. At the beginning they came with their smoked hands. The sentinels, or else the boys in attendance on them, put these hands on a little kiln, and after they had been smoked they by-and-by put them on the top of the rubber baskets. I have on many occasions seen this done.

At one time I went to an inland lake several miles wide; the natives told me

I was the first white man who had ever seen it. Under the shadows of palms and plantain I saw the villages. I saw somebody coming alone and looking at what was going on. As he met me he said, "What am I to do? The rubber does not reach a large amount; some of the people have run away, and those who are left refuse to bring the full amount." And then he told me the amount these people had to bring. The commissaries lower down the river do not know how many people there are in a village. They put on a small village as large an amount as on a big village. In this case it was impossible for the people to collect the required amount.

From this village I went on to another, where I met a man who pointed to a basket and said to me, "Look; I have only two hands." He meant there were not enough to make up for the rubber he had not brought. He had several prisoners tied to the trees. They were waiting to be taken away. When I came back some of the villages were in an uproar. The people were leaving their homes and rushing to the forest. When I reached the river I turned round and saw that the people had large hammocks, in which they were gathering the rubber to be taken to the commissary. I also saw smoked hands, and the prisoners waiting to be taken down to the commissary.

That is only one of the places in which these practices occur. There is a small island in a stream at Lake Mantumba. The people had not been able to bring the full amount of rubber. The officers with some soldiers went along there. Several of the natives were killed. I saw the dead bodies floating on the lake with the right hands off, and the officer told me when I came back why they had been killed. It was for the rubber. In fact, the officers have always freely told me about the many who were killed and always in connection with india rubber. In one village which I passed through I saw two or three men on the wayside quite recently killed—about an hour before. The sentinel, who had to oversee the gathering of the rubber, told me they had killed the men because they had not brought the rubber. When I crossed the stream I saw some dead bodies hanging down from branches in the water. As I turned my face away at the horrible sight one of the native corporals, who was following us down, said, "Oh, that is nothing; a few days ago I returned from a fight, and I brought the white man 160 hands, and they are thrown in the river."

At Lake Mantumba, later on in 1895, the natives, after they had begun to get india rubber close to the lake, found hostile tribes with poisoned arrows. The natives could not get far enough for their india rubber. Two or three days after a fight a dead mother was found with two of her children. The mother was shot and the right hand was taken off. On one side was the elder child, also shot, and the right hand also taken off. On the other side was the younger child, with the right hand cut off, but the child, still living, was resting against the dead mother's breast. This dark picture was seen by four other missionaries. I myself saw the child. The natives had begun to cut off the left hand, but, seeing their mistake, they left it and cut off the right hand instead.

If such punishment is in any case right, why not try to find out those who are really guilty, and who failed to gather the full amount of rubber? But to attack not only one village, but a whole set of villages, because one or two have failed to give their amount—that is one of the things we object to. The soldiers are sent out to attack a whole village instead of finding and punishing the guilty, if any are guilty. At the end of 1895 the commissary—all the people were gathering the rubber—said he had often told the sentinels not to kill the people. But on the 14th December a sentinel passed our mission station and a woman accompanied him, carrying a basket of hands. Mr. and Mrs. Banks, besides myself, went down the road, and they told the sentinel to put the hands on the road that they might count them. We counted 18 right hands smoked, and from the size of the hands we could judge that they belonged to men, women, and children.

We could not understand why these hands had been collected, as the commissary had given orders that no more natives were to be killed for their hands. On my last journey I discovered the secret. One Monday night a sentinal who had just returned from the commissary said to me, "What are the sentinels to do? When all the people are gathered together the commissary openly tells us not to kill any more people, but when the people have gone he tells us privately that if they do not bring plenty of india rubber we must kill some, but not bring the hands to him." Some sentinels, he told me, had been put in chains because they killed some natives who happened to be near a mission station, but it was only because he thought it might become known that the commissary, to justify himself, had put the men in chains.

I said to the sentinel, "You should obey the first command—never to kill any more." "The people," he answered, "unless they are frightened, do not bring in the rubber, and then the commissary flogs us with the hippopotamus hide, or else he puts us in chains, or sends us to Boma." The sentinel added that the commissary induced him to hide cruelty while letting it go on, and to do this in such a way that he might be justified in case it should become known and an investigation should be made. In such a case the commissary could say, "Why, I told him openly not to kill any more," and he might put the blame on the soldier to justify himself, though the blame and the punishment in all its force ought to have been put on himself after he had done such a terrible act in order to disguise or mislead justice. If the sentinels were puzzled about this message, what would the natives be?

One important fact happened on the Saturday before the sentinel told me about it. The chief informed the sentinel that he would report to the commissary that the sentinel had killed his father. But the sentinel said, "What could you do to me? I would simply tell the commissary that you had not brought rubber, and then he would put you in chains instead of me." "Oh," said the chief, "you have killed my father for nothing, but I will not go with you to the commissary," and then he went away from the village, from the place where the rubber was placed. But the sentinel caught the chief. He called some sentinels from other villages, and they forced him along and threw him down, some holding down the head, some the arms, and some other parts of the body, and they flogged him until the blood streamed down his back. Then they told the chief to stop in the camp. They pushed him, and a soldier took his gun and leveled it close to the chief's heart. The chief stood shivering with fear, and the sentinel said, "I can kill you if I like."

I have seen extracts from letters in which the writers have freely told about hundreds being killed, about hundreds of hands being brought by the sentinels, about hundreds of slaves being taken, and one of the State officials said to a resident agent, "I have 200 slaves here; do you want some?" Another agent told me that he had himself seen a State officer at one of the outposts pay a certain number of brass rods to the soldiers for a number of hands they had brought. One of the soldiers told me the same. That was about the time I saw the native killed before my own eyes. The soldier said, "Don't take this to heart so much. They kill us if we do not bring rubber. The commissary has promised us if we bring plenty of hands he will shorten our service. I have brought in plenty of hands already, and I expect my time of service will soon be finished."

DOCUMENT III.—Testimony of Rev. Joseph Clark.

"1. Forced military service in the State army."

Yes. On two occasions I have seen men compelled to leave this village for military service under the State. I have never known anyone volunteer for such service on the Upper Kongo. I do not insist that none do so, but I have not met any person who had done so.

"2. Compulsory service for which little or no compensation is given."

I know that women have been compelled to go regularly from this and other villages to the local State post to labor two days weekly. Though living in contact with the people, I never heard of one of them having received any pay for this weekly service. It was called a "labor tax." I frequently heard the people complaining among themselves that they did not receive even enough food. They generally blamed the soldiers for this, saying that they took and sold the food which they should have given to the women at work in the gardens.

I know that for any offense, however slight, natives have been without the form of a trial, put in "chain" and compelled to labor in carrying bricks and clay for the construction of State houses. I have seen men and women chained together by the neck, being driven by an armed soldier. A stick or the butt end of a rifle was being used to persuade them to go fast. They were supposed to be "criminals." For such work there is no pay no matter how long or how hard it may be. The soldiers and ordinary workmen are, I believe, properly paid.

"3. Exorbitant tribute required of the natives."

I know that in the past demands made by the white officers for rubber were the cause of very great trouble and hardship to the natives. When you remember that of old the white man in charge of a post received extra pay for rubber collected and for coffee planted, etc., you can understand why these local officials pressed the natives beyond reason.

"4. Grievous illtreatment of the natives by State officials for nonpayment of tribute."

Sometimes soldiers have been quartered on villages and made responsible for the collection of the "tax," and in those cases great wrong was done the people. I saw a chief report to an officer that the soldiers quartered in his village had stolen everthing that was worth stealing from him, and that they had forced his wives to live with them. This man was kicked off the veranda. A soldier was sent to a village partly to see that the people provided the fish demanded from them and partly for hunting. He treated the natives badly and at last shot one of the head men of the village. The body was placed in a canoe and taken to a state post and complaint made against him. As the people were on the way home with the body he met them and fired at them for having done this and fatally injured another man. I reported this and the man was arrested, but I never heard of either a trial or punishment for his offenses, and some time later he was at liberty. These are not recent events.

During this month we have had the following experiences: An officer has been in this district with about three dozen State soldiers. I have seen these soldiers striking inoffensive people within a few yards of the officer. Possibly he did not see what was going on, but he ought to have seen what his men were doing. I have seen a young boy, a scholar from the village, taken by one of the soldiers. He was in a canoe, and his friends fled on the approach of the soldier, but he, being a schoolboy, did not flee. He was taken prisoner on the plea, given me by the soldier, that he was from the district then at war with the State. So of course all the goods in the canoe were to be the prize of the soldier and his paddlers. He was at once set at liberty when I threatened to write to our local officer at Bikoro.

A woman of Ikoko was taken prisoner by the white man. She was kept one night and all the next day. There was no charge against her. A note was sent to the officer about her and he replied: "Je relâche avec plaisir la nommé, Longonda qui avait été prise comme ôtage." From whom the pledge was taken, or for whom she was held as a hostage does not appear, but she was set at liberty. I spoke on behalf of an old chief, who is a hard worker and who has been very ill. He was charged by the officer with having allowed the people, presumably enemies of the State, to flee with his canoes. I said that when the Ikoko people stampeded I had to place watchers at my beach to keep my canoes from being taken as a means of escape. He, too, was freed. Other five Ikoko people were tied up, but only one boy was taken away, and one man, who should have been resident in another place. These have both been released, as also other two, who were prisoners evidently without any definite charge against them.

I hear, but can not be certain of the truth, that in the campaign now closed 16 natives have been killed. Three only of that number were in or of the district that was to be punished for rebellion. Eight are of one village, 2 of another, and 3 are each from a separate place; but these 13 are not people of the district supposed to be at war with the State. Yet, when I said to the State officer that the Ikoko people were off to hide in the bush, he said, "They need have no fear. We are not at war with them." In spite of that statement by him, two or three of the headmen were arrested, and some others, of whom I saw three brought to him. They were released, but I saw the marks of the treatment they had received from the soldiers, and what they then experienced will insure their being "absent" the next time a strange officer comes here with men.

"5. State levies on villages for laborers and soldiers."

I have known of demands being made on villages for both workmen and soldiers. When you remember that in Belgium military service is compulsory this is not surprising.

"8. Domaine prive and monopolies."

It is unquestionably true that enormous tracts of country are set apart for "private domain" and for companies in which it is published that the King holds shares or from which he receives part of the profits. As to the King's sharing in the profits of these companies I can not write with certainty, but all know about the division of the country.

9. It is my opinion that unless great changes are made in the management of the State the Protestant missions have poor prospects for extension of their work; also that owing to the lack of trust in the government the native is hard to reach. His mind is not at rest. He has no desire for the improvement of his surroundings. He will not make a good house or make large gardens because that will give the State a greater hold on him. His wife refuses to become a mother because she will not be able to run away in case of an attack. Twice this week the people of Ikoko have been rushing off to the "bush" to hide on the approach of a large canoe with soldiers. With the natives around us in this unsettled state it is no wonder that our work is difficult. We can not put native teachers out any distance from our station into the interior because of the unrest and uncertainty.

DOCUMENT IV.—Testimony of Rev. A. Billington.

"1. Forced military service in the State army."

I have not known of any being forced into military service from this district, but I have heard of it in other districts, and believe it to be true. What is known as the Vankerkhaven expedition took some forty men from this district; each village was forced to supply a certain number, very few of whom have ever returned. These men were used for fighting and carrying. The object of this expedition seems to have been to exhibit the power of the State, which was done by the use of cartridges and fire. Most of the villages of this and other districts were destroyed. One asked the chief of the expedition: "How will you furnish your men with food?" "With cartridges," was the reply. Even if he intended it for a joke, it unfortunately contained much truth.

"2. Compulsory service for which little or no compensation is given."

"3. Exorbitant tribute required of the natives."

Men are forced from this district to cut wood at the "wood posts." They are first applied for, and if they do not present themselves, a soldier or soldiers are sent, who tie up the women, or the chiefs, until the workmen are forthcoming. The first of our Christians from the village of Bwemba has recently been to prison because he had no man to give, and after some ten days carrying water, etc., his friends hired a man for 750 brass rods, value £1-10-0. Woodcutters are fed and paid a fair wage, but sometimes much is kept back in fines, but they probably make up all deficiencies by plundering passing canoes and talking palavers. If a man falls sick another is demanded to fill his place at once.

All natives in villages around about us are compelled to work on the telegraph path, but this only means one or two days in a month. A small pay is promised and is sometimes paid, but not always. A white man who superintends this part of the line told us last week that he had received nothing since May, in last year, to pay those who clean the path. Many walk 20 miles from their villages and do their part without the slightest pay, as it is all swallowed up by the Kapitas near at hand. Speaking generally, Kapitas are bad men and the poor natives suffer much at their hands. The women are compelled to make "bingwele," mandioca puddings, which are paid for at about one-third of the marketable value. This food has to be carried in canoes from 2 miles to 10 miles (day's work for two or three persons; for the further villages every six days, for which nothing is paid). . Chiefs are called, at the will of the official in charge, 30 miles to his station with no remuneration. Villagers, both men and women, who live near to State stations are called at any time to hoe the ground, etc., without any pay being given except now and again a spoonful of salt.

"4. Grievous illtreatment of the natives by State officials and soldiers for nonpayment of tribute."

We have known natives to be cruelly beaten at the wood posts near us for not bringing the proper size of pudding, or not having boiled it enough, and then to be kept to work a day or two as well; all this, of course, by a native Kapita, and we have seen the marks of much worse cruelty higher up river.

"6. Refusal to Protestant missions of land grants for new missions stations."

We applied for land east of Kifwa some months ago, but the governor-general could hold out no hope. We also applied for the new site for Kifwa, but no grant has yet been made. Mr. Grenfell of the Baptist Missionary Society applied for land beyond the Aruwimi River, but it has been refused. The Congo Bolo Mission tried again and again to get land up the Junpa River some three years ago, but never could get it.

"7. The system of short-term leases, with possible refusal to renew."

We have heard of leases being offered to traders for a term of years, and I think such a course would be very undesirable for a mission, especially if there is no change in the general management and spirit of the State.

"8. Domaine privé and monopolies."

Monopolies are no secret in the Congo State, and the various companies publish from time to time their names and dividends.

"9. The prospect for Protestant missions under the Protestant régime."

The present régime is a great wrong to the natives; neither liberty nor poverty nor life are secure, and thus it is a great hindrance to our work, and should the present movement in England and America fail in bringing about a change for the better we shall expect greater hindrances and difficulties.

DOCUMENT V.—Testimony of Rev. C. L. Whitman.

"1. Forced military service in the State army."

It is commonly reported that the "force publique," the Kongo State army is made up largely of prisoners, taken either by the State or by tribes allied with the State. Other men are put in chains when their villages fail to bring in the required tribute, and are forced into the army. On this pretext some men have been taken from Ikoko.

"2. Compulsory service for which little or no compensation is given."

There is no doubt about this. Our nearest State post and plantation, Bikoro, has several hundred workmen, most of whom were brought from far away districts, having been taken from their homes as prisoners on various pretexts. Most of them are probably well fed, but I saw a score or more working in chains, and was informed that their diet was only the native bread, "quanga," and water. These were men from the near-by villages, imprisoned because their people had not brought the required tribute. Their pay consists of rations and a small allowance for cloth, or of cloth. At one time the Ikoko women were required to work at Bikoro two days a week, and for this they received absolutely nothing, if reports are to be believed.

"3. Exorbitant tribute required of the natives."

Yes. The rubber tax is the most severe, as often the natives have to go long distances for the rubber, and on the journey their lives are in constant danger, because of the climate and the attacks of hostile tribes. This was once the case with the villages about the lake (Ntumba), and even now the State demand for food supplies is so great as to drain the entire lake district, often leaving the natives without sufficient food for themselves and discouraging all attempts to plant extensive gardens, to keep goats or more than a few fowls, or to engage in other forms of productive industry. For the last two months six to ten Ikoko men have been in chains at Bikoro because the high water has made it difficult for the Ikoko people to bring in the full amount of fish tax.

"4. Grievous illtreatment of the natives by State officials for nonpayment of tribute."

Yes. Some six years ago, during the rubber-tax wars, many villages were burned. Many of the people fled to the French side of the Kongo; others were either killed or died from exposure. Many hands were cut off; for a long time one of the handless victims made his headquarters here at Ikoko. Just recently some of our brethren of the English Baptist Missionary Society saw some native troops, commanded by two white officers, attacking an inoffensive up-river village. The black soldiers were cutting up the bodies of the slain and were carrying away the pieces, and this in full view of the white officers. In this case a near-by village, not the one attacked, had failed to pay the State tribute.

Only last week a State officer with 35 soldiers passed through Ikoko on his way to punish a tribe some 10 miles back for nonpayment of the food tax. On his arrival he found that most of the people had run away, but he killed three, and burned a few houses. On his way back, on the groundless suspicion that they had given the alarm to their neighbors, he attacked another village (one which had always met the State's demands), killed 10 people, and carried off all movable property in sight. The chief of another loyal village was taken and cruelly maltreated, and the soldiers were ordered even to kill him. This because his people, in sheer fright, had gotten out of the way of the soldiers. At Ikoko the villagers ran away on his approach, and but for Mr. Clark they would have been pursued and attacked on the pretext that they were fugitives from the village he had been sent to punish.

"5. State levies on villages for laborers and soldiers."

That is the common report, but I do not know the methods taken to secure them other than above indicated.

"6. Refusal to Protestant missions of land grants for new mission stations."

I have heard of several applications for land grants for new mission stations that have been refused. The refusals were to Protestant societies only. There are indications that the Catholics are getting all they ask for along this line.

"7. The system of short-term leases with possible refusal to renew."

I understand that Mr. Grenfell, of the Baptist Missionary Society, was offered a site for a new station, the lease to be for the rest of his life. This is the only definite case I know of. The probabilities against renewal are now so strong that, in my opinion, it would be extremely unwise for any Protestant mission society to accept any offer for a short-term lease.

"8. Domaine prive and monopolies."

Yes, undoubtedly. Repeated reports come to us of the doings of the companies operating in the various districts. They carry things with a high hand, so that often the[a] agents incur charges of cruelty surpassing that of the State officers. The Lac Ntumba district is included in that part of the "domaine prive" not granted to any company. In former years this district was exploited for rubber, with the result that through war, exposure, and flight, two-thirds to three-fourths of the population has disappeard. The rubber tax is no longer imposed upon the survivors, but instead they are required to bring to the State posts large quantities of food supplies for which they receive little or no pay. If a village is able to gather or make other things, as for instance, gum copal, or baskets, these also are demanded on the same terms. Naturally, the ambition of the people is paralyzed, as they would receive no reward for their labor.

It may rightly be said there is no trade above Stanley Pool. Theoretically it is not prohibited, but practically all products of the soil, and the animals of the forests and the fish of the waters as well, are held to belong to the King or to the companies he has chartered. The natives are forbidden to sell any of these things, therefore they have nothing to buy with; and if they should happen to sell any prohibited article, the men who have the temerity to buy it are considered as thieves and treated accordingly. This procedure has crushed out all legitimate trade about Stanley Pool; the only business done is the exportation of the products of the soil gathered by the State or by its subsidiary companies, and the distribution of a few pieces of cloth or valueless trinkets among the natives as a sort of mock payment for their services in collecting rubber, food, etc. Even at Stanley Pool the State has begun to pay its workmen in cloth instead of money, and it will be only a matter of time when the English, German, and Portuguese merchants there will be obliged to close their doors, for the simple reason that the native population will have nothing to buy goods with.

"9. The prospect for Protestant missions under the present régime."

The prospect is not roseate at present; our chief hope is that the Kongo State will become a Belgian colony, and that a regularly organized system of courts and laws, administered by civilians, will take the place of the present despotic military régime, of which King Leopold is the head.

DOCUMENT VI.—Testimony of Edwin A. Layton, M. D.

Early in the year 1897 the Foreign Christian Missionary Society sent two representatives to found a mission in the Kongo Independent State. After seeing and selecting sites, applications were made in usual form for the necessary leave to locate, erect buildings, and organize a mission. Every effort met with exasperating delay or definite refusal without apparent good reason, so that the better part of two years passed with no prospect of success. At that time a station of the American Baptist Missionary Union at Bolengi, Upper Kongo, was transferred to this society and subsequently no further applications were made for mission sites pending the fruitless negotiations of the Baptist Missionary Society and the Kongo Bololo Mission and others, all of which could bring much stronger pressure to bear upon the State authorities. While, therefore, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society was attracted to this part of Africa by the inviting terms of the treaty of Berlin, specifying, as it does, that "the right to build edifices for religious purposes and to organize religious missions of every creed shall be subject to no restriction or impediment whatsoever," this society has been unable to gain a foothold at all in the Kongo Independent State in full six years' time.

The writer, Edwin A. Layton, M. D., and wife, resided during the later months of 1901, during 1902, and 1903 at Bolengi, near Coquilhatville, the capital of Equator district, upper Kongo country. My work as a medical missionary has taken me to all the villages round about and perhaps 100 miles into the interior; to the northern shores of Lake Mantumba; as far up the Kongo River as Monsembe; the entire length of the Lolanga River, and up the Lopori to Bongandanga. Having been on the ground and myself seen victims of atrocious acts, cruelties, and oppression resulting from forced labor and an unjust taxation, undoubted signs of devastation and depopulation, and having either witnessed or met numerous native witnesses to various administrative abuses, I can testify to the correctness of statements made by Consul Casement in his report, by Mr. E. V. Sjöblom, Mr. and Mrs. Banks,[a] and by several English missionaries. At the present time, however, I wish to speak more specifically of conditions in and about Bolengi.

The poor people of this section are broken spirited and poverty striken by an arbitrary and oppressive system of taxation. While admitting the good professions of the Government, no philanthropic person can be in Kongo without seeing and speaking of the really ruinous results of the present régime. Many years ago the people were taxed cassava bread (kwanga), fish, fresh meat, and fowls. This provision tax was probably fixed according to the population and the "payment" fixed at the then current prices, namely, one brass rod (equivalent to one cent) for each ration of bread, fish, etc. To my knoweldge this has never been adjusted to the changed and ever-changing conditions caused by death or removal from any cause—there has been an obvious decrease in population—by the scarcity of native food stuffs or the marked advance in value. Thus, in course of time, the "taxes" have come to be very unequally apportioned and increasingly burdensome.

A close acquaintance with the conditions shows the cogency of the natives' contention that they are no less than slaves to the State. And as slaves, I have observed, they must sometimes "make bricks without straw," as when one must furnish fish weekly the year around, and he can catch fish only at certain seasons. Then one is forced to buy in other parts, paying, in this day, ten to forty times what will be received in return at the State post. To meet these obligations, A——, of W——, one of the remaining few of a once large family, had to pawn, i. e., sell into slavery a younger member of his family. He often had to buy fish at the market value of 30 or 40 brass rods a ration, which he must deliver to the State for the nominal sum of 1 rod a ration. He was never given any voice in the matter. The time required for the preparation of the provision tax extends, on the average, over several days of each week. A band of people from the village of B——, mostly boys and girls, carrying baskets of food weighing 40 or 50 pounds, having passed over indescribably bad roads, rested at our mission the night of the fourth day of their journey to Coquilhatville—and all this in the mere act of delivering the food tax when once prepared. I saw a canoe full of fish—300 rations, they told me—leaving a village of a half dozen huts near the mouth of the Mobangi River, for Coquilhatville, which was three days' hard paddling upstream.

B—— was at one time a populous village on the banks of the Kongo. Many had died, and a few fled from fear, so that the number of inhabitants was so reduced that I could find but two responsible men with their families. These still bore the original assessment of 50 rations of kwanga and 20 of fish. So far as I could see they spent all their time working out their taxes and they never ceased to appeal for relief, but with no avail. L——, the headman, showed me the wheals from the cruel chicotte when a shortage occurred and told of threats of the chain. At one time this village was ordered to clear the roadway a certain distance for the telegraph line, which, under the circumstances, was clearly an impossible task for them. They demurred. When nothing was done L—— was sent for, but was afraid to go. A soldier was then sent to compel him to appear with a pacifying present of 10,000 brass rods or be thrown immediately into chains. The matter was now in the hands of the civil officer. I tried to intercede for L——. The judge stated he could not receive the statement of a white man, as he would feel bound to act accordingly, and so could not give an impartial verdict.(?) The fine stood and L—— succeeded in paying it by pawning one of his women and by help of friends. I believe, however, the work was never done.

Besides the provision tax the villages are required to furnish firewood for brick-kilns or steamers, roof mats for the State buildings, to work on the telegraph line, men for the public force, and laborers for the State plantations. The village of Bolengi worked several weeks clearing the way for the telegraph line, building and repairing bridges, and when the chief, I ——, reported the work as completed he received 300 brass rods as a personal present. Bolengi and other villages had to furnish firewood, which, owing to the ravages of the "white ant," was difficult to obtain. The wood was due at the State post every Sunday and required every available canoe for its transport. A considerable number of the children necessarily engaged in this work, and, moreover, were often held by the State as "hostages," because of delinquencies or deficits.

These matters seriously interfered with attendance at school and at Sunday services. It was almost impossible to have school at Wangatta when at least half the children were wading and searching the swamps daily for "ndele" leaves with which to make roof mats for the State. Their provision tax was payable Sunday. Religious meetings were almost out of the question in the presence of several armed sentries before whom the hundreds of rations of food and brass rods, in payment of heavy fines, were being stacked up.

Itinerating in the interior, I found the people invariably in a state of intimidation. Entering a village unarmed and cautiously, all who could would flee to the forest. As soon, however, as they were assured that the visitor was not a State officer, they were ready to return and laugh at their sudden fear and fight. Bad roads were made worse for purposes of defense. Meeting with intertribal warfare, I found that the only people killed NOT death by means of modern firearms.

Villages along the rivers, the paths of commerce, are rapidly being depopulated. Of course, the death rate is high; but all who can, get away as far as possible into the interior. Under my own observation two villages became wholly extinct. Where a few years ago Inganda presented solid rows of houses extending for miles, there are now but a few scattered and miserable huts. They are so used to being robbed that they reason it is better to have nothing, so as to have nothing to lose. Hence the native arts, as the hewing of canoes, are being lost. A most galling thing about the provision tax is that it is needed for and extorted by a savage soldiery who are privileged to pillage and plunder, to murder and to mutilate. The character of these "soldiers" is made clear not alone by observation, but by the honest confessions of several which I have heard. The people of M—— have not forgotten the wanton attack made upon them, and there are witnesses who saw the human hands being carried by the Mission.

DOCUMENT VII.—A statement by the Rev. W. M. Morrison, submitted to His Majesty's Government.

ABUSES IN THE KONGO FREE STATE.

The following correspondence is in continuation of a long series of appeals made in the course of the past seven years by the Aborigines Protection Society to His Majesty's Government for its intervention on behalf of the ill-used natives of the Kongo State. It is here printed as an introduction to the statement by the Rev. W. M. Morrison, which was invited by the secretary of state for foreign affairs, and to the report of a public meeting that was convened by the committee of the Aborigines Protection Society after Lord Lansdowne had declined to receive a deputation on the subject:

"BROADWAY CHAMBERS, Westminster, April 6, 1903.

"MY LORD MARQUIS: I have the honor, by direction of the committee of the Aborigines Protection Society, to ask that a deputation from this society may be allowed to set before your lordship the grounds upon which it appeals to His Majesty's Government to take such action as may be practicable with a view to checking abuses that have grown up in the territory of the Kongo Free State.

"The committee expects that a missionary now returning from the Kongo will be in England about the end of the present month, and it is anxious that he should have an opportunity of detailing to your lordship some of his experiences as to the illtreatment of natives in the district in which he has been a resident for many years.

"It ventures to hope that your lordship will consent to receive this testimony in support of representations which have already been submitted on the subject, and that you will be so good as to appoint an early day in May at which the proposed deputation may wait upon you.

"I have the honor to be, my Lord Marquis, your lordship's most obedient servant,

"H. R. FOX BOURNE.

"The most honorable the MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE, K. G., etc."

"FOREIGN OFFICE, April 21, 1903.

"SIR: The Marquis of Lansdowne has received your letter of the 6th instant, asking that a deputation from the Aborigines Protection Society may be allowed to set before his lordship the grounds upon which the society appeals to His Majesty's Government to take such action as may be practicable to check the abuses which are reported to have grown up in the Kongo Independent State. You further mention that a missionary is expected to arrive in England from the Congo about the end of the present month, and that the committee of the society is anxious that he should have an opportunity of detailing to his lordship some of his experiences as to the illtreatment of the natives in the district in which he has been resident.

"I am directed by Lord Lansdowne to state that, in his opinion, the first step should be to communicate in writing to this department the information collected by the missionary referred to, and I am to add that, as these matters are not under the responsibility of His Majesty's Government, an official proceeding so formal as a deputation would be inappropriate.

"I am, sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

"F. H. VILLIERS.

"The SECRETARY OF THE ABORIGINES PROTECTION SOCIETY."

"BROADWAY CHAMBERS, Westminster, May 5, 1903.

"MY LORD MARQUIS: I have the honor, by direction of the committee of the Aborigines Protection Society, to acknowledge the receipt of your lordship's letter of April 21, replying to the committee's request that a deputation might be allowed to set before your lordship its views concerning affairs in the Kongo State.

"I am to tender herewith the statement, drawn up by the Rev. W. M. Morrison, which your lordship has consented to receive as a first step toward any inquiries that His Majesty's Government may be willing to institute on the subject.

"With reference to the concluding portion of your lordship's letter, I am respectfully to submit that, in the committee's opinion, Great Britain, as one of the signatories both of the Berlin general act of 1885 and of the Brussels general act of 1892, is in common with the other signatory powers, clearly responsible as regards the upholding of the provisions of those acts. It is further submitted that the flagrant violations thereof by the administrators of the Kongo State, especially in respect of the opening of the basin of the Kongo to free and civilizing commerce and the protection and improvement of its native populations, which are more particularly stipulated for in the first, fifth, and sixth articles of the Berlin act and the second article of the Brussels act, call for such intervention by His Majesty's Government, and by the other Governments whose honor and interests are involved, as may lead to restraint of the appalling abuses now existing, and may insure observance of the humane and equitable requirements of the acts in question.

"I have the honor to be, my Lord Marquis, your lordship's most obedient servant,

"H. R. FOX BOURNE.

"The most honorable the MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE, K. G., etc."

STATEMENT BY THE REV. W. M. MORRISON.

I am a missionary of the American Presbyterian Kongo Mission, and have been located for the greater part of the past six years and a half at Luebo, a large native settlement at the head of navigation of the Lulua River, which is one of the longest tributaries of the Kasai, which is in turn the longest southern tributary of the Kongo River, being about 1,200 miles almost due east from Banana on the west coast.

Before my arrival on the Kongo I had often read and heard of the humane and liberal government which had been so auspiciously begun by King Leopold II, and I felt that it would be a great privilege to labor under a Government alleged to be so just in its treatment of all—natives, missionaries, and traders alike. I had, however, been in the country only a few days when I began, with deep sadness, to realize that things were not as they had been represented. While going along the old caravan route between Tumba and Stanley Pool I almost hourly met caravans of boys and men carrying heavy loads of rubber and ivory down to Tumba, to be there shipped on to Matadi by rail. Upon inquiry I found that the greater part of these men had been forced into the service of the State. From that time on to the present my intercourse with and knowledge of the State have only tended to increase the suspicion then formed that the published protestations of philanthropy are not really sincere.

[It will be my object in this statement to present not general accusations but a few of the many specific charges of injustice which have come under my own personal notice. So confident am I that my assertions can be verified that I am willing, if this is desired, without previous consultation with them, to give the names of numerous witnesses who will, I feel certain, bear testimony to the statements I make.] The names of these witnesses I leave with Mr. H. R. Fox Bourne, the secretary of the Aborigines Protection Society. I must say that, owing to the absolute impossibility of justice being done in the Kongo State courts (if, indeed they have any real courts at all), I should not consider satisfactory an investigation conducted by the Kongo government alone.

If, however, an impartial court, composed of other than Congo officials or those for any reasons peculiarly sympathetic to the Government, is appointed for the investigation, and the fear of State intimidation is thus removed, I am confident that every charge will be established. When it is remembered that all evidence in such cases is taken in secret by a State officer, that no one else is permitted to be present or even to bring out from witnesses evidence not asked for by him, and that the evidence thus secretly taken is left unsealed in the hands of the State official, it can be easily seen that there is every possibility—in my mind a strong probability—of the suppression of material evidence.

Some of the incidents which I am to relate have been reported to the State; some of them have not been. My policy, and that of our mission, has been to keep as quiet as possible about these things, and to give offense to the State as seldom as possible. I say offense, because, instead of appreciating our reports to them about matters which they profess to be so anxious to remedy, the authorities appear to resent it and to assume toward us an attitude of unfriendliness.

My observations have, for the most part, been confined to a limited area about Luebo and its vicinity. This region has, until the past year, been kept open to free trade, five trading houses having been located at Luebo. Consequently, I am inclined to think that this has been a section much more favored than other regions where the State has compelled the natives to make rubber. You can readily infer, if such things as I relate were done in a favored section, what must have been done in regions exploited entirely by the State. In fact, native reports often come to us of the hardships to which they are subjected in the Lusambo district, some days' journey to the east; and I have often seen State steamers come down loaded with rubber from Lusambo.

The cases of cruelty to which I shall now call attention have either come under my own direct observation or have occurred so near to me, and within the knowledge of of my colleagues, in whose truthfulness I have absolute confidence, that I have no hesitation in vouching for them.

I. In the year 1898 an officer named Fromont came to Luebo, followed as usual by a squad of native soldiers, together with carriers and camp followers. Just as he entered the town, natives came running to me saying that the soldiers were pillaging their villages. I had often heard that on the march they were permitted to do this; so I went at once to the scene of the disturbance, found the villagers fleeing to the forests and the soldiers in full possession of a village which they were busy looting, having already severely wounded an innocent woman. I went at once to the officer, who was at the house of a trader only a few yards distant, and demanded protection for the people from the outrage of his soldiers.

He professed not to know that they were doing anything of the sort, the presumption clearly being that it was the usual custom for them to do such things when on the road, and that they had not been warned to make an exception at Luebo. And I may here state that at Luebo, even when an officer is present, we have often had the greatest difficulty in keeping the soldiers from looting and otherwise abusing the native population. The latter know from bitter experience that it is useless to resist the soldiers. They also know that, with perhaps a few exceptions, they would only be even worse treated if they appealed to the State officer for protection.

When this man Fromont had been at Luebo for some days, natives came to me with the report, which was also verified by the statement of a trader whose name I am in a position to furnish, that Fromont intended to compel the entire Baluba population of Luebo, consisting of several thousands, to remove to Luluaburg, the State post five days distant. Upon hearing this I went to the State officer about it. He confessed that the report was true, but gave as excuse for his intention that the people of Luebo did not work, and that he wanted to take them to Luluaburg, where they would have to work.

I protested to him that the natives of Luebo worked for the mission and the several trading companies, and that many of them had even gone far away down the Kasai River, where they had willingly accepted contract to labor for the traders. I also told him that the people of Luebo doubtless worked more than the many thousands of Zappo-Zapps already at Luluaburg and under the control of the State. I told him still further that to tear the people away from the homes which they had built and the large plantations which they had just laboriously made was not only most cruel and inhumane, but was a distinct violation of rights which were guaranteed to the natives under treaties. I also told him that if he persisted against my protest in thus disturbing the natives of Luebo, I should not only report the matter to Boma, but should feel it my duty to pubish the fact to the world.

When he saw that I was in earnest he was most surprised. Evidently he was not accustomed to such interference with his plans. When he saw what I would do, he compromised the matter, taking away only a few Zappo-Zapps who belonged to Luluaburg. He also took the names of the chiefs, so that he could demand tribute of food for himself, soldiers, and carriers when he or other State officials might come again. Thus it was that this officer was deterred from perpetrating an outrage which would have resulted in much cruelty, hardship, and, doubtless, bloodshed.

While Fromont was at Luebo several of the soldiers invaded without notice, the private sleeping apartments of two of our lady missionaries, on the pretence that they were searching for a woman who had fled to the house of the missionaries for protection.

During this same visit a village of Batetela people was burned, by whose orders I could never exactly find out. The natives reported that it was done by order of Fromons.

II. In the months of August and September of the year 1899 occurred, about three days from Luebo, one of the most shameful affairs that has come within my knowledge. By way of explanation it is necessary to say that at the State post of Luluaburg, which is about five days' march from Luebo, is located a large village of people called Zappo-Zapps.

They are cannibals, and were brought from far to the east and settled there by a State officer named Paul Le Marinel about the year 1890. Ever since their coming to Luluaburg they have been a terror to the whole surrounding district. In fact, having guns and being known to be cannibals and very brave warriors, they have all these years been the great slave dealers and slave raiders of the district. Perhaps half of the 7,000 or 8,000 people at Luebo who have been or are now slaves have been caught by the Zappo-Zapps in their numerous raids. Quite a large number have been caught by State soldiers, while a goodly number have been seized by the famous State "friendly" at Lusambo, named Penia Mutambo.

Some few have been caught in petty fights between villagers. The State must of necessity know of the many thousands of slaves who have passed, and are now passing, through the hands of these Zappo-Zapps. The only possible explanation is that the State and the Zappo-Zapps—many of whom, by the way, are my personal friends—are in alliance in the matter. Up to the time I left Luebo, slaves caught in the regions to the east of Luluaburg and Lusambo are almost daily exposed for sale, and always by the Zappo-Zapps. Either the latter themselves have done the raiding, or it has been done by some of the "sepoys" about Lusambo, who have then sold the slaves to the Zappo-Zapps.

This digression from the incident which I am proceeding to narrate was necessary in order to more fully explain who the Zappo-Zapps are and what is their relation to the State. The circumstances, briefly stated, are these:

During the last days of July, 1899 (or about that time), news reached us at Luebo that a large band of Zappo-Zapps, under a famous warrior chief named Mlumba Nkusa, was proceeding into the Bena Pianga country, not far from one of our mission stations, in order to collect tribute and get stores for the State. Upon hearing this news I wrote at once to our missionary at Ibanj, the Rev. W. H. Sheppard, F. R. G. S., warning him to be on the lookout for trouble. He had not long to wait, for soon the news began to come in from the region, only one day from the station, that the Zappo-Zapps had established themselves in a strong stockade near a village named Chinyama, from which they were almost daily sallying forth to catch slaves, demand tribute from villagers, and kill all who dared oppose them.

This condition of affairs went on uninterrupted by the officer at Luluaburg, though only four—or at the most five—days distant. The greatest terror prevailed throughout the whole region, extending even as far as Luebo and beyond. Many thousands of people had deserted their villages and fled to the forests for safety.

At last word came to Mr. Sheppard that the Zappo-Zapps had treacherously invited a large number of the prominent chiefs of the region to come inside the stockade, and that there they had been shot down without quarter.

The Mission then asked Mr. Sheppard, who was also a friend of many of the Zappo-Zapps, to go and carefully investigate the whole affair, taking with him some reliable native men who could, if necessary, corroborate the statements he made.

Mr. Sheppard saw along the way several burnt villages, also some wounded persons. He reached the well-arranged stockade, and was received in a friendly way by Mlumba Nkusa and his 500 or more followers. Inside the stockade Mr. Sheppard saw and counted eighty-one human hands, slowly drying over a fire. Outside the stockade he counted more than two score bodies piled in a heap. Some of these bodies had the flesh carved from the legs. Upon asking what this meant he was informed by Mlumba Nkusa that his people had eaten the flesh. Mr. Sheppard also saw several Albini rifles and a pistol, with cartridges—all of which natives are forbidden to have. Mlumba Nkusa said plainly that he had been sent by the State officer at Luluaburg and that he had already dispatched to him 16 slaves.

Upon receiving Mr. Sheppard's account of the affair, I, as legal representative of the mission, made a report of the affair to the officer at Luluaburg, charging him with the responsibility, and demanding the immediate recall of the Zappo-Zapps. I received from him in reply the usual bluffing note, denying having anything to do with the affair.

In a few days a judge came and summoned me to Ibanj to establish the charges I had made. With the judge were the commissaire of the district and a young military officer in charge of the soldiers and numerous carriers.

On my way to Ibanj I found all the villages on the road deserted and the people hiding in the forest, being even more frightened now that white State men had come into the community. One village, named Kabow, through which the State men had passed, was not only deserted, but was almost torn to pieces. I may here state that I saw three such villages through which the State men had passed a few days later, and they too had been looted and every possible form of damage and desecration done. I asked a soldier why they treated the villages in this way. He replied that the State men told them to do it in order to make the natives more afraid of the State.

Upon my arrival at Ibanj the so-called investigation was begun; but it was from the first painfully evident that the judge, who was writing down the evidence to send to Boma, was doing all in his power to free his fellow-officer, even attempting to influence witnesses by making an argument in favor of the officer charged. I was permitted to hear some of the evidence in this case, but I was afterwards told by another judge that the Government had reprimanded his colleague for permitting me to hear the evidence.

The investigation over, these officers came to Luebo. After remaining for some days at the latter place, completely demolishing the village in which they stayed, two of them proposed to go to the village of Chinyama, where the outrages had been committed. They started, but upon attempting to sleep at a large native village only two hours from Luebo, they were shot upon by arrows by some of the villagers who were lurking near and evidently did not wish to see their town destroyed.

For some mysterious reason these officers retreated to Luebo, and they were crossing the river to go on to Luluaburg by the southern route when a native woman belonging to Luebo came in severely cut in a number of places. She said she had been attacked on the way by some of the villagers of the town which had shot at the State officials. I knew instantly that it meant war upon us at Luebo, for the people of that village have always been rather difficult to get along with, and they considered the State men to be our friends because they were white.

I immediately dispatched a messenger after the State men, telling them that, as they had come into the community and made this trouble, they must now stay and protect us.

They came back and ordered more soldiers from Luluaburg, the accused officer coming with them. His name was Dufour. This latter went on a punitive expedition, but to a village far distant, which, he alleged, had given him some insult on the road. He only passed through the village which had fired on the officers. A mutiny arising among his soldiers, he returned to Luebo, and in a few days went on to Luluaburg. It was, however, many months before the country quieted down again.

But what became of those who committed the outrages at Chinyama? M. Dufour was completely exonerated, and all the blame was put on Mlumba Nkusa, who, they said, had gone raiding on his own account.

What punishment, then, was given Mlumba Nkusa? They say he was kept in confinement at Luluaburg for a few weeks. I know that not many weeks after the occurrence he was at Luebo. It was there commonly reported by natives from Luluaburg that the reason why he was not taken away and severely punished was because the Zappo-Zapps, knowing that Mlumba Nkusa had been treacherously dealt with, were on the eve of revolting, and this would have been a most serious affair, seeing that their number, it is estimated is about 25,000 or 30,000, and that they have many guns and know from long experience how to use them.

III. In the spring of 1899 a State officer visited the village of a great chief named Lukenga, about five days from Luebo. Mr. Sheppard and myself, being friendly with many of the villagers, were called to come to them at once. As we had long waited to pay a visit to this village we went immediately.

Upon arrival there we found the whole community in the greatest excitement. We were told that the State men had fired upon them; so they went out with their bows and arrows to defend their village. They reported 14 men killed. Without leaving them any word as to the reason for his visit, the officer departed almost immediately; at any rate, he was not there when Mr. Sheppard and I reached the place. This officer was from a State post (Isaka) on the Sankuru River.

IV. About a year later another officer (or perhaps the same one) again paid a visit to this village, killed its chief, and, from native reports, which we have every reason to believe to be true, also killed a great number of men, women, and children, carrying away a large quantity of booty. It was utterly impossible for any of the missionaries to go to see the full extent of the outrages; we only know that the village, a large and prosperous one, was entirely broken up, and it is only within the past few months that the people have begun to return to the old site. This same officer, some weeks after the event, was on his way down river to go home. Not knowing that we were friends of the village thus outraged, he proceeded to tell us how the people, as they were being fired upon, ran about crying "Shepite! Shepite!" They were calling for their old friend, Mr. Sheppard, to come to their assistance. He also said that he had obtained a splendid lot of ivory and many curios.

V. Now, however, the attitude of the State toward the village and its new chief there has turned to the other extreme. The chief has been made a friend of the State; several soldiers are placed at his command, and he is empowered to impress his whole tribe, composed of several scores of villages, for tribute for the State post at Isaka. Naturally this young chief soon became arrogant, and was not slow in making abuse of his powers. Only a few days before I left Luebo it was necessary for our mission steamer to go on a three weeks' trip to Isaka to rescue from the hands of this chief a native who had long been attached to our mission at Ibanj, and who had been treacherously invited by the chief to pay him a visit, and had, upon reaching the village of the chief, been most cruelly outraged and abused. The chief had been permitted to return to his village, so I presume, so far as the State is concerned, the matter is ended. But this is only a concrete instance of the barbarities resulting from the "chefferies" system.

VI. During the months of June, July, and August of last year we had at Luebo—and in fact throughout the region between Luluaburg and Luebo—another reign of terror. A new officer, named Deschamps, had just come into power at Luluaburg.

During my absence he came to Luebo and there, without warning to the chiefs or villagers, sent out his soldiers to catch men by force wherever they could be found. The people fled at once to the forests for safety; some of the women and children, as is their custom in such times of fear, found refuge about the Mission premises. He went away with a number of men thus caught. Upon my return to Luebo, only a few days after the departure of the officer, and finding the whole community naturally in a state of unrest, I made complaint to the authorities about the matter. Scarcely had my letter been dispatched when another officer, named Ducès, sent by Deschamps, came to "recruit" soldiers, as he said.

I went to him, and in person demanded protection for the natives, and urged that none be taken by force. This M. Ducès promised, and I in turn told the natives what he had said. Within a few days, however, he received imperative orders from his chief, Deschamps. Consequently he began catching the people by force. They fled to the forests for safety; but day after day, for perhaps a week or ten days, the soldiers scoured the woods in search of men. They succeeded in catching about eighteen or twenty, and these I saw taken away under guard, tied about the necks with ropes.

When I began to make trouble about the matter some of the men were returned, but some were never given up. Only the day before I left Luebo the old chief of the village came to me and begged me to try to find and send back his boys whom the State had taken away.

This whole affair I reported to the native protection commission appointed by the King some years ago, of which the Rev. George Grenfell is the secretary, asking it to see that the natives were protected in their rights. The only answer I received was that the State had established forced labor by law, and that doubtless the officers were acting entirely within their powers, the commission thus sheltering itself and the officers guilty of these outrages under a form of legality.

VII. I have been for six years at Luebo, and during the greater part of that time have acted as an intermediary for the natives in their troubles with the State. I was most deeply saddened, as the time for my departure drew near, to see the anxiety which many of them felt. They often came asking me "Who will now protect us from the State?"

VIII. Upon boarding the train at Leopoldville, on 25th March last, I found three truck loads of slaves being sent down to Matadi under guard of soldiers. There were, in addition, a dozen or more with chains around their necks, evidently prisoners.

At the several stops I had some conversation with the captives, and found that they were Baluba and Batetela people from the vicinity of Lusambo, only a few days east of Luebo.

Upon being asked what they were doing so far from home, one of them replied that the state officer at Lusambo had sent their chief word to bring tribute. Upon going with a number of the villagers to the post, they told me they were seized, put on the river steamer, and brought down to Leopoldville, where they had slept one night; they had then been put on board the railway and were going they knew not where. They seemed, naturally, in great anxiety, and asked me repeatedly if there was any food or water in the country to which they were going.

Upon reaching Matadi on 27th March I was met at the station by Doctor Sims, who is a member of the Commission appointed to make report of atrocities done to natives. As the slaves were getting off the train Doctor Sims remarked to me, "Do you see the slaves of the State?" Where they were taken I do not know. I may here point out that it is the custom, when men are made into soldiers, to take them to a distant district from that in which they were born. For example, in passing through Boma I saw Baluba soldiers who had been brought from the Kasai district. I had free conversation with them.

I could give further instances of outrages done in the name of civilization and philanthropy, but it would make this statement too long. I shall only close by referring to another matter of vital importance, which shows in another aspect the State's set policy to infringe upon the rights not only of the natives, but also of foreigners who have gone to the Kongo for commercial or religious purposes. I refer to the fact that concessions or grants of land, however small, can now no longer be obtained from the State by other than favored individuals or corporations. The State is dividing up the country among great concessionnaires, with exclusive rights of trade by the companies to which the concessions are given. There is now very little free land not given out to such companies to exploit. It is also to be noted that in most, if not, all of these companies the State controls half the stock. You can thus see that legitimate trade, except in the small regions from Banana to Stanley Pool, is practically shut out.

I know of one man, an Englishman named Pierce, who was representing a Belgian company, who lived for over a year on my station at Luebo, trying to get only a few square yards of ground on which to build a house and engage in legitimate trade. This was absolutely refused, and he had at last to go away without securing his concession.

Not only are concessions refused to traders; they are also refused to missionaries. It will thus be seen that the State has reached almost the farthest point to which it can go in closing up the country, short of absolutely expelling us from the concessions which we already hold.

W. M. MORRISON.

LONDON, 4th May, 1903.

MEETING ON THE KONGO QUESTION.

At the meeting which was held at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall, on Tuesday, May 5, 1903, the chair was occupied by the Rev. John Clifford, D. D., LL. D., and among those present were the Right Hon. Sir Charles W. Dilke, Bart., M. P., Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart., M. P., Sir W. Brampton Gurdon, M. P., Messrs. Thomas Bayley, M. P., Herbert Samuel, M. P., H. J. Wilson, M. P., Robert Whyte, and E. D. Morel, Sir John Smalman Smith, Col. J. G. B. Stopford, Count de Cardi, Prof. N. C. Frederiksen, of Copenhagen; Messrs. E. Banks, A. E. Ruskin, and William Wilkes, of the Kongo, and Messrs. E .Wright Brooks, F. W. Fox, Travers Buxton, and Fox Bourne.

Mr. Alfred Emmott, M. P., had written: "I am very sorry I can not be at the meeting on the 5th instant on account of a previous engagement. If I had been present I should have gladly availed myself of the opportunity you offered me of saying a few words on the commercial aspect of the Kongo question. The main point to bear in mind in regard to possibilities of trade expansion in tropical countries is the necessity of developing their exports by regenerative methods. The chief export now is rubber, and its sources are being rapidly depleted, whilst the peculiar methods of collection adopted are depopulating large areas.

The rubber is sold in Europe. Its proceeds pay the taxes and make the profits of the concessionnaire companies, but the balance of all the exports is only sufficient to pay for £1,000,000 worth of imports, and of these a considerable portion consists of guns and ammunition. Sir Henry Stanley many years ago promised us £20,000,000 of trade per annum. Our exports are £125,000 at present. Apart from the glaring inhumanities which have been perpetrated in the name of civilization, apart from the clever creation of monopolies, where a policy of no monopolies was promised, there remains the crass stupidity of a system which dries up the sources of production. It is not too late to stop this now, if only Europe would awake. The only plan is for those who care about it to keep it prominently before the public of this country.

The Reverend Doctor Clifford, chairman, in opening the proceedings, said: "I am privileged to occupy this chair by the circumstance that I am one of those who have recently had occasion to direct public attention to the condition of things in the Kongo Free State. Only a little while ago I had no very definite and clear acquaintance with the affairs of that important part of Africa. Listening to speeches which were made by Mr. Robert Whyte and Mr. Silas Hocking at the congress of free churches two months ago I discovered that there were facts with which I ought to be acquainted, and therefore I devoted myself to the investigation of all the literature I could get together, so that I might know what had been taking place. Of course, I had heard rumors of oppressions, exploitations of land, cruelties, and atrocities, but I regarded such occurrences as incidental to the savage conditions of life obtaining in that district, and what might be expected, as things are amongst us, when a civilized people invades the realms of savagery.

"But looking into this literature, I speedily discovered that European civilization entering this district has been the creator of a system which has become almost, I may say, of necessity the source and spring of the cruelties and oppressions that have occurred there during the last fifteen or sixteen years. I found that there was a system to which our own Government, along with certain other governments of Europe, had committed themselves by express treaty; a system which had issued in the appropriation of some 800,000 square miles of territory hitherto occupied by the natives, and that that had been done without any reference to the customs which had probably become as law among the peoples dwelling there, without the slightest offer of compensation to the peoples exploited, and without any regard whatsoever to their choice or to their preference. I further found that not only had the lands themselves been appropriated, but also the produce of those lands—the ivory and the rubber—and that the system was of such a character as to open the way for the creation of trading companies which have been empowered to levy taxes upon the people, and are undefined as to the amount that may be taken in rubber or in ivory.

"I found, again, that those trading companies are numerous, that they exist by the authority of the State, that the State takes something like 50 or more per cent of the profits of each trading company, and, finally, that the State employs an army of natives to the extent of some 15,000 men or more, who are forced into the service of the State and used for the purpose of carrying out its projects. So it seems to me that the system is as certain to produce the evils of which we complain as are the clouds to give us rain, and that therefore the evil we have to deal with is not an atrocity here or a cruelty there, but the system itself out of which all these oppressions proceed.

"In looking for evidence, I have not restricted my attention to that which has been produced, some will say, in the interests of the natives.

"I have been anxious to get at all the facts of the situation, and therefore I have turned my attention to the evidence of the Belgian Government, which has been circulated in this country—as far as I can gather, circulated abundantly. So anxious are people to put me right, that I have no fewer than three copies already. I have read one of those copies. Well, I find that the case presented in the book of Mr. Fox Bourne or in that of Mr. Morel can be substantiated in its essential points from this very book, which is presented as a book defending the action of the Kongo Free State. I gather from this evidence that those atrocities are still going on. Father Cambier may be called as a witness to the fact that heads are cut off, hands are cut off, and so on.

"Moreover, I find it is possible from the self-same book to show that the system which is at work, so long as it is permitted to exist, can only be expected to produce results of this kind, and therefore I hold that it is our duty to bring about, at the earliest possible moment, a termination of this system.

"To appeal to the King of the Belgians seems to me—I do not know how it may appear to those more intimately acquainted with the operations of the King of the Belgians than I am—a hopeless task. And I feel that the only course possible for us to undertake with any expectation of doing any real service is that of urging our own Government and, through our Government, the other European powers that are contributory to this present cruelty, to take action in reference to the Berlin general act. It is, therefore, a matter of rejoicing to me, and to you also, I am sure, that Mr. Herbert Samuel has secured a night for the introduction of this matter in the House of Commons, and we may expect an illuminating debate.

"What is necessary is that the country should understand the situation. At present a good many of the people of this country—most of the people I think I may say—are in the condition in which I was two months ago. Rumors they have heard, but definite and certain knowledge they do not possess, and we ought to use every opportunity in our power to make our fellow-citizens acquainted with the actual and horrible state of affairs. I hope that out of the action to-night some such results may come. We have the opportunity of listening to one from the field, the Rev. W. M. Morrison, who has been there more than six years. He will speak to us as one who knows the facts at first hand and whose evidence we are most desirous of hearing I have the greatest pleasure in introducing to you Mr. Morrison, from the Kasai district, who will speak to us of his work in that neighborhood, and of what he knows of these Kongo atrocities."

The Rev. W. M. Morrison then addressed the meeting as follows: "Doctor Clifford, in the general statement he has made, has presented to you so correctly the true situation of affairs in the Kongo Free State that little more remains for me than to give you some concrete examples which have come under my own personal observation. You all know that about the beginning of the eighties there was a great desire on the part of the European powers to acquire possession of land throughout Africa. As a result of this, and as a result of the discoveries of Sir H. M. Stanley and others, the Berlin conference was called for this purpose. It arranged for the partition of a great part of Central Africa, and the organization of what is known as the Kongo Independent State. This had been started, as you know, by the King of the Belgians prior to the Berlin conference, but it was not fully recognized as an independent power until the year 1885.

"The Government of the United States of America, of which I am a citizen, took the lead in this recognition, and hence I feel that my country is particularly responsible for the situation of affairs in the Kongo Free State to-day. It is my purpose, when I return to America, to explain the position as speedily and effectively as I can to the authorities at Washington, in the hope that my fellow-citizens will unite with you in England to bring to an end the atrocities that have been and are being committed in the name of civilization and humanity.

"You are aware, Doctor Clifford, that we preachers do not exactly feel comfortable unless we have a text, and therefore I propose to-night to take as my text an article from the general act of the Berlin Conference, in which the different powers—England, America, France, Germany, and, in fact, all the powers of the civilized world—joined in a solemn compact, and in the organization of the Kongo Free State guaranteed to the natives and foreigners alike certain rights and privileges. The sixth article of this Berlin act was as follows: 'All the powers exercising sovereign rights or influence in the State territories pledge themselves to watch over the preservation of the native populations and the improvement of their moral and material conditions of existence, and to work together for the suppression of slavery, and especially of the slave trade; to protect and encourage, without distinction of creed or nation, all religious, scientific, or charitable institutions established and organized for these objects, or intended to educate the natives, and bring home to them the advantages of civilization. Christian missionaries, men of science, and explorers are likewise to be the objects of special protection. Liberty of conscience and religious toleration are expressly guaranteed to the natives as well as to foreigners. The free and public exercise of the observances of every creed, the right to build edifices for religious purposes, and to organize religious missions of every creed shall be subject to no restriction or impediment whatsoever.' If ever anything was written plainly and simply, that is. Well, I am going to prove to you to-night that those guarantees have been broken in every essential point.

"But first, in view of the remarks just made by Doctor Clifford, let me point out that the divergencies and contradictions in statements published as to the condition of affairs in the Kongo are due to the fact that these statements come from very different sorts of informants. Some are travelers who, in passing through the country along its great highways, see nothing of what is going on in the interior. Others are State officials, commercial men, and Protestant as well as Catholic missionaries, who, from the circumstances in which they are placed, have inducements to do what they can in suppressing the truth. One of the functions of the Catholic missionaries is to take charge of the children handed over to them by the State after they have been obtained in ways that I can not explain to-night.

"It is enough to say that to one mission, near to my own station, as many as 1,700 children who had fallen into the hands of the State, as the result of raidings of the State soldiery from time to time, are stated to have been intrusted. With regard to the Protestant missionaries, I may say generally that their policy seems to have been to see just as little as they could, and to speak just as little as they could about what they could not help seeing. I am sorry that it should be so, and I must confess before you here to-night that during the last six years I have sometimes myself felt almost afraid to speak.

"But I have spoken out on several occasions. You may remember, perhaps, that about two or two and a half years ago reports of some horrible atrocities that occurred near Luebo, in the Kasai district, appeared in the English papers. On that occasion I felt it would be a wrong to humanity, a sin resting upon my conscience, if I did not speak out and let the world know the true condition of affairs. On the other hand, there are some who have, perhaps, gone to the other extreme and have kept their eyes closed and their mouths shut. Their excuse is that they have been afraid to speak, so sovereign is the power which controls the Kongo, and from which there is no appeal. The word of the King who sits in Brussels is absolute in the Kongo State. We missionaries know that if he speaks the word we shall all have to leave to-morrow. Those 15,000 soldiers of whom Doctor Clifford has spoken will be sent to expel us. Hence we are afraid to speak.

"And here let me say that it has given me great pleasure in the past two or three days to read the resolutions which were adopted by the Baptist Union. After that I begin to see the light. The Baptist Missionary Society, being one of the strongest and most influential of all the missionary societies at work in the Kongo State, holds, perhaps the key to the situation, and if the heads of that society can be prevailed upon to act, and the men on the spot to speak out, I believe there will be such a revelation as will stagger the whole world. I say this because I believe to-day that there is not, perhaps, in all the world a Government that is so wicked and so iniquitous in all its relations, both to the natives and to foreigners, as the Government of the Kongo Free State. I am not even prepared to make an exception of Turkey.

"Contradictions of testimony are partly due, perhaps, to different conceptions as to what constitutes an infringement of the rights of natives. Probably what I may consider an infringement upon the rights of natives another man may not consider an infringement at all. I derive my view, however, from the guarantees according to law. By law the natives are guaranteed inalienable rights of residence and home, also an inalienable right to the produce of their labor, willingly given. These are what I consider to be the fundamental rights of the natives. On the other hand, there are persons willing to admit that the State has a right to enact laws compelling the natives to serve at its stations and in its military department, to labor in plantations and on board steamers, and on any other work it appoints.

"I have a letter in my hands sent to me by the Natives Protection Commission, which was appointed by the King about seven years ago, when these atrocities first came to be known. I have a letter from two members of that commission to whom, nine months ago, I complained of atrocities and outrages committed in my own station. They simply reply, in effect, 'Well, you can not do anything, because the State has forced-labor laws.' Can not do anything! They admit the right claimed by the State to outrage the natives, and I can not make any appeal against the outrage because it is sanctioned by law. Therefore, I have come to you in the name of the millions of black men in Central Africa, and I ask you if the Kongo Free State has the right to commit outrage. ("No!")

"Now, what is the attitude of the State toward us when we make representations of this state of affairs? You know there are constantly coming from Brussels protestations of righteousness and justice, and of a willingness to hear any complaints we have to make. But what is their value? I have never made a single complaint to the State of outrages against natives without receiving back a curt and almost insulting letter. If an investigation is promised, let me give you an illustration of the way in which it is conducted. Only last summer I reported an affair that happened at Luebo. Three months afterwards the judge, as they call him, came to investigate. He spent half a day examining me. The next day, accompanied by another missionary, I went to the court to hear the evidence and to bring out such evidence as might be necessary, because I have the honor of being the legal representative of our mission in the Congo Free State.

"I felt, as representing the mission, that I had a right to hear the evidence given, and the right to elicit such evidence as I felt sure the officer of the State would not bring out of his own accord. When I asked that I might have the privilege of hearing the evidence of my colleague, Mr. Hawkins, the State officer refused. He said, 'No; you can not hear the evidence of Mr. Hawkins.' I answered, 'Why not? I am representing our mission in this affair.' I said, 'Evidence taken in secret will not be worth the paper on which it is written.' He replied that, as a matter of courtesy, he would permit me to hear the evidence of Mr. Hawkins, but that he would not allow me to hear the evidence of the natives. I said, 'If you won't permit me to hear the evidence of the natives, intimidated as they are by your soldiers, I will go out into the civilized world and will tell the facts.' Well, here are some of the facts."

Mr. Morrison then related in detail most of the occurrences set forth in the statement submitted to Lord Lansdowne by the Aborigines Protection Society, and remarked that, while for obvious reasons he withheld the names of his witnesses from the Kongo government, if an impartial international committee were appointed to investigate the situation, the names of his witnesses would be forthcoming.

Mr. Morrison, in concluding, said that the Times had aptly described the present government of the Kongo Free State as an "anomaly," while the Spectator styled it an "anachronism." He added: "I protest against those hypocritical protestations of righteousness and justice that come from the ruler in Brussels. We want to see some administration of justice. We are tired of words, mere words; we are tired of the denial of such horrible facts as I have related to you to-night. The King of the Belgians is afraid of an impartial international inquiry, and, pending it, he wants to get all he can out of the country so cruelly misgoverned. In the name of humanity, in the name of the defenseless natives in the Kongo Free State, in the name of the men following honest commercial industry in that state, I plead to the English nation to come to our rescue."

The Right Hon. Sir Charles W. Dilke, Bart., M. P., then moved the following resolution: "That this meeting, having heard the statement of the Rev. W. M. Morrison, earnestly appeals to His Majesty's Government, as one of the signatories to the Berlin and Brussels acts of 1885 and 1892, to use its influence with the other signatory powers toward securing the humane and equitable treatment of natives in the Congo Basin which was guaranteed by those acts." He said:

"Mr. Morrison began by describing the foundation of the Congo State. Many of us pursue this subject with as much vigor as we can command, because we feel a certain responsibility for that foundation. I do not share that responsibility, but it is felt by most of those with whom I associate in this society.

"Personally I was concerned in the proposal to keep Portugal—which had the best rights, if any rights exist—on that coast by means of a treaty which would have given us, I think, security for trade and for commercial enterprise. But the chambers of commerce and Parliament and our antislavery friends were all for the King of the Belgians at that time. Hence we were prevented making a treaty which, in the case of such a weak power as Portugal, would have given us securities for trade and for the carrying out of the stipulations agreed to. Moreover, we should have been in a position to protect the natives in a country which our people had discovered, and which the prime minister, Mr. Disraeli, refused to take over when the native chiefs guaranteed it to us. This country that they handed over to us was, with the concurrence of the Antislavery Society and the Aborigines Protection Society, handed over to the King of the Belgians. It was handed over in the full belief of those whom I have named that they were doing, under the circumstances of the case, what was best for the advantages of trade and civilization, and especially for the protection of the native races.

"Now that Kongo Free State was founded in the name of Almighty God. All Europe sat round a table and recognized it as a kind of antislavery society. The European powers brought it into existence as a sovereign State in the name of Almighty God on behalf of the natives of the country. In the most express terms that condition is repeated over and over again throughout the Berlin act.

"I suppose that no defender of the Kongo State will dare to say that the stipulations of the Berlin act are observed in the Kongo State. I have never seen any attempt among its defenders to make out that the treaty provisions are observed. The whole district lies within what is known as the Free Trade Zone, and there is the most absolute and express prohibition of the creation of monopoly or of favor throughout the whole of that vast region. No one pretends that those stipulations are observed, or that they are not violated in a manner absolutely grotesque. Nearly the whole of that vast territory has been handed over to concessionnaire companies, and even the remainder—not so handed over—has, by decree upon decree, been made the absolute possession of the State, has been taken from private persons and handed to the State, with powers given under these decrees, making the State the absolute master not only of the persons but also of the property of the natives within those districts.

"No one, I say, pretends that the stipulations of the Berlin conference are not absolutely violated; but when we point out what these decrees must mean, as regards the condition of the natives, what the system must mean, the answer is: 'Oh, yes; but we take great pains to punish all offenses which grow from this system which you describe. Every injury is inquired into.' I brought this matter before the House of Commons in April, 1897, mainly on the nature of the system which Doctor Clifford described from the chair. We had not then such evidence as we have to-day as to the atrocities which must result from such a system. We had, however, the extraordinary evidence of Doctor Hinde, now serving under the foreign office in British territory, set forth in a book which has never been questioned by representatives of the Kongo Free State.

"No doubt has been cast upon the testimony of Doctor Hinde in 1897. That testimony showed that in all cases of conquest of fresh parts of territory the work was done by the use of cannibal tribes from other regions. Even the best of the officers in the employ of the Kongo State have admitted that when they have been marching about the Kongo district with cannibal forces, those forces were rationed on the bodies of the people whom they killed in war. That fact has never been denied. When it was brought before the House of Commons in April, 1897, no answer was made. There were one or two members of that House in close relations with the Kongo State, and yet no answer was made.

"I think we may take it as established that by its extraordinary decrees, by a mere stroke of the pen, natives have been deprived of their entire property, and that the State has habitually employed cannibal troops and forces with the horrible consequences described. Wherever these troops have been stationed they have, of course, raided the country round in the manner you have heard described by Mr. Morrison.

"We are now in possession of such evidence as from the nature of things we had every reason to expect concerning the working of what is called the 'sentry system.' The Kongo State has lived, and still lives very largely, upon rubber. It is the great rubber-exporting district of the world—the rubber that is increasingly used in all the appliances of civilization. That rubber is mainly obtained in small quantities from the natives for a wholly insufficient payment, in some cases for no payment at all. And it is obtained by planting upon the people native sentries of the wildest kind, picked from distant parts of the country, men quite different from those among whom they are stationed. These men terrorize the locality. They are commanded by so-called 'officers'—not men whom we think of as officers, but men who have served in the Belgian army, old soldiers of that army, who have been sent out. Being enterprising men and brave men, accustomed to carry their lives in their hands, they are promoted to be lieutenants, but they are the very last kind of persons likely to deal tenderly with the natives in newly occupied countries.

"Those are the officers, and the men are savages brought from other districts and armed with rifles and ammunition. Having overcome the people of the neighborhood, the sentry demands rubber, and if the natives do not bring it in quickly enough he sends for other parties of men and raids the district. Habitually the tale of the sentry is testified to by the sending in of hands to prove how many have been killed.

"It is only by force of overwhelming evidence that I have been driven to the conclusion that this is really done. Immediately after the debate in the House of Commons in April, 1897, there came from the Kongo State a Swedish missionary, Mr. Sjöblom. We heard him in a room not very far from here, and I undertake to say there was not a single person present who was not constrained to believe every syllable he uttered.

"His statement has never been shaken in any way. The Kongo Free State, which never hesitates to attack as far as it can those who expose its misdeeds, has never ventured to say that Mr. Sjöblom was a liar. He saw with his own eyes the hands that had been cut off, and testified to what he saw, and to the circumstances he knew, with such straightforwardness that no one who heard him could disbelieve his testimony.

"It is only public forgetfulness and carelessness that prevents these facts being universally recognized. I am quite sure there is no weak point in them—nothing which exposes itself to attack.

"The Kongo State has gone to great expense in sending to each of us four or five copies of a very ill-compiled work in its defense, consisting chiefly of quotations from persons whose names are supposed to carry weight. Some of these names do carry weight, but passages quoted are torn from their context; other passages are fraudulently used. The quotations will not bear the faintest examination. On every page in this book one sees contradiction and evident bad faith. As to several of the Englishmen whose names are used, I may state that I have seen them since the book was issued, and I have asked them, 'Is this your opinion of the Kongo Free State?' The reply I have received has been, 'No, it is not; and my name has been used for a purpose contrary to my views.' Of others, whom I have not seen and whom I know, I undertake to say, on my own responsibility, that they can not be claimed as defenders of the Kongo State.

"Now, what are we to do, and how far are we responsible? There are some people who think that the record of the past, our own record, is a very bad record, as bad as that of other people. I have given a great deal of attention to this subject. I have read the books of Mr. Fox Bourne and of Mr. Morel, and I have heard Mr. Sjöblom, and to-night Mr. Morrison, and I venture to say that all of us who have given much attention to this subject agree with what has been said to-night—that of all the Governments in the world that of the Kongo State is by far the worst. Nothing can be compared with it, and whatever passes and exists in our own dominion and protectorates or in the territory of others—of the Portuguese, for instance, which is beyond the reach of civilization—whatever bad examples we or others may have set, and whatever bad laws in relation to natives may exist, I am convinced they can not for one moment be placed on the same level with either the decrees or the practices of the Kongo Free State.

"So far as other powers are open to evil influences in dealing with native races, it is the example of the Kongo Free State that has largely affected them. Instance the French, who have ever had a high standard in their treatment of natives; but in the French territory which adjoins the Kongo Free State, where, as Mr. Morel has shown, the stipulations are not being observed—in this French territory concessionnaire companies, composed of similar men to those constituting the Kongo companies, and partly of the same men, are exploiting the natives, and have failed to maintain the usually high standard of French policy in dealing with native races.

"Well, how far are we responsible? Some people know these things, and unwillingly say: 'Are we responsible? We can not go crusading alone in defense of native races.' We are very directly responsible. The antislavery people of this country are not, I am afraid, quite what their grandfathers were in the days of Wilberforce. The great Nonconformists in the days of our grandfathers were better and stronger men in dealing with questions of this sort than their descendants.

"It is the duty of all to speak out; but as regards our Government—as regards the United Kingdom—we are very deeply responsible. After we failed in making the treaty with Portugal, of which I spoke, this country took a leading part in founding the Kongo State, under circumstances which I have referred to, and since that time we have granted leases to the Kongo State, one of which leases is still in existence. The Kongo State at this very moment administers a large tract of territory, which it holds from us by lease, in what is known as the Lado enclave. Our responsibility, therefore, is great, as also is that of all the European powers, and it is greater in our case than in that of any other power. Surely with our antislavery traditions in this country, and surely as leaders of European trade—we are the greatest traders in Africa—surely as one of the greatest African powers, we ought to be, at all events, the first to act, and to act promptly in this matter. If others are not ready to act, we should show that we are ready.

"Yesterday I ventured to put a question to the Government. Having regard to the forthcoming motion of Mr. Samuel, I asked the under-secretary for foreign affairs whether, before the approaching debate on the Kongo State, it would be possible to lay before the House the recent reports of his Majesty's representatives in Africa as to the condition of the Kongo State, and especially of the territories within that State which are subject to monopoly concessions, and whether his Majesty's representatives had been instructed to make independent inquiries as to the observance or violation of the stipulations of the Berlin Conference for the protection of the natives. The answer of Viscount Cranborne was: 'There is only one British consul for the Kongo Free State. For various reasons he has been unable to travel to such an extent as to enable him to form anything like a full opinion on the condition of the State.

"'As I stated on March 11, it would be premature to consider the propriety of laying papers before Parliament. There have been no definite instructions on the points mentioned in the last part of the question, but they have in fact been the subject of repeated attention by the consul, and especially where native British subjects have been concerned.' I take this to mean that there are such reports, and that they are highly unfavorable to the Kongo Free State.

"I think it is the duty of our Government, whatever may be their desire to avoid international complications, to give us the fullest information on this subject.

"I am not concerned to deny that our trade interest is great, but apart from that interest our responsibility is great, and is great before the world. Now, Mr. Morrison praised the action of the Baptist Missionary Society. He praised, too, the action of our chairman in moving a resolution which differs in its form, in some degree, from what has fallen from our chairman to-night.

"I can not help thinking that that was a compromise resolution, and that the good parts represent our chairman's view, while the doubtful parts represent somebody else's. But the resolution, which is very strong, rightly treats the charges as proved. They are proved, sufficiently for our case, apart from any new evidence of Mr. Morrison. The uncontradicted part of the case is sufficient to justify us in treating the charges as proved. While the resolution to which I refer, passed at the Baptist Union assembly, calls upon Europe, and especially our own Government, to interpose, it also speaks of the duty of the Belgian Government to insist on an immediate inquiry into the charges preferred.

"I quite agree with Mr. Morrison that it is utterly useless to go to the government of the Kongo State and ask for an inquiry. Mr. Morrison mentioned just now that he saw three truck loads of slaves—what we should call slaves, for they were taken by force 900 miles from their homes—they were seized and taken a great distance in this enormous territory, and put to forced labor. I call that slavery; it is more than domestic slavery—it is the old slave trade. He told us that when he saw this example of the slave trade with his own eyes, and called the attention of the existing commission of inquiry (upon which there are two English Baptist missionaries) to it, no good resulted. That commission of inquiry was founded by the Kongo State simply as a means of shelving inconvenient questions, avoiding the investigations they professed to make.

"Just as in the case of Armenia there was an agreement that the powers should not call upon the Turkish Government—a better government than the Kongo Government—to make inquiry into the alleged atrocities, so it is felt to be useless in this case to call upon the Kongo Government to make any inquiry as to its own misdeeds. The only remedy for the evils we have heard described is the extirpation by the European powers of the rule which has made the Kongo State what it is. That is, I am convinced, the only true remedy for evils which have been proved beyond all doubt. At all events, if we can not obtain that, let us be first to show that we feel the responsibility that is upon us to act as the conveners of Europe in calling the powers together to consider the situation which we know.

"Recognizing the rights of individual men, as Englishmen do, surely our duty on this occasion is to speak out that which is within us, and take upon ourselves a responsibility in this matter which we can not ignore."

Mr. E. D. Morel, in seconding the resolution, said that after Sir Charles Dilke's admirable speech, which covered the whole ground, there was little left to add. He desired, however, to thank the Reverend Mr. Morrison for his courage in coming forward and telling them all he knew, and for his bravery in opposing the representatives of the Kongo Free State in Africa, possibly at some risk to himself.

He thought his conduct compared very favorably with that of some other people, whose extraordinary explanations and counter-explanations had been plentiful during the last few weeks. He did not wish to offend the susceptibilities of anyone present, but he could not understand how a missionary society with men in the Kongo—earnest men, one of whom he knew, and from whom he had often heard, and from whom the society had often heard—he could not understand, knowing what their agents knew, how that society could act as it had done. He passed, however, from that to another side of the question.

There were, in his opinion, two ways in which tropical Africa could be made use of by Europeans—a right way and a wrong way. Tropical Africa was not a place for the white man, except as overlord. He could do nothing unless by cooperation with the native. The policy that had built up the large legitimate trade now carried on with the west coast of Africa had been conducted on these lines: On the one hand they had had the European merchant, and on the other the native. The merchant wanted to get something the native had, and the native wanted something the merchant possessed. Both were recognized mutually as owning that which the other wished to get. That was legitimate trading, and the right way to develop equatorial Africa. The other conception was a very different one. The attitude was adopted that the native did not own the products of his forests, which by decrees became vested in the European. That was the policy of the Kongo Free State, and that was the system which lay at the root of all these abominations, which would continue so long as the system of appropriating the native's land and his property continued.

A negro was a man—more highly developed in some places than in others, but he was, before all, a man—and he must be treated as a man and not as a brute. If they treated him as a brute, by depriving him of his land and his property, they would have what they had got in the Kongo. The whole question of the development of Equatorial Africa lay in a nutshell. Was the native to be recognized as the owner of the land and of the products of the land or was he to be deprived of both by specious decrees and driven to collect produce at the bayonet's point for what his European taskmasters chose to part with in exchange?

Mr. Morel went on to explain how abuses had been developed in the Kasai country and legitimate trading hindered, as had been done in other parts of the Kongo State, until the whole of that vast territory had become a huge monopoly run by forced labor, and of which the medium of oppression was a native army of from 15,000 to 20,000 men, armed with weapons of precision. Sir Charles Dilke had said that we had a great moral responsibility in this matter. Yes, we had a great moral responsibility in this matter, and we had also a great practical question to consider.

Tropical Africa was probably the China of the future for the absorption of British manufactured goods, and, as business men, we could not afford to allow a huge country like that to be closed to our trade. Why should it be? What right had the King of the Belgians, or anyone else, to take a million square miles in Africa and close it to the trade of all nations? As Englishmen we had a right to protest against that, and to insist upon our Government remembering that commerce is the backbone of the prosperity of our country, and that we could not allow the markets of the future to be closed to us. He thought this was a matter in which Mr. Morrison, and other missionaries, and all merchants, and everybody interested in African questions, should join hands.

He did not think there had ever before been a case in which humanitarian and commercial considerations so coincided. Commercial interests were not always regarded as synonymous with humanitarian interests, but it was so in west Africa at any rate, where the merchant had a direct interest in the proper treatment of the native. In western Africa a common sense, humane policy meant a large trade, and so the closer the cooperation on a basis of mutual confidence between white and black, the better for both.

Mr. Thomas Bayley, M. P., in supporting the resolution, remarked that one of the things said by Mr. Morrison was that he began to see daylight on this question now that the Baptist Missionary Society was moving in the right direction. That society might have made mistakes in the past. People often erred through ignorance, but when they became enlightened they gave up their bad courses and pursued the true and proper path. He thought that the stand which Doctor Clifford had now taken on this question gave far more hope of satisfactory action on the part of the Baptist Missionary Society than they had previously had, although they must ever remember that this society had sacrificed many valuable lives in the Kongo Free State, and had done excellent work there through agents who devoted themselves to the cause of the oppressed natives.

If the society appeared to have gone to sleep for a while, there was hope that it would now arouse itself and take its old stand for Christianity, for freedom, for free trade, and the blessings of civilization. At bottom this question was very much one of free trade. An essential condition of the natives' deliverance from their present lot was that the freedom of trade in this Kongo region, provided for in treaty stipulations, should be really secured. We only demanded our rights, and those rights could not be denied to a great nation like ours if they were sought in a proper, dignified, and determined manner. What were we doing on the eastern side of Africa? We were spending ten millions of British money in Uganda. Of that money he did not think we should ever get a penny back.

Why were we spending this money? Avowedly for the suppression of the slave trade and for the trade benefit that, it was hoped, our merchants would get in that immense territory. Well, we need not, for commercial advantages, spend a million sterling or £100,000, or any sum at all, if only our Government would be firm enough in the Kongo Basin to say: "We will have our rights of free trade which Europe has guaranteed to us, and if you do not give them to us, we will put the present Kongo Government on one side, and intrust the future control of the country to others who will bow to the dictates of humanity and justice." That was the proper position for us to take up as a nation.

We should claim what was ours by treaty and by right, and, failing a proper response, we should insist on other directors being appointed to administer the concern. All the great States are in the position of directors to-day. The King of the Belgians was only appointed managing director, but the board of directors, the true managers, are England, France, Germany, and the United States. Those who had made the Kongo Free State could unmake it, and if the managing director was not doing his duty or was getting too much personally out of the concern, then his superiors must dismiss him and appoint somebody else. In his (Mr. Bayley's) opinion they could not afford their present managing director any longer, and he should like to see a new one appointed, a managing director who would deal with the country in a Christianizing way and with a due regard to the interest of the native, which was the greatest interest, and to the interests of civilization and the traders of this and other countries.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The resolution was then put, and carried with one dissentient, the dissentient being Mr. C. H. de R. Hensler, who rose in the body of the hall and said: "I should like to ask why, if these atrocities really existed, the Baptist Missionary Society did not arouse the civilized world to a knowledge of the facts before?"

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps I had better answer that. Perhaps I know as much about that as Mr. Morrison, who has been in Africa. The answer of the Baptist Missionary Society's agents is that none of these atrocities occurred in the districts in which they are laboring. They have been dependent for their information upon hearsay, and that hearsay has not been sufficient to justify them in making representations to headquarters. That statement has been made again and again by missionaries at our Baptist meetings. The only reason why the information presented to us to-night has not reached us before from the Kasai and other districts is, so far as I know, because an attempt was first made to deal with the King of the Belgians. I have seen a letter sent containing a good deal of the information conveyed to us by Mr. Morrison to-night, and when that information was forwarded to the King the answer received was that it should be dealt with by his judicial council.

I presume that the waiting for the King of the Belgians to carry out that promise led to the nonreporting in our papers of the atrocities with which the King was made acquainted.

Mr. ROBERT WHYTE. As the person who wrote to the King of the Belgians, I may say that I think the facts were published at that time both in the English and in the American papers. The reply received from the King was that the matter was then under the notice of his judicial commission, and that it would in due course be dealt with. And I asked His Majesty to let me know the result of the action of the commission or of their report.

Sir C. DILKE, M. P. I believe that Mr. Sjöblom, the Swedish missionary, laid down his life in this cause. I have no doubt he sacrificed his life for his truthfulness on this subject. He wore himself out. He put his case before the governor-general and was threatened, in consequence, by many officers of the Kongo Free State. He was threatened as to what would occur to him if he made those representations. He was specifically threatened with penal servitude for encouraging the natives not to obey the State and for inciting to rebellion—that was for a mere statement of facts which were not denied.

The Rev. W. M. MORRISON. There is another reason why information is withheld. From bitter experience the natives know it is better to remain silent about outrages on the part of State officers. They know they will fare worse by making revelations; so they calmly submit or flee. They dread the savage, cannibalistical soldiery, almost completely equipped with firearms. Their only refuge now is simply to run away to the forest.

Mr. HENSLER. Why has not Mr. Morrison brought the atrocities he mentioned under the notice of the Congo authorities on the spot?

The Rev. W. M. MORRISON. In my address I have mentioned that two or three of these charges were already brought to the notice of the government. I have done everything I could to bring the affair to the attention of the authorities, and I think I indicated plainly in my speech what has been the result of the investigations.

Mr. HENSLER. Is not Mr. Morrison a prejudiced party?

The Rev. W. M. MORRISON. I don't know why I should be. When I went to the Congo Free State in 1896 I went not knowing any of these things. I went with the highest expectations of splendid government because I had then only heard professions of philanthropy, justice, etc., that had emanated from Brussels. I went with the best possible intentions toward the government, and I have written that even to-day I am loyal to the government of the Congo Free State, if only they will give us justice.

Sir C. DILKE. The gentleman who is anxious for information will learn from Mr. Fox Bourne's book the date on which—the 24th of October, 1899—Mr. Morrison made charges, and the reply received was that the judicial commission had been informed of the charges, and Mr. Morrison reported the later cases to the representatives of his own country.

ANOTHER QUESTIONER. Would it not be fair to arm the natives with weapons with which to defend themselves?

The Rev. W. M. MORRISON. Well, you see, according to the act of Brussels, that is prohibited. Besides that, it would be very unjust, because if you arm the natives they would begin fighting with each other presently. I am still of opinion that, as far as possible, arms ought to be kept out.

The QUESTIONER. Would it not be possible to organize an army under white men to keep the cannibal and State soldiers in check and to guard the interests of the people? Would it not be possible to arm the natives so that they could defend themselves against aggression and cruelty?

Mr. HERBERT SAMUEL, M. P. I should like to ask Mr. Morrison one or two questions with regard to the specific cases he gave us. Did the officer who shot down the people, to whom Mr. Morrison referred, offer any explanation of his conduct?

The Rev. W. M. MORRISON. None.

Mr. SAMUEL. On what pretense were the men being taken down in the train? Were they recruits for the army, or simply intended for forced labor?

The Rev. W. M. MORRISON. I am unable to answer that question, as I saw no State official at all with reference to the matter. The last time I saw the men was when they got off the train at Boma under guard. I had no means of ascertaining what became of them after that. Some of the men, who I suppose were prisoners, were chained together with chains round the neck, perhaps a couple of dozen.

Mr. SAMUEL. Have you asked the King of the Belgians whether you can get land concessions—sites for missionary purposes?

The Rev. W. M. MORRISON. Yes; and I was informed that the Kongo Free State are not giving concessions of free land any more.

Mr. SAMUEL. And you offered to pay for land?

The Rev. W. M. MORRISON. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL. What about the Roman Catholics?

The Rev. W. M. MORRISON. After the refusal to concede land to us, on the ground that no more concessions were being made, I showed the Congo government, by a record in its 'Bulletin Official,' that in 1901 four concessions had been made to Roman Catholics at a time when they said no land was being granted. They could not give any explanation of that.

Sir W. Brampton Gurdon, M. P., then moved: "That this meeting expresses its pleasure that a debate on the Kongo question in the House of Commons has been arranged for the 20th of May, and urges all members of Parliament in sympathy with the object to give it their zealous support." He said he had very great sympathy with the remark just made about arming the natives in self-defense, if that were practicable. But it would take them all their time to effect this. In the first place, they must land their arms and face the Boma fortifications, and then take the weapons up the country. Even after that they could do no good unless they took a sufficient supply to enable them to defeat the whole soldiery of the Kongo State and assume possession of the entire country. Passing to the resolution, the mover said they were probably aware that it was only by ballot that members of Parliament could get an opportunity of bringing forward a motion, and Mr. Herbert Samuel had very fortunately secured a place for the 20th of that month. He knew that Mr. Samuel had given a great deal of attention to this Kongo question, and that he was a very good speaker. He did not think the motion could be in better hands. He could only hope that he would elicit a satisfactory answer from the Government, an answer that would silence the defenders of these outrages. He trusted that all members of Parliament interested in the question would be present, and that they would be able to show the Government and the country that they were earnest in this question of the good and humane government of the Kongo basin. He trusted that they would revert to the traditions of the days of Wilberforce and of their forefathers, who felt so keenly and earnestly on matters of this kind, and that they would be able to put a stop to outrages that were a blot on our boasted civilization.

Mr. F. A. Swanzy, of the London Chamber of Commerce, in seconding the resolution, said that, so far as the point of view of the merchant was concerned, Mr. Morel had put it very plainly. It seemed to him (Mr. Swanzy) that the merchants, whether they were interested in West or South Africa, were concerned above all others in seeing that the natives were properly treated, because it was from the natives they derived their wealth. He did not think it was the interest of the Kongo Free State to maintain the present state of things. It might be the interest of certain individuals, but that it should be the interest of a government, representing a nation, to carry on raiding such as now prevailed in the Kongo Free State, he could not believe. As regarded these terrible atrocities, he considered they were proved to the hilt; but whether they were proved to the hilt or not, they must conclude that from such a régime such results must follow. Where you have a system of huge monopoly—monopoly granted to concessionnaire companies empowered to purchase rubber from the natives—what do you find? You find these natives are forced to bring in rubber and to sell it to the concessionnaire companies at ridiculous prices. And, of course, such a state of things inevitably brings in its train these brutalities and enormities. It was the duty of our Government and of other governments interested in this matter and responsible for the right administration of this territory without delay to put the vile system down. It was not too late to do this. He was sincerely glad that Mr. Samuel had taken up this question and would bring it before the House of Commons.

The resolution was put, and passed unanimously.

Mr. Robert Whyte then moved a cordial vote of thanks to Dr. Clifford for presiding, and to the Rev. W. M. Morrison for his address.

Mr. Herbert Samuel, M. P., in seconding the motion, remarked that what he had to say on this question must be reserved for another time and place. Though this was a trading question, primarily and in the main it was a humanitarian question. In due course, no doubt, the interests of trade would be considered. There would also have to be considered a very important matter which had not been mentioned that night. Europe would be compelled to consider the question of the Kongo, not necessarily this year or next, but in 1907, for in 1890 the Brussels conference, at the request of the King of the Belgians, authorized the Kongo State to levy customs duties forbidden by the act of Berlin. The conference authorized those duties to be levied only for fifteen years after the signing of the Brussels act, and at the end of that time the whole position was to be reconsidered. Therefore, he (Mr. Samuel) thought they were well advised in stirring up public opinion in anticipation of that common action of the powers.

The motion having been unanimously adopted, the Rev. W. M. Morrison, in replying, expressed a fervent hope that England and the United States would ever be found the foremost advocates of justice and freedom throughout the world, and would unitedly seek to advance the cause of righteousness and of civilization.

The chairman, in acknowledging the compliment paid him, said that, so far as he was concerned, they need not have any misgivings about the Baptists. He should like them to bear in mind that while they had one resolution from the Baptist Missionary Society, they had another of a somewhat different kind from the Baptist Union, and the latter was precisely along the lines of the resolution passed that night. He had a theory, and he thought it was a sound one, that all societies and institutions were slow to move, and that only through individual initiative could they get any good accomplished on this planet. Hence it was not surprising to him that the Baptist Missionary Society had been a little slow in this matter; but he had no doubt that with a little prodding they would take the right position.

The meeting then terminated.

DOCUMENT VIII.—Letter of Rev. John H. Weeks, Monsembe, Africa.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY,
Monsembe, June 13, 1903.

Monsieur LE COMMISSAIRE DE DISTRICT DU BANGALA.

DEAR SIR: I wish to inform you that I arrived last Saturday at Monsembo to take up my residence again here after a furlough in Europe of eighteen months.

It distresses me much to see and hear that this town and others of this and neighboring districts are in a more deplorable state than they were two years ago. When we came to settle in Monsembe in 1890 there were over 7,000 people between here and Bokongo. In 1900 there were very few over 3,000, and now there are not many over 1,000. If the decrease continues at the same rate, in another five years there will be no people left.

Many things have conduced to this deplorable decrease in population.

Will you pardon me if I presume on my thirteen years' residence in this district and my twenty-two years' residence on the Kongo to point out to you what appear to me to be the principal reasons for the sad and alarming diminution of one of the finest tribes of the Kongo Free State?

They are, I think, as follows:

(1) The continual deportation of young men (and in a lesser degree of young women) to serve as soldiers and workmen for the State; and the very few that ever return home. As a consequence of this drainage of the young blood and strength of the district there is a marked paucity of children, so that the deaths are far in advance of the births. Had the demand for men been levied in a fixed and regular manner, it might not have been so harmful. But it has been levied (so it appears to us) at the caprice of the authorities for the time being without any regard for population.

(2) The flight of the people from the river to get away from oppressive taxation. As an example of this I would mention the towns of Lobengo and Mantele, which a few years ago were large and prosperous towns, but are now simply grass and bush, with not a single person living in them.

(3) Sleeping sickness has undoubtedly carried off many, but from careful observation of this and other parts of Kongo, where I have resided, I think that this disease would never have taken such a hold on the people if they had not had their spirit crushed out of them by an ever-increasing burden of taxation that has taken the heart out of them and made life not worth living.

(4) The heavy burden of taxation, which for each person is becoming heavier and heavier because fewer are left to share it. It was some time in 1895 that the people in this district were first taxed, and the tax was then fixed, I presume, according to the population of the district. Since then three-fourths of the people have been deported, fled, or died, yet the tax has not been reduced one iota to relieve a broken-spirited, diminished, and dying people. Again, in 1890-1895 goats exchanged hands for 100 to 150 rods; from 1896 to 1901 the price rose steadily to 800 rods, and now, in 1903, the price ranges from 1,500 to 2,500 rods. Yet, notwithstanding the high price of goats and the decrease in population, the tax in goats and fish, which was doubled in 1897, has remained the same ever since. I think you will see from this that the burden of taxation has become more than a dying people can bear if you wish to have any people left to govern.

(5) The imposition of whimsical fines, out of all proportion to real or supposed offenses, is sapping the life of the people. As an example of this, take the recent visit of "Mabata" (I regret that I can only give his native name) to this town. He quartered himself, with over twenty soldiers and many paddlers, twice on a people that had broken no law and had refused no demand of the State. The second time he came, because food for his increased crowd was not forthcoming at once he took the chief, Mangumbe, appointed by the State itself, and carried him as hostage to his sleeping camp, some miles up river, until the food arrived. He also demanded from this Monsembe district of 300 people 8,000 rods, and although he was frequently asked the reason for such a demand, he never deigned to give one.

Among the 800 people that comprised the districts below us, viz, Bongwele, Malele, Bokomela, Mungundu, and Bokongo, he quartered himself and his men for over a month, which sadly taxed their resources, and in addition demanded and tied up people until he obtained nearly 50,000 rods from them.

Surely, if no proper explanation of this is given, we shall be within our rights in referring this matter to the authorities at Boma.

Have the delinquencies of these people been tried in a properly constituted court? Is "Mabata" a judge that he has power to impose such so-called "fines?" In addition to a tax that presses sorely, these unfortunate people are subjected also to irregular and capricious demands.

We pray you, for humanitarian reasons, to lighten the burdens of these people and to bring their taxation within their limited and decreasing means. It is heartrending to compare this district now with what it was in 1890. At that date in the Mungala Creek there were more than 1,500 people; now there are scarcely 200, and thus one can take district after district with the same sad tale to tell. In 1890 the towns were well kept, clean, and tidy, with neatly built houses; now they are ill kept and very slovenly, because at any moment the inhabitants fear they may have to flee to the bush for refuge or have their towns looted and burned through inability to meet some heavy demand. Then, also, there was some security for life and property, for men defended them by the strength of their arms; now there is no security for either.

In reply to some of the above statements, it may be said that the State pays for what the natives take to Bangala, but the remuneration paid is less than one-tenth of the real value. And the natives are forced to take produce to the State under threat of having their towns burned down and have to accept for their goods what is given them.

Again we pray you to do all you possibly can for the amelioration of these unfortunate people, that the remnant may not die out, but rather be fostered again in a strong tribe.

With every assurance of my best wishes,

Believe me to be, yours, sincerely, JOHN H. WEEKS.

[Extract from notes of a journey to Lake Leopold II in July, August, and September, 1903, by the Rev. A. E. Scrivener. From the West African Mail, January 8, 1904.]

Just as the sun was setting we reached a large and imposing State post, a large quadrangle, say 300 rods square, surrounded by wattle and daub erections. I expected at least two white men would be resident, but was surprised to find only a retired soldier, with a few nondescripts to assist. There was a long house, which, I was told, had been the residence of a white man they called ——. I had heard before of this man from the refugees in the neighborhood of Bolobo, and was naturally curious to know more about him. But there was no need to probe or question.

From the work people about the post and the few wretched people in the miserable village adjoining the post came spontaneously stories of the most atrocious deeds and of murders of such a wholesale character that it was difficult to believe them. All round the post, which was splendidly situated and commanded fine views in all directions, were plentiful signs of the former population. This place, Mbolo, had been the home of some of the people near Bolobo, and I had heard many stories of the big villages and the many chiefs. But, alas! I could only hear of three very small villages, and later I heard from a white official that the total remaining population did not number 100, all told. * * *

I heard later on, when near the lake, that the famous or, rather, infamous ——— had been resident at Mbolo only seven months; that he had found it, as things go in this land, very well populated, and that he left it a waste. * * *

Soon we began talking, and without any encouragement on my part they began the tales I had become so accustomed to. They were living in peace and quietness when the white men came in from the lake with all sorts of requests to do this and that, and they thought it meant slavery. So they attempted to keep the white men out of their country, but without avail. The rifles were too much for them. So they submitted and made up their minds to do the best they could under the altered circumstances.

First came the command to build houses for the soldiers, and this was done without a murmur. Then they had to feed the soldiers and all the men and women—hangers on—who accompanied them. Then they were told to bring in rubber. This was quite a new thing for them to do. There was rubber in the forest several days away from their homes, but that it was worth anything was news to them. A small reward was offered, and a rush was made for the rubber. "What strange white men, to give us cloth and beads for the sap of a wild vine." They rejoiced in what they thought their good fortune. But soon the reward was reduced, until at last they were told to bring in the rubber for nothing. To this they tried to demur, but to their great surprise several were shot by the soldiers and the rest were told, with many curses and blows, to go at once or more would be killed.

Terrified, they began to prepare their food for the fortnight's absence from the village which the collection of rubber entailed. The soldiers discovered them sitting about. "What, not gone yet?" Bang! Bang! Bang! and down fell one and another, dead, in the midst of wives and companions. There is a terrible wail and an attempt made to prepare the dead for burial, but this is not allowed. All must go at once to the forest. Without food? Yes, without food. And off the poor wretches had to go without even their tinder boxes to make fires. Many died in the forests of exposure and hunger, and still more from the rifles of the ferocious soldiers in charge of the post. In spite of all their efforts the amount fell off, and more and more were killed.

I could not hear of any white man being directly connected with this slaughter. It seems to have been the work of four or five soldiers sent to take charge of that district. I was shown round the place, and the sites of former big chiefs' settlements were pointed out. A careful estimate made the population of, say, seven years ago to be 2,000 people in and about the post within a radius of, say, a quarter of a mile. All told, they would not muster 200 now. And there is so much sadness and gloom about them that they are fast decreasing.

We stayed there all day on Monday and had many talks with the people. On the Sunday some of the boys had told me of some bones which they had seen, so on the Monday I asked to be shown these bones. Lying about on the grass within a few yards of the house I was occupying were numbers of human bones, in some cases complete skeletons. I counted thirty-six skulls, and saw many sets of bones from which the skulls were missing. I called one of the men and asked the meaning of it. "When the ruber palaver began," said he, "the soldiers shot so many we grew tired of burying, and very often we were not allowed to bury, and so just dragged the bodies out into the grass and left them. There are hundreds all round, if you would like to see them."

But I had seen more than enough, and was sickened by the stories that came from men and women alike of the awful time they has passed through. The Bulgarian atrocities might be considered as mildness itself when compared with what was done here. How the people submitted I don't know, and even now I wonder as I think of their patience. That some of them managed to run away is some cause for thankfulness. Many of the worst stories came from present employees of the State, who for a little inducement would be quite capable of repeating anything that has already been done. * * *

In due course we reached Iboli. I had heard already that which led me not to expect much in the way of buildings. There was hardly a sound of building on the place. The one white man, a clerk, apologized for the necessity, but said he thought I had better put up my tent. I might, he said, erect it under the roof of the partially finished house of the commandant. I saw this, but it was so dark and gloomy that I preferred to stay outside. My boys, however, elected to sleep there, but in the night had to move on on account of the rain coming through onto them. Why such dilapidation?

The commandant away for a trip likely to extend into three months; the sublieutenant away in another direction on a punitive expedition. In other words, station must be neglected and rubber hunting carried out with all vigor. I stayed there two days, and the one thing that impressed itself upon me was the collection of rubber. I saw long files of men come in, as at Bongo, with their little baskets under their arms, saw them paid their milk tin full of salt and the 2 yards of calico flung to the headmen; saw their trembling timidity and, in fact, a great deal that all went to prove the state of terrorism that exists and the virtual slavery in which the people are held.

POST-OFFICE AT PORTLAND, OREG.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate at his earliest convenience copies of all correspondence between the Department and its agents and contractors relating to the leasing and fitting up of the building now used as a temporary post-office in the city of Portland, State of Oregon, and of the action of the Department thereon; and also that he advise the Senate as to whether the proposal of Hartman, Thompson & Powers, of date February 16, 1903, for rented quarters for such building was or was not accepted by the Department, and, if so, whether such acceptance was based on the recommendation of any agent or agents of the Department; and also whether the building covered by the proposal of Hartman, Thompson & Powers was investigated and reported upon by any agent or agents of the Department prior to its acceptance by the Department, and, if so, the character of such report or reports; that he also advise the Senate as to the exact area in square feet of the ground floor, and also of each of the several floors of the building above the ground floor of the building actually furnished by Hartman, Thompson & Powers; also that he advise the Senate as to the date of the contract entered into between the Department and Hartman, Thompson & Powers, and the date when the Department notified the lessors, if ever, that there was any discrepancy between the character of their proposal and the building actually furnished and accepted by the Department; also that he advise the Senate as to whether the rent due said Hartman, Thompson & Powers for said building is being withheld by the Department, and, if so, for what length of time and for what amount has the same been withheld and the reasons for withholding the same.

CLAIM OF CHARLES SMITH.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to advise the Senate, at his earliest convenience, as to whether the claim of Charles Smith, late deputy collector of customs, Circle City, Alaska, of $1,100 for compensation for services as such deputy from October 1, 1898, to March 31, 1899, and of $300 for traveling expenses incurred by him as deputy collector during that period, amounting in all to $1,700, has ever been by the Department approved for payment and reported to Congress, and if subsequently disapproved by the Department the reasons therefor; also whether said claim or any part thereof has been at any time referred for investigation and report to any agent or agents of the Department, and if any report or reports have ever been made thereon to transmit to the Senate copies of each thereof; and that he also transmit to the Senate copies of all papers on file in the Department relating to said claim or any part thereof.

PURCHASE OF CAMP SITES.

Mr. QUARLES. I present a letter signed by the Secretary of War relating to the necessity of the purchase of camp sites. I ask that the letter may be printed as a supplement to the report of the committee upon the camp-sites bill, which has been already reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection the letter which the Senator from Wisconsin presents will be printed as a supplement to the report on the bill named by him.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. QUARLES. I now ask leave to call up the conference report upon the army appropriation bill. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the request I have just made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report on the bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, is before the Senate. The report was read in full and discussed yesterday.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there is a provision in this report as to Senate amendment numbered 29 to which I object. I observe that the conference report makes a considerable change in the language of the amendment as it was put in the bill by the Senate. I want to move that the Senate concur in the report with an amendment. I want to strike out a portion of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can not be done.

Mr. TELLER. Can we not nonconcur with an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can not be done.

Mr. TELLER. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate nonconcur in the report; and I want to state why I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves to disagree to the conference report.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I was under the impression that I could move to nonconcur with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No amendment is admissible. If the Senator desires an amendment adopted, the only way is to reject the report.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I take it that the Senator from Colorado has one thing in view, and that is this particular matter to which he has referred. I take it he does not seek to reject the entire report, but for the purpose of moving an amendment he asks the Senate not to accept the report. I think that is the attitude of the Senator. He does not oppose the whole report or action upon the bill, but he wishes an opportunity of offering his amendment, and so he asks that the Senate do not adopt the report. Of course if the Senate nem. con. agrees to that in order that the Senator from Colorado may offer his amendment, then after the amendment is offered and has been passed upon by the Senate, the report will be accepted and the bill will pass, or else the Senator's amendment will pass; but that is the only way under our rules that any Senator can secure the adoption of an amendment in such a case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He can not get it in that way.

Mr. HALE. He can get a disagreement on that particular item.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He can get a disagreement on that, and then the conferees might change their report.

Mr. TELLER. Can I get an agreement on everything except the amendment to which I object?

Mr. ALDRICH. No.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can get an agreement.

Mr. TELLER. Can I get an agreement on everything else, and a disagreement as to this particular amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the intricacies of a conference committee are rather beyond me. I want to say that the Senate put an amendment in the bill similar to what the Senate has put in other bills on several occasions, to enable the President of the United States to retire certain officers with an increased grade, and it applies only to officers who were engaged in the civil war. I think the Senate has passed such a bill three or four times, but we have never been able to get it through the House of Representatives. The House on some occasions have limited the provision to those who should hereafter retire, leaving out many meritorious officers who had already retired, and finally the committee of conference put it in this shape, to which I object:

That any officer of the Army below the grade of brigadier-general who served with credit as an officer or as an enlisted man in the regular or volunteer forces during the civil war prior to April 9, 1865, otherwise than as a cadet, and whose name is borne on the official register of the Army, and who has heretofore been, or may hereafter be, retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service, or on account of age, or after forty years' service, may, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be placed on the retired list of the Army with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of retirement: Provided, That this act shall not apply to any officer who received an advance of grade since the date of his retirement or who has been restored to the Army and placed on the retired list by virtue of the provisions of a special act of Congress.

Mr. President, the objection I make is to this language: "On account of age or after forty years' service." I desire, if I can ever get where it will be in order to do so, to move to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty." I will say that I believe that will include about five officers who are on the retired list and who are excluded from this provision.

Under the provisions of the existing law a large number of army officers have been retired and appointed to one grade above what their retiring grade was supposed to be, and perhaps the next day they have been placed on the retired list. A great number of colonels have been made brigadier-generals, and a large number of subordinate officers have been made colonels. I do not myself complain of that. It was the only way by which the additional rank could be conferred.

Mr. President, every man who has served his Government as an officer has an ambition to have a grade higher than that at which he has been serving as an officer. It carries with it not only the distinction of a higher grade, but it carries with it, Mr. President, what I think is of some importance, but not as much to the generality of the officers as that of rank—it carries additional pay; and the pay of a retired officer is not high after all. But forty years' service, exclusive of a cadetship, is more than a nation, having proper regard for the services of its officers, ought to exact. If we have not made the general rule of giving additional grade, we have gone so far in it and have given so many grades that it seems to me, in order that there shall be no invidious distinction, we ought to give it to all the officers who have had that kind of service. As I have said, if you put this at forty years, you will probably exclude five or six. I believe, with a little reflection, I could name about five, and I think I have had correspondence practically with every man who would be shut out by this provision requiring forty years' service.

What I want to do, Mr. President—and I propose to ask the sense of the Senate on it—is to say to the other body that we will accept their modification—which I do not entirely like—provided we shall be allowed to provide that the men who have served thirty years on the active list and who have been retired either on account of age or on account of physical disabilities shall have the opportunity of being promoted one grade above that to which they would be otherwise entitled.

There are, as I said, these few persons who were not retired by the military board because of disabilities; but, recognizing their disabilities, they said to the Department that they were unable to continue longer in the service of the Government and that they desired to be retired. Thereupon, on their application, the Government, without first sending them before the board, allowed them to retire.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator see any particular reason why the limit should be made forty years instead of thirty?

Mr. TELLER. There is not any reason for the limit unless the purpose is to shut off certain men. Thirty years of active service is long enough for any officer who has done his duty to be deserving of the kindly regard of the nation he has served.

If it is possible to get where we can have a vote on the question whether the time shall be thirty years or forty years, I want to get it. I believe public sentiment everywhere would sustain us in insisting that the rule should not be more than thirty years instead of forty years.

Mr. President, I want to make the proper motion if I can, and if I can not get a vote on thirty years now I want to get a vote that will be a practical instruction to the committee of conference to stand for thirty years as against forty years.

Mr. CULLOM. If we defeat the conference report, we shall then have a chance to get it.

Mr. LODGE. We could reject the conference report, and then instruct the conferees.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I believe we do not instruct committees of conference. We have had a great deal of discussion about that question heretofore in the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I did not want to move to instruct the committee. I will trust the committee. If the Senate will indicate its wish to have thirty years fixed instead of forty, the committee will then take care of it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If I understand—but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ALLISON] knows better than I do about it—the rejection of a conference report upon the discussion of an item in the report is considered equivalent to an instruction of the Senate to the conferees, but we have not, as I understand it, formally instructed our committees of conference.

Mr. ALLISON. We have not, I believe, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to suggest to the Senator that the acceptance of this conference report——

Mr. QUARLES. We can not hear the Senator, and I am very anxious to hear what the Senator from Iowa says.

Mr. ALLISON. If this conference report shall be agreed to and the matter thus disposed of for the present, it does not foreclose in any way the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] from dealing with the four or five meritorious persons of whom he speaks at some other time, and dealing with them in a way that ought to be satisfactory; but I suggest that we will still find difficulty, after we shall have rejected this report, in accomplishing at this time what the Senator desires, from the fact, as I understand it, that we have put an amendment on this bill with reference to this item which the House disagreed to and have persisted in disagreeing to. Therefore I believe the best way—if I may be permitted to make a suggestion to the Senator from Colorado, who has really had more experience than I have in these matters—is to agree to the report, and then the Senator is not foreclosed from dealing with this subject either at this session or at some future one so as to do justice to those officers.

Mr. QUARLES. I think, under the circumstances, it is due to the Senate that they should understand exactly not only the present situation of this legislation, but what took place in the committee of conference since this matter was intrusted to your committee. Let me say, in the first place, that when this bill came from the House it had no clause in it whatever relating to the matter of retirement.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is mistaken, I think, or else I am. Did the committee report that retirement clause?

Mr. QUARLES. On page 16 of the original bill, numbered 29, you will find the amendment of the Senate printed in italics, where it appears for the first time in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator is correct; I was mistaken, but the Senate committee proposed an amendment which we modified somewhat.

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly. That amendment was a very liberal one and allowed this increase of grade to all retired officers below the grade of brigadier-general—that is, all field, line, and staff officers, as we phrased it, below the grade of brigadier-general—with creditable records who served during the civil war. Those were the only conditions that the Senate amendment imposed upon the discretion of the President regarding this matter of an increase of grade.

When the conference came on the House conferees objected to this provision entirely, and it resulted in a complete disagreement between the two Houses, which was reported severally to the Houses. Then we had a second conference, when the House conferees still insisted that this provision should not go into the bill at all; but finally they went back to the House and obtained an amendment there to the bill providing substantially what is known as the "Dick bill." They brought that back to conference, and that, on examination, was found to preclude this increase of grade to any officer of the Army who, since the Spanish war, had received two promotions, although he had earned those promotions in the usual course of service.

To that, of course, your conferees could not agree. And thereupon the House conferees yielded that point and yielded several other propositions. So we pruned down the amendment until it took the form in which you find it in the present conference report.

Now, your conferees looked into this matter, and we found that the clause of which the Senator from Colorado is complaining would leave out only some five or six meritorious officers who had retired under the thirty-years clause, having had thirty years' service under the law whereby they asked for retirement, and it is not made compulsory on the part of the President. We thought that, rather than to have a further disagreement between the two Houses, it would be better for us to concede this, and then, as we concluded, we could from time to time, if necessary, pass special bills for these five or six meritorious cases.

I do not think there will be any trouble about it whatever. But we thought that you would desire that we should agree to this, although it was not satisfactory to the Senate conferees, rather than have the bill fail. That was the way in which the matter stood—we could either accept this or let the bill fail.

Mr. CULLOM. If only five or six persons would be included, if it were thirty instead of forty years, does the Senator think that the inclusion of the five or six men would result in the failure of the conference?

Mr. QUARLES. That was the exact attitude of the conferees on the part of the House. They yielded to us first on the proposition as to whether there should be anything in the bill on the subject; secondly, as to the provision of their own amendment, yielding three or four different points on that. Then it came to a point where they would yield no more.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me rather an unreasonable sort of attitude for those gentlemen to assume. When the inclusion of only five or six men would clean up the whole list, I am surprised that there should be hesitancy to agree if the House conferees would agree to any number of years of service.

Mr. QUARLES. I would remind the Senator that we had seventy-five propositions where we were in disagreement. The Senator knows that in all such cases conciliation has to be practiced in order to reach a conclusion, and the attitude of the House on a great many propositions and the attitude of the Senate have their influence when you come to the final propositions that have to be considered.

Mr. ALGER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. ALGER. Mr. President, I advised the acceptance of this compromise. I shall be very glad to join in taking care, under separate bills, of these five or six old soldiers who I know should be cared for, but, feeling that there was danger that we might not agree, I thought it best, so far as my counsel was concerned, to advise the acceptance of this agreement.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I observed what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said about special bills. After some experience in this body I know the difficulty of getting through a special bill. If I were as young as I was when I entered the Senate, I might hope to see those bills pass, but in the nature of things I can not be here long enough, in my judgment, to see them pass. I do not believe that if I live out my term I shall see them pass, unless I can secure the assistance of the Senator from Wisconsin who has just addressed the Senate, and of the Senator from Michigan. If I could secure their support, I believe I could pass the bills for these meritorious cases, for I think they are just as meritorious as any that will have the benefit of this bill.

Mr. QUARLES. I wish to say to the Senator, if he will permit me to interrupt him——

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. QUARLES. That as the Senate Committee on Military Affairs is now organized there will be no question about a unanimous report on each one of those cases, and I do not think there will be any trouble at all in passing the bills through the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. What I want to accomplish is in part accomplished by this amendment. I do not wish to jeopardize even what we have secured, for I know something about the difficulty the committee has had. I understand from those who are wiser in this matter than I am that the proper motion in this case is to concur. If we do not concur, then the matter is open.

Mr. CULLOM. To agree.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Massachusetts says "concur." I am yielding to him because I think he knows more about it than I do. I do not care to call for the yeas and nays on this matter. If the Senate thinks it ought to concur in the report, I will take the pledge of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER], who promises his assistance at the next session, and of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], who speaks for the committee, and we will try to take care at the next session of Congress of the cases which I greatly regret we could not take care of in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who has left the Chamber temporarily and asked me to call up the sundry civil appropriation bill, I do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the sundry civil appropriation bill, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 14416) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

UNION STATION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 14901) to provide for payment of damages on account of changes of grade due to construction of the Union Station, District of Columbia, which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is an important bill. The work is going on at the Union Station. The Senate committee has reported a similar bill, which is now on the Calendar. I request the Senator from Illinois to permit me to ask consideration for the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Will it lead to any debate?

Mr. GALLINGER. It will lead to no debate whatever.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The bill was read the second time at length; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the bill (S. 2793) to provide for payment of damages on account of changes of grade due to construction of the Union Station, District of Columbia, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for the purpose of calling up a bill in relation to matters in the Indian Territory. It is a House bill, and is of immediate and seemingly pressing importance. I am sure it will lead to no debate whatever. I wish to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator if the bill leads to no debate. I should like to go on a little while during the day with the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If it leads to any debate, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11963) regulating the practice of medicine and surgery in the Indian Territory.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Minnesota, who is not in his seat, proposed an amendment, to which I have no objection, and that is the insertion of the words "Christian science" at the end of line 15, on page 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "massage," in line 15, section 16, page 7, insert "Christian science."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to interfere very seriously with the consideration of this bill, but I wish to call attention to one or two facts in connection with it.

I have had something to do with the enactment of laws in my own State and the District of Columbia regulating the practice of medicine. We have always insisted not only that a practitioner should have a diploma, but that likewise he should be subjected to an examination by a medical board, which boards exist in all the States and in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, unless it be in the Indian Territory. I do not know whether such a board exists in the Indian Territory, but I notice that the pending bill provides that any person having a diploma may practice medicine in the Indian Territory.

Mr. President, the requirements are very strict in this bill, and properly so, as to the course of instruction. They shall be instructed in—

> Anatomy, physiology, chemistry, toxicology, histology, pathology, hygiene, materia medica, therapeutics, obstetrics, bacteriology, medical jurisprudence, gynecology, principles and practice of medicine and surgery, and specially requiring clinical instruction in the last two named of not less than four hours per week in each during the last two courses of lectures.

That is a very proper provision.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the bill drive out of practice the Indian medicine man?

Mr. GALLINGER. I was coming to that point.

When a man or woman takes that course and gets a diploma he or she ought to be pretty well qualified to practice medicine, the requirement being for four years' course of study and instruction in those various subjects. But, Mr. President, when we come to the proviso, we find that when these accomplished and educated physicians get there they come in competition with herb doctors who are not required to attend a course of lectures, who are not required to know anything about pathology or hygiene or materia medica or surgery or anything else except herbs, and they are exempted from the provisions of the proposed law. So this educated man comes in direct competition with an herb doctor, who has not been required to spend an hour in a medical school. He also comes in competition with the osteopath, who is not required to take an examination.

The educated physician comes in competition with a masseur, and, according to the amendment just adopted, he comes in competition with the Christian Science healer. It is an extraordinary proviso to go in a bill providing for the regulation of the practice of medicine in any part of this country or in any civilized community. I think there are doubtless conditions in the Indian Territory different from those in any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, but if we commence in Congress by legislating to exempt those classes of people from the law I do not know why, when they ask us to do it in the legislation in the States and in the District, we ought not likewise to do it there and here. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I wanted to state the peculiarities of the proviso, which really ought to be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. I yielded for the consideration of this bill——

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all I have to say.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the idea that it would not lead to debate. If it leads to no further debate, I will allow the bill to proceed.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Senator from Wyoming the bill in charge?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator whether the bill would not be improved as a literary production if the letter "y" were added to the word "osteopath," in line 15 of the last page.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think not; "osteopath" being an adjective, and referring to the "treatment" following.

Mr. SPOONER. Does it mean osteopath treatment?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suppose that is what it means.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it should be "osteopathic" treatment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Possibly so.

Mr. SPOONER. But as the bill is a matter of grave importance I do not care to delay it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PHARMACY IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he has in charge a bill regulating pharmacy in the Indian Territory. I have had many letters respecting the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have it in charge, and I intend to call it up at the earliest opportunity. I have the bill in my desk now, and I would ask the Senator from Iowa to yield, but for the fact that I have trespassed upon his time so far this morning. The bill should be brought up, as it is of great importance.

Mr. ALLISON. At some other time I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the appropriation bill will be proceeded with.

RAILROADS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. ALLISON. I have agreed to yield to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] for a bill which he informs me will not lead to debate.

Mr. LONG. I desire to call up the bill (S. 5454) permitting the Ozark and Cherokee Central Railroad Company and the Arkansas Valley and Western Railway Company, and each or either of them, to sell and convey their railroads and other property in the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company or to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO COMMODORE BARRY.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for the passage of a short bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator if the bill leads to no debate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think there will be no debate. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1547) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Commodore John Barry.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there shall be erected in the city of Washington, D. C., a statue to the memory of Commodore John Barry; and for the purpose of procuring and erecting said statue with a suitable pedestal, and for the preparation of a site, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of a commission to be composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the Chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. That the commission herein created is empowered to select a site for the statue authorized by this act on ground belonging to the Government: Provided, That said statue shall not be located in the grounds of the Capitol or Library of Congress.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to refresh my memory in regard to history, and I ask to have the report read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is a very brief report covering only one page. If the Senator from New Jersey insists on having it read, I ask that it be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will be able to state briefly the contents of the report.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I shall hardly dare to undertake to describe the patriotic service of this Revolutionary officer as it is done so well here in one page of the report. It is far more thrilling than any appropriation bill, and I hope the Senator from Iowa will hear the report read.

Mr. KEAN. I think the report might be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Very well.

There being no objection, the report submitted by Mr. HANSBROUGH on the 6th instant was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1547) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Commodore John Barry, have had the same under consideration and report it back with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That there shall be erected in the City of Washington, D. C., a statue to the memory of Commodore John Barry; and for the purpose of procuring and erecting said statue with a suitable pedestal, and for the preparation of a site, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of a commission to be composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives.

"SEC. 2. That the commission herein created is empowered to select a site for the statue authorized by this act on ground belonging to the Government: Provided, That said statue shall not be located in the grounds of the Capitol or Library of Congress."

John Barry was born on the seacoast of County Wexford, Ireland, about 1745. He left his home at an early age for Philadelphia, and is recorded as "clearing" from that port in 1766 as captain of a schooner. In 1769 he was elected a member of the "Society for the Relief of Poor and Distressed Masters of Ships," and in 1774 was made captain of the Black Prince, a merchant vessel. In 1775 he was placed in command of the Lexington, which had just been fitted out by the Continental Congress, and for which "he gave up the command of the finest ship and best employment in America."

Speaking of his selection, Bailey's American Naval Biography says:

"At this interesting crisis it became important to select officers whose valor and discretion, whose experience and skill, could give the utmost efficiency to our insignificant means of defense and annoyance. The rare union in Commodore Barry of these qualities recommended him to the notice of Congress."

On April 11, 1776, he brought into the port of Philadelphia the Edward, and he is said, in Preble's Origin of the Flag, to be the first who "bore the continental flag to victory on the ocean." This was followed by several other victories, recounted by Henry Fisher, Cæsar Rodney, and Josiah Bartlett.

In February, 1778, Barry, with four rowboats, captured two ships and a schooner in the lower Delaware, of which exploit Frost's Naval Biography says:

"For boldness of design and dexterity of execution it was not surpassed, if equaled, during the war."

Part of the captured stores were forwarded to Washington, at Valley Forge, who wrote:

"I congratulate you on the success which has crowned your gallantry and address in the late attack on the enemy's ships."

In 1778 he was attacked on the Raleigh by a superior force, but succeeded in running his vessel on shore. In Watson's Annals the fight is called "a noble and daring defense." Later he was placed in command of the Alliance, so named in honor of the unity existing between America and France, the best ship ever owned by the Continental Congress, and sent to convey Commissioner Laurens, Thomas Paine, and Count de Noailles, brother-in-law of Lafayette, to Paris. On his return voyage he captured the Atlanta and the Trepassy, and was severely wounded.

In November, 1781, he was intrusted with the conveyance of Lafayette to France. He had the honor to fight the last battle of the Revolution, in which he whipped the British frigate The Sybil.

His prizes for one voyage alone sold in the French ports for $2,316,000, and helped to cause the British merchants to petition for peace.

While the American fleet was compelled to be idle in the Delaware, Barry recruited a company and served in the battles of Trenton and Princeton.

On the acknowledgment of independence Barry returned to the merchant service, where he remained until 1794, when our commerce being threatened by Algerine pirates and by the war between England and France, it became necessary that "a naval force should be provided for its protection." To command this force President Washington, on June 3, 1794, nominated six captains, Barry being named first in the list. He was given, by courtesy, the title of commodore, which was not legally established until 1862. When the naval forces were reduced under Jefferson, Barry was one of the nine captains retained. He remained in the service of the nation until his death, at Philadelphia, on September 13, 1803.

After his demise, Mr. Dennie, editor of The Portfolio, a literary journal of the period, wrote:

"His eminent services during our struggle for independence, the fidelity and ability with which he discharged the duties of the important stations which he filled, give him a lasting claim upon the gratitude of his country."

His epitaph was written by Dr. Benjamin Rush, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and recites in part that—was born in the County of Wexford in Ireland; that America was the object of his patriotism, and the theatre of his usefulness.

In the Revolutionary War which established the independence of the United States
he took an early and active part as a Captain in the Navy and afterwards became Commander-in-Chief.
He fought often and once bled in the Cause of Freedom.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported as a substitute by the Committee on the Library.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES FROM TARGET PRACTICE.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Iowa will yield to me——

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. There is a little bill, Senate bill 4236, which I should like to have passed.

Mr. ALLISON. Being a little bill, I hope it will not lead to debate.

Mr. HALE. If it does, I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 4236) to pay claimants for damages to private property by reason of mortar practice at Fort Preble, Me., during the fall of 1901, as reported by a board of army officers constituted to ascertain the same.

Mr. SPOONER. Will not the Senator from Maine make some explanation of the bill?

Mr. HALE. I can not unless the Senator from Iowa will consent. I agreed that if it gave rise to debate I would withdraw it.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the Senator from Iowa will object.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield for a brief explanation.

Mr. HALE. I will say in a few words to the Senate that there have been bills of this kind from all over the country where property of private citizens has been destroyed or damaged by the firing of heavy guns that have been put up by the Ordnance Department. Several of those claims have been sent to the Committee on Appropriations for embodiment on deficiency appropriation bills. I do not think that that is the proper place for them, and therefore instead of resorting to that I had this matter presented to the proper committee of the Senate, which, after an examination into the several amounts, has reported this bill. I propose to take my chance on getting it through the other House rather than to ask the Committee on Appropriations to put it on the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator from Maine state what committee reported the bill?

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Claims. That is the proper committee. It is a claim. It is not a matter that ought to be put upon an appropriation bill. I did not resort to the Committee on Appropriations, but sent it to the Committee on Claims, which has reported the bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think it needs a little more careful investigation than the subject can be given now, and I object.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator objects, then of course it will go over.

TIMBER FOR MINING AND DOMESTIC PURPOSES.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for the consideration of a short bill, one that will occasion no debate, I am sure.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from Oregon, but I hope after this bill shall be disposed of I may be permitted to go on with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2994) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes," approved June 3, 1878, so that the provisions of said act shall be extended to and include the States of Oregon, Washington, and California.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRRIGATION IN CALIFORNIA AND ARIZONA.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from California [Mr. BARD] to take up a joint resolution that was objected to on yesterday, but which I understand will now pass without objection.

Mr. BARD. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 71) requesting the Secretary of the Interior to institute an investigation relative to the use of the waters of the Colorado River for irrigation, and to report to Congress thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution was read yesterday in full. Is there objection to its consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. TELLER. The word is not "requested," as it was read at the desk. It was amended yesterday to "directed." If it has not been changed, I move that amendment now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title was not changed. It is all right in the body of the joint resolution. The title will be changed later on.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to institute an investigation relative to the use of the waters of the Colorado River for irrigation, and to report to Congress thereon."

CONSIDERATION OF CLAIMS BILLS.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me to make a request?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up the Calendar of House and Senate private claims bills at 3 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think we had better grant any requests for the order of business at the present time as to bills of which we do not know anything about the nature. I shall therefore object to any agreement.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will withhold his objection a moment, I will state my reasons for making the request, and then my duty will have been done.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will withhold my objection until the Senator states his reasons.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator knows, we have not been to the Calendar in a regular way for some months now, and it is difficult to call up claims bills under unanimous consent, for they are usually objected to.

We have before us in committee a bill from the House known as the "omnibus bill." Under rules that the committee have heretofore adopted we only put such miscellaneous claims on the omnibus bills as have already had the consent of the Senate or House in the passage of the several bills, each standing alone. There are a good many matters not yet reached on the Calendar that ought to be cared for—bills that have been carefully considered by the committee and are on the Calendar, and if passed by the Senate could take their places in the omnibus bill. It is highly necessary that the omnibus bill should be completed, and therefore I want to get the consent of the Senate to consider the Calendar of private claims bills. If consent for to-morrow is not given, I will ask the Senator if he will state a time when the Calendar of private claims can be taken up?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is just what I object to, to fixing a time at the present moment for the consideration of any bills. There is a general desire, I think, that the appropriation bills and conference reports shall be disposed of, and it is impossible——

Mr. WARREN. My request is subject to both those.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is impossible, I say, at this time to indicate when a period will be reached that bills of the nature of those suggested by the Senator from Wyoming ought to be considered. Of course the Senator has the right at any time to move to take them up, or there will be no objection, I assume, to proceeding with unobjected cases upon the Calendar at any time when there is not an appropriation bill before the Senate. I think there will be no difficulty as to that arrangement, but it is extremely difficult to fix a time in advance for the consideration of any particular bills, and I suggest that it is better for the Senator from Wyoming to wait until he gets an opportunity to call up the bills.

Mr. WARREN. The opportunity, I will say to the Senator, will never arrive when the Senate shall be ready unless by an arrangement to take up the Calendar for claims bills.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me that it is not feasible to make that arrangement now, but I suggest to the Senator that it can be done later on in the session. I shall feel constrained to object to fixing any time now to consider any particular bill.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make one suggestion about unobjected bills. Bills ought not to be black-eyed or repudiated because objected to. They are very frequently objected to because a Senator wants to go on with something else, and the objection has no reference to the merits of a particular bill. There ought to be some time fixed so that we can take up the bills and act upon them; but I object to the suggestion to take up unobjected bills to the exclusion of those objected to for mere convenience. Meritorious bills are frequently objected to because other business intervenes. That is no criterion by which to measure bills.

Mr. WARREN. I would be entirely willing, in the first place, to have an agreement made subject to appropriation bills and conference reports, and first go over the Calendar for unobjected bills. I should be glad if the Senator from Rhode Island would suggest some manner by which now or at some later time these matters may be dealt with.

Mr. ALDRICH. My experience has been that an omnibus claim bill demands and receives recognition sooner or later. I do not think the Senator need be alarmed, but that at some time in the course of the session his bill will be considered. The nature of the bill is such that it necessitates action, whether we consent to it or not. But I think it is too early now to ask for a time to fix a date, and I therefore, as I said, am constrained to repeat my objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I will simply say that the omnibus bill has not been, and can not well be, reported to the Senate from the committee until work on the Calendar has been done. I have no intention of bringing in an omnibus bill until the Senate is willing to consider the Calendar, because it would be hopeless to try it, of course.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14416) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 8, on page 152. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Department of Justice," on page 156, line 6, after the word "available," to strike out "during the fiscal year 1905" and insert "until expended;" so as to make the clause read:

Enforcement of antitrust laws: That the balance of the appropriation of $500,000 for the enforcement of the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and other acts mentioned in said appropriation, made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1904, approved February 25, 1903, shall continue available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judicial," on page 157, line 20, to increase the appropriation for payment of regular assistants to United States district attorneys who are appointed by the Attorney-General, etc., from $210,000 to $220,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 157, line 24, to increase the appropriation for payment of assistants to the Attorney-General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney-General to aid in special cases from $85,000 to $135,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 159, line 17, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the money heretofore, or that shall hereafter be, appropriated for this purpose shall be expended in payment for such supplies only as have been, or shall hereafter be, purchased by the Department of Justice for distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 161, line 22, after the word "Attorney-General," to insert:

And for expense of care and medical treatment of guards who may be injured by prisoners while said guards are endeavoring to prevent escapes or suppressing mutiny;

So as to read:

For miscellaneous expenditures, in the discretion of the Attorney-General * * * for pay of extra guards when deemed necessary by the Attorney-General, and for expense of care and medical treatment of guards who may be injured by prisoners while said guards are endeavoring to prevent escapes or suppressing mutiny, $35,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Legislative," on page 166, after line 15, to insert:

Purchase of bust of General Lafayette: For the purchase by the Joint Committee on the Library of a marble bust of General Lafayette, by David d'Angers, to replace the one destroyed by fire in 1851, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 166, after line 20, to insert:

Purchase of bust of ex-President Taylor: For the purchase by the Joint Committee on the Library of a marble bust of ex-President Zachary Taylor, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Public printing and binding," on page 170, line 4, after the word "Survey," to insert "and $170,000 for the Census Office;" so as to make the clause read:

For the Department of Commerce and Labor, including $30,000 for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and $170,000 for the Census Office, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A committee amendment was passed over on page 81.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me, I wish to ask him a question as to section 3 for information, if it is proper to do so now.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator if the construction of that section is that any additional conveyance is authorized to be used by any one of the Departments, provided the name be put upon it? Is that the only limitation? That section reads:

SEC. 3. No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used for purchase, maintaining, driving, or operating any carriage or other vehicle, other than those authorized for personal purposes in section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1905, unless the same shall have conspicuously painted thereon at all times the full name of the Executive Department or other branch of the public service to which the same belong and in the service of which the same are used.

The question I wish to ask the Senator, to make it a little more plain, is this: Is the only limitation upon a Department having such additional vehicles as it may see proper to secure or use, the fact that it shall have this painting upon it, showing the Department to which it belongs? In other words, is a Department authorized to have vehicles additional to those provided for in the act referred to in that section if it will simply put the name of the Department upon the vehicle?

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the section, it is a limitation upon the appropriation contained in the pending bill.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a limitation upon the authority to use any carriage or vehicle excepting those authorized in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act.

Mr. BACON. That is the question I asked the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. That I understand to be the purpose of the section.

Mr. BACON. Here is the present situation: Under the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act certain vehicles and horses were authorized for each of the Executive Departments and possibly certain divisions of those Departments. Now that, of course, is fixed so far as that law can fix it.

Then, to guard the further use of money appropriated in this bill, section 3 provides that no additional vehicles or horses shall be used in any of these Departments unless there is painted upon such vehicles the name of the Department to which the same belongs and in which it is used. Therefore I ask the Senator from Iowa this question: Does the Senator understand whether the Department is authorized under this bill to use a part of the money herein appropriated for such additional vehicles as, in the discretion of the officers of that Department, may be required, if they will simply comply with this condition, which is to put upon the vehicle the name of the Department?

Mr. ALLISON. And if also such vehicles are used for a public purpose?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. If they are used for a public purpose with this designation. I suppose they are authorized to be so used.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator if it was not the intention of the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation act to specifically limit the vehicles which should be used by the Executive Departments to the number specified in that act, and whether or not it is not necessarily the consequence of this section that that limitation is removed and that the Executive Departments have just as much liberty as they have heretofore exercised to employ all the vehicles they may desire, upon the simple condition that they will put the name of the Department upon the vehicle and use it for public purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not so understand it; and if the language can be so construed, I hope the Senator will devise words that will execute the idea which he suggests.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I am not parsimonious in my ideas as to what should be allowed the Executive Departments, but at the same time Congress has thought that it was necessary that there should be a limitation in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act. An investigation had been made as to what was required and what was proper for the Executive Departments to have the liberty to use and as to the amount of money which they should utilize in that direction, and there is a specification in that act, if I understand it, of the number of vehicles which they shall use and which each of the Departments shall have. Now, if that is so, if that act was carefully considered and if the number was properly apportioned to the different executive officers and Departments which they should use, why is it enlarged by this section? For unless I am very unfortunate in the construction of language it evidently does enlarge it, and enlarges it in an indefinite way, without any limitation whatever, except simply the condition that the vehicles should bear the names of the Departments and that they be used in the public service.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand this provision to be an additional limitation. I think the limitation is very well provided for. Of course it could be still more limited if it were necessary, but I do not think it is. The committee did not think it worth while to insert any additional words to the restrictions provided for in the section.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, this can not be an additional limitation to that which is expressed in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, because that was a specific limitation as to the number of vehicles to be used.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, as I understand the limitation in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, it provides only that the heads of the Executive Departments shall be authorized to use carriages for other than public purposes, and that limitation is found in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act.

This section provides that in addition to that the carriages which are used shall not only be used for public purposes, but there shall be shown on some suitable and visible place on each of the carriages that they are used for public purposes only. If the Senator is not satisfied with that limitation and will suggest any other words, I shall be glad to accept them.

Mr. BACON. As I say, Mr. President, I have no desire to unduly restrict the Executive Departments; but it does seem to me that this section entirely removes all limitations and that the Departments can have just as many carriages as they please, provided they will put on each vehicle the name of the Department and guarantee the fact that it is only used in the public service.

If the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act did not provide for a sufficient number of carriages, then I quite agree with what appears to be the idea of the committee, that that number ought to be enlarged, and I am willing that they shall enlarge it to any extent that it can be shown it should be enlarged.

But I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that it was made to appear that there was great abuse in this particular, not so much from anything that occurred in this body as in the debates in the House of Representatives. It was a matter of public comment, and the Senator will probably remember a celebrated cartoon that appeared in a local paper, in which the carriages which were being used by public officers were represented as extending from the Capitol to the other end of the Avenue. Of course I have no doubt that that was a very gross exaggeration, but still it is a fact that it was recognized that there had been an abuse by the Executive Departments, or some of them—not all of them, I presume—that there had been in various Executive Departments some abuse of the unlimited opportunity which they had theretofore enjoyed and exercised of having carriages at the public expense.

Therefore it was, if I understood it correctly, that in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act there was an effort made to limit the number of carriages which they could use, so that, without unduly restricting the Departments, there should be no longer this abuse.

If we were mistaken then in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act and did not provide for as many vehicles as the public service properly would justify and require, then I am in favor of the enlargement to the limit which is proper; but the criticism, which I respectfully make and with very much hesitation—for I have the profoundest respect for the conservatism of the Appropriations Committee—the criticism which I make is that this bill entirely fails to make an additional limitation, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa, but that it makes an enlargement of a previous limitation in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, and not only that it makes an enlargement, but that it makes an enlargement which absolutely destroys all limitation, except the simple conditions which I have spoken of, that the vehicles shall have painted upon them the name of the Department to which they are assigned, and that they shall be used in the public service. That is the suggestion which I make.

The Senator says to me that if I am not satisfied, and if I will suggest so and so, he will agree. I simply desire to say that I have such very great confidence in the Senator from Iowa and the great committee over which he presides, that if, upon the suggestion I have made, he is still satisfied with the language of the bill, I should not presume to attempt to amend it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for the compliment he has paid to the Committee on Appropriations, but according to my interpretation—and I do not speak for the committee, but for myself—this is a restriction. Under the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, of course no carriages can be used unless they are appropriated for, and under that act it was provided not only that they should not be used unless appropriated for, but also that they should only be used for public purposes, save and except that certain Cabinet officers should each be allowed a carriage for personal purposes.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. That applied to the appropriations under that bill.

Mr. BACON. The Senator refers to the bill of this year?

Mr. ALLISON. I refer to that bill of this year. That was intended, I think, to correct an abuse, if there was one.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. When this bill came to be considered it not only provided for those restrictions, but it also provided, as I understand this provision in the bill, that if there are in this bill appropriations for horses and carriages, they shall not only be subject to the restrictions which are now in existence, but also that the carriages shall have a placard showing the name of the Department.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me there, if it be true that there are in this bill specific provisions for additional carriages and horses other than those specified for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, then the construction of the Senator is correct, and I simply ask him if it is a fact that there are in this bill provisions for additional vehicles?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand there are a few not provided for in the legislative act.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Then the Senator's construction of it is—and it is important to make this statement, because I presume the departmental officers will be guided by the construction which is now stated in the Senate to be that intended—the construction of the Senator of this language is that it refers simply to the vehicles and horses which are otherwise authorized in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Then I am very glad to have that statement, because it entirely clears the matter up.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 5, after line 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

Detroit, Mich., post-office and court-house: For repairs and improvements to enlarge the accommodations of the post-office room in the post-office and court-house building at Detroit, Mich., $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 27, after line 13.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

For purchase of specimens to supply deficiencies in the collections of the National Museum, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 39, line 22, I move to correct the total appropriation under the subhead "Immigrant stations, Department of Commerce and Labor," by striking out "thirty-six," before the word "thousand," and inserting "twenty-six;" so that the total will be $126,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 150, after line 24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 150, after line 24, it is proposed to insert the following:

International exposition at Liege, Belgium: To enable the Government to take official part in the international exposition to be held at Liege, Belgium, during the year 1905, $25,000: Provided, That no liability in excess of the appropriation shall be incurred, and that the commissioners, to be selected by the Department of State, shall serve without compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 98, after line 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 98, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be made and completed, under the supervision of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, a railroad map of the United States, showing connecting lines in the Dominion of Canada and the Republic of Mexico, on the scale of approximately 16 miles to 1 inch, which shall show State and county boundary lines; all lines of railways, with their names or other designations; all important cities and railway stations along such lines; important streams, mountain ranges, the depths of navigable waters near seaports, and such other facts as may be pertinent to such a map, $20,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 104, after line 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 104, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

Freedmen's Hospital: The appropriation of $50,000 made by the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1904 is hereby continued for the fiscal year 1905: Provided, That the tract of land lying and being between Sixth and Fourth streets and between Pomeroy and College streets, in the city of Washington, D. C., containing approximately 11 acres of ground, be, and the same is hereby, retroceded to Howard University, upon the condition that the said Howard University shall make and execute to the United States a perpetual lease for the nominal rental of $1 per annum, and that upon the execution of such lease to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, said Secretary shall cause to be erected on the ground so retroceded and leased the new hospital for freedmen provided for by the act above referred to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no other amendments to present, and now ask to return to the amendments that were passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment to offer an amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to offer an amendment, but before I offer it I want to read section 3 of the sundry civil appropriation act of March 3, 1893, in regard to the Chicago exposition, which is as follows:

SEC. 3. That not to exceed 50,000 bronze medals and the necessary dies therefor, with appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions commemorative of the said exposition celebrating the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, shall be prepared under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prepare plates and make therefrom not to exceed 50,000 impressions for diplomas at a total cost not to exceed $103,000. Said medals and diplomas shall be delivered to the World's Columbian Commission, to be awarded to exhibitors in accordance with the provisions of said act of Congress approved April 25, 1890, and there is hereby appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $103,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenditures authorized by this section.

I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in at the close of the bill. It does not appropriate a dollar. It provides for the coining of the medals, all the material to be furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to prepare or have prepared suitable dies with appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions commemorative of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory; from which dies, under the supervision of the said Secretary of the Treasury, there shall be coined, at some mint of the United States, medals to be awarded by the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company to exhibitors, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by the United States," etc., approved March 3, 1901; that the devices, emblems, and inscriptions for said dies and medals shall be furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, and said medals shall be made and coined from such material as the said exposition company may, at its own expense, furnish; and authority may be granted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the holder of any medal properly awarded to any exhibitor to have duplicates thereof made at any time at any of the mints of the United States, from gold, silver, or bronze, at the expense of the person desiring the same; said medals shall be coined and the dies therefor prepared subject to the provisions of the fifty-second section of the coinage act of 1893, and all the provisions, whether penal or otherwise, of said coinage act against counterfeiting or imitating of coins of the United States shall apply to the medals struck and used under the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask the Senate to return to page 81.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment on page 81 will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 12, on page 81, it is proposed to insert the following:

To acquire a site for and toward the construction of a fireproof building for committee rooms, folding room, and other offices for the United States Senate and for necessary office rooms for Senators, to be erected on square No. 686, in the city of Washington, D. C., bounded by B street NE., First street NE., C street NE., and Delaware avenue NE., $750,000; and said site shall be acquired and said building constructed under the direction and supervision of a commission, which is hereby created, to be composed of three Senators, namely: Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM, of Illinois, Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, and Hon. FRANCIS M. COCKRELL, of Missouri, and said building shall be constructed in accordance with architectural plans to be secured by said commission in such way as they may deem advisable. The cost of said building, exclusive of site, shall not exceed $2,250,000; the construction thereof and letting of contracts therefor, including employment of skilled and other services, shall be under the control of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, subject to the direction and supervision of said commission.

The said commission may acquire said site or any portion thereof by direct purchase, if the prices are reasonable; such portion of said site as can not be so purchased shall be acquired by condemnation, as follows: The said commission shall notify the Secretary of the Interior in writing of such failure, whereupon the said Secretary of the Interior shall, within thirty days after the receipt of said notice, proceed to acquire such portion of said site in the manner prescribed for providing a site for an addition to the Government Printing Office in so much of the act approved July 1, 1898, as is set forth on pages 648 and 649 of volume 30 of the Statutes at Large, and for the purpose of such acquisition the Secretary of the Interior shall have and exercise all powers conferred upon the Public Printer in said act.

The appropriations herein and hereafter made for said site and building shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Any vacancy occurring by resignation or otherwise in the membership of the said commission shall be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I am opposed to the proposed amendment, but I intend to occupy only a short time in stating the reasons.

When the amendment was reached on last Friday, and before the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] had asked that it be passed over, I had already said that it was not a gracious thing to appear here in opposition to a proposition intended for the convenience or comfort of members of this body. We all know how reluctant Senators have been to object to increased clerks, to increased clerk hire, to increased messengers, which have so often been asked for by the various chairmen of committees, and while there has been an effort made on rare occasions to limit the number and to limit the amount paid, yet I do not think any such effort has been very successful. In my judgment that practice has tended to create the impression that the Senate is especially extravagant in regard to officers in its employ.

But, Mr. President, those are small matters, in my judgment, as compared with this. I think this is an extravagance which surpasses anything I have ever seen offered in the Senate. Now, what is the proposition? The proposition is to appropriate in this bill $750,000 to buy a block of ground lying just north of the Capitol grounds. It is also proposed to provide for an appropriation of not exceeding two and a quarter million dollars for the purpose of erecting on that land a building for committee rooms of the Senate and for offices for Senators and for the folding room connected with the Senate. The proposed amendment contemplates an expenditure of $3,000,000, and yet I do not think there is a single Senator on the Appropriations Committee who does not believe that by the time the ground is purchased and the contracts made, or the land is condemned where agreements can not be made, and the building is finished, it will amount to $4,500,000. I do not think the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa, expects to acquire the land and build the building within the amount specified in the bill.

Now, it is proposed that the $3,000,000 specified in the bill—$4,500,000 as I say the building will eventually cost—shall be used to procure offices for the committees of the Senate and for the Senators on this floor. If it should cost $4,500,000, it would be $50,000 for each and every Senator who sits upon this floor. If it costs only what is stated in the amendment, it will be, in round numbers, $33,000 for each and every Senator to build offices and committee rooms for the Senate alone.

In addition to that, it will be remembered that some fifty of the Senators, who are chairmen of committees, or most of them, perhaps all, have committee rooms within the Capitol building. There are forty Senators, I believe, who have rooms in what is known as the "Maltby Building." It is proposed to erect this enormous structure, costing this great amount of money, in addition to the committee rooms that are provided in the Capitol for the Senate, and to expend this money for a structure which, it seems to me, is extravagant beyond the wants and beyond the demands of the Senate or beyond what is reasonable.

Mr. President, a few years ago it was announced upon the floor of the Senate that a building known as the "Maltby Building" could be purchased at a very reasonable price. It was urged that if it was not purchased then it would increase in value. It was said that the building would be ample and sufficient to provide committee rooms and offices for every Senator in this body. Now we are told that the building is unsafe and has been condemned; that it is unfit to be used for the purposes for which we purchased it. I forget what amount of money was paid for it, but I do remember distinctly that those who urged it said at the time that it would be sufficient for all time to provide for every committee and for every Senator, and now, as I said, it is claimed that it is unsafe and must be abandoned.

But it seems to me that if the extension of the eastern front of the Capitol is made, as proposed by the House of Representatives and provision for which is contained in the bill now pending before the Senate, and if provision should be made elsewhere, as I have no doubt it will be, for the Supreme Court, there will be ample room within this building to accommodate every Senator who now has a committee room or an office in the Maltby Building. I say that I think this immense structure, provision for which is contained in the proposed amendment to an appropriation bill, is unnecessary. I think the provision in the bill, together with the committee rooms that may be secured when the House shall take possession of its new quarters, for which it has provided, will be amply sufficient to furnish committee rooms and offices for every Senator in this body.

Mr. President, I regret, as I said at the beginning, to stand here opposing a measure of this kind. I know full well what construction may be put by some upon the action of a Senator who does oppose it, but I believe it is wrong. I believe it is extravagant, and I believe that if we pass a bill here appropriating money to build offices and committee rooms for the Senate, costing even $33,000 for every Senator here, it will tend to give color to the charge of extravagance which has so often been made against this body. For these reasons, while I regretted to differ with the majority of the committee of which I am a member, I said to its chairman that I did not believe the committee ought to propose the pending amendment at the present time; that I believed it was extravagance, and that it was not best that it should go into the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee

Mr. BERRY. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a second?

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, if the Senate has the courage to vote for what it believes right I trust it will give me the yeas and nays. I know Senators here are willing to vote for the amendment, as they believe in it, and I think we ought to have the yeas and nays. I know the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] will vote for the call for the yeas and nays, for he is never afraid to vote for whatever he thinks is right.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, like the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], I believe in rigid economy in the expenditure of public money; but I can not concur with him in describing as useless extravagance a suitable provision for places in which Senators can perform their public duty. If this provided only places where the Senators might work, I should favor it, and I would particularly favor it when, in addition to working places for the Senators, additional and necessary committee rooms are provided.

The Senator from Arkansas has the honor to be chairman of a committee, and yet his committee room is located somewhere in the basement, so far from this Chamber that he can not find it if he should undertake to go to it this afternoon. So inconvenient is his place for working that the Senator has not sought it three times during the entire session. So excellent a public servant as the Senator from Arkansas is entitled to a better place for working than the basement of the Capitol, shut out from the light and the air. Such a place is not agreeable nor conducive to good work.

Not only so, but I happen to be located in the Maltby Building, to which the Senator has referred, and so crowded is it that when our constituents come to interview us on matters affecting the public interest, they are often compelled to wait in a hall until it may suit our convenience to see them. It is so crowded that when the Committee on Irrigation attempts to hold a session it is compelled to exclude everybody from what is called "a reception room" in that building in order to occupy that room for its meeting.

Now, it may be that the Senate has too many committees. It is sometimes said that committees have been created more for the benefit of the clerks than for the benefit of the public service. Certain committees never hold a session, but their clerks draw $2,220 per annum, while the clerks of other Senators performing just as laborious and just as useful service draw $1,500 per annum. I make no criticism of that. I assume that when the Senate creates a committee, the committee has a duty to perform, and I insist that the Senate shall provide a place where the committee can suitably perform its duties.

If the Senator from Arkansas is to judge by what a public expenditure may average to each Senator, the country would stand somewhat staggered when this Capitol was constructed, but nobody believes that the object in constructing this magnificent Capitol was to provide merely for the comfort of the men who hold the commissions of great States to membership in this body. They sought to make a building suitable for the home of the representatives of the people, and the people approve it. A man fit to be the ambassador of a great State in the highest legislative body of the world is entitled to a comfortable place in which to work, and the best is none too good for the Senators from Arkansas and other great States in this Union.

I commend the Senator from Arkansas for always striving to represent what he believes to be the sentiment of his people, but my judgment is that the people of Arkansas, though I know no more of them than a neighbor tries to know of his neighbors, would not want to tear down this splendid pile of marble which is the home of their representatives and rebuild it either of brick or logs. Neither do I believe the people of Arkansas want their Senators sent to a room little better than a dungeon as a working place. I do not know how it may be with other Senators, but I judge it to be with all others as it is with me—that the efficiency of the work corresponds in some fair degree to the surroundings under which the work is performed.

I am free to say that when one of my constituents comes to the Capitol of this Republic I prefer to have a comfortable place to which I may invite him. I do not propose any oriental magnificence that is not in keeping with the simplicity of a republic, but I do believe that every building erected by this Government ought to typify the Government itself—ought to be massive and to look like it would stand four-square to all the winds that blow.

It ought to be simple, if you please, but splendid in its simplicity, and if it is the judgment of the committee that has investigated this matter that it takes this much money to build a building suitable for committees and Senators, the people of this country desire that kind of a building. Nobody wants a Senator who represents him either to live in a hut or to stop at a wagon yard in Washington. The people want their representatives to bear themselves as become the representatives of a great, a free, a self-respecting, and, if you please, a proud-spirited people.

The only difference between the Senator from Arkansas and myself is that he thinks all this could be accomplished with a smaller expenditure. I am myself not so sure that the amount the committee has provided is the least sum for which suitable service could have been secured, but as I am not sure on that point I withhold all criticism. I regret that the Senator from Arkansas, instead of merely criticising what he deems an extravagant appropriation, did not give the Senate the benefit of his judgment as to what would be a reasonable appropriation.

I am entirely sure that the Senator from Arkansas does not desire Senators of the minority turned out from the Capitol, and yet there is not room enough here for the minority and the majority, too. True enough, some of those whose excellent service has so endeared them to their people as to have been returned a sufficient length of time are provided for in the Capitol, and if I was ungenerous I might think that was one reason why they are not so much interested in relieving us from the building across the grounds. I know that is not the influence which controls the Senator from Arkansas. I do not believe such an influence would control any Senator here.

But I commend to the Senator from Arkansas the report of the Architect of the Capitol, submitted to this body in response to a resolution adopted by us, in which he describes the Senate Annex, commonly called the Maltby Building, as a fire trap. He practically declares that in case of a fire it would burn like a house of straw. Yet the Senator from Arkansas, as little as he may value the services of some of us located there, would not be willing to expose us first to the discomforts of it when it stands and to the danger of it when it may fall.

Mr. President, I can conscientiously say that I have never voted to waste a dollar of public money, because I regard it as a trust fund, which no man has a right to squander. What he possesses either by earning or by inheritance he may waste. That is his own, to be disposed of according to his views of duty to himself and to those dependent on him. But what is taken from the people of this land in the shape of taxes and covered into the public Treasury is a sacred trust fund, which no Senator has a right to waste.

During my fourteen years of public service I have never voted to misspend a dollar of public money. But if I shall be spared hereafter to serve twice fourteen years, I will never hesitate for an instant to spend a dollar that ought properly to be spent. I shall never hesitate to spend a dollar that will provide a proper public service.

Neither do I believe that in Texas or in Arkansas or in any other section of this country there is an element, respectable either in numbers or intelligence, that would have us deny ourselves or deny them any proper and suitable expenditure. The Senator from Arkansas does not dissent from this view, and the utmost difference that can exist between him and any of his colleagues is as to the extent of the appropriation and not as to the appropriation itself.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator has wholly failed to refer to the fact that I stated if the eastern front of the Capitol is extended, as is proposed by the House of Representatives in this bill, and then provision is made, as I understand the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] is trying to make it, for the Supreme Court in another building, there would be ample room within the Capitol for the Senators who are now in the Maltby Building.

The Senator fails, furthermore, to allude to the fact that there are fifty Senators already provided for in the Capitol, indifferently it may be as to some; and I may refer to my own committee room.

It is not such a committee room as I would be glad to have, but I usually do my work at the hotel where I board. But there are fifty Senators in this building who have rooms, either committee rooms or rooms otherwise. There are only forty remaining, and I put the question to the Senator from Texas himself, who is always fair and debates fairly, whether he does not think $4,500,000, or $3,000,000, which is covered by this appropriation here, is too much money to provide committee rooms and office rooms for the forty Senators now in the Maltby Building.

I repeat, Mr. President, I think it is an extravagant appropriation, beyond anything that has heretofore come to the Senate. I regret, as I said before, to oppose anything of this kind, and I have no purpose in it save and except I believe it is a wrong appropriation—an appropriation of a large amount clearly beyond what the necessities demand.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Arkansas for calling my attention to the fact that I was about to overlook his suggestion that ample accommodations could be provided by extending the east front of the Capitol.

Mr. BERRY. And which is provided by this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Not authorized, but a commission is appointed, and the bill expressly provides that no money shall be expended until Congress appropriates it hereafter.

Now, as between the Senate building and the Capitol extension, I would not hesitate one minute in my choice. In the first place, the extension of the Capitol is more a matter of art and architectural beauty than of convenient and good working quarters for Senators. The three millions which it is proposed to spend on that Capitol improvement is out of all proportion, so far as practical results are concerned, when compared with the building which the Committee on Appropriations has provided for.

The Senator from Arkansas, moreover, is mistaken when he declares that that improvement would provide for all the Senators now located in the Maltby Building. It is estimated that there would be about twenty-eight additional rooms on the Senate side of this new improvement.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. That would involve the idea that the court would still remain here, would it not?

Mr. ALLISON. It would.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; it would.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Iowa says that is true. Not only would there be but twenty-eight additional rooms, but some of them dark and not satisfactory places to work in. So after we had spent $3,000,000 providing twenty-eight single rooms, we would still have twelve or fourteen Senators not provided for; and it must be remembered that we are soon to have four more, according to one view, and eight more, as I hope.

Forty need workshops; twenty-eight would be supplied, leaving twelve to stand out-of-doors, and that twelve to be joined by the four or eight, as the wisdom of Congress may decide, from the newly admitted States. To spend $3,000,000 for twenty-eight rooms, and with no committee rooms, is incomparably worse than to spend $3,000,000 for rooms for fifty Senators with committee rooms and offices in addition.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state to the Senator that there is in this bill a provision, put there by the House of Representatives, providing for the extension of the eastern front in any event.

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. BERRY. I say the House put it in.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, yes; the House put it in.

Mr. BERRY. That is what I stated, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me. Now, that is their proposition. It has nothing to do with the other proposition except that we are together to spend $6,000,000 if we provide for both, because that provision is in the bill. It is not stricken out either by this amendment. It is changed and modified—architects are provided for, a certain commission from the House and the Senate is also provided for, no further appropriation is to be made until after they report, etc.—but it still stands in that provision; and I take it for granted that the House of Representatives is going to insist upon extending the eastern front of the Capitol without regard to what may be done for the convenience of Senators.

But the amendment proposed by the committee applies alone to Senate committees and offices for Senators and certain folding rooms connected with the Senate. The eastern front applies to the entire Capitol, to the House of Representatives, to the country at large. It is an extension of this great building, of which the Senator has spoken, and is not intended alone to make committee rooms. The House had no such thought.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have no doubt when the question comes back from this commission to the Senate I shall find myself at agreement with the Senator from Arkansas in voting against the expenditure of $3,000,000 for the Capitol extension, because it must be remembered that the House of Representatives has already had the good judgment to provide itself with a building for offices and committee rooms; and when the Senate imitates the good judgment of the House and provides for itself, there will be absolutely no excuse for the Capitol extension, unless it be one merely relating to its architectural appearance.

It may be that instead of a new public building which is sometimes proposed, to be called a "temple of justice" or a new home for the court, Congress in its wisdom will provide better quarters for the Supreme Court and continue it under the Dome of this Capitol. If that shall be proposed, it will raise another question as to a suitable chamber for the Supreme Court. So far as an appropriation to improve the Capitol is concerned, I will join the Senator from Arkansas, then, in voting against the expenditure of that $3,000,000, because I do not believe it will be justified by any useful public purpose.

In addition to the twelve Senators in the Senate Annex who would be unprovided for under the Capitol extension and the four or eight Senators who will come to represent the newly admitted States, some six or eight Senators, like the Senator from Arkansas, occupy rooms in the basement of this Capitol, so damp and dark as to breed disease. Thus there are twenty Senators——

Mr. BACON. There are very many more than eight, counting the crypt.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Georgia says there are more than eight. I happen to know of Senators who need to be relieved, and I intend to vote to relieve them in spite of their opposition. I do not intend that the Senator from Arkansas shall be compelled to call the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress together in a committee room that he could not find if he starts out from the Senate Chamber this afternoon without a page to guide him. The Senator from Arkansas and at least seven others ought to be provided for in a better way.

It is small wonder that the Senator from Arkansas, according to his own statement, does his work at the hotel where he lives. He is justified in doing it anywhere rather than in that little room located so far away and reached by such a circuitous, difficult route that he can not find it.

But some of us in the performance of our duties find it necessary to have more books about us than we find it convenient to keep or to carry to the taverns where we live. Some Senators know how it ought to be without troubling themselves to search the books, but a good many of us are not willing to trust our own conclusions until we have examined the authorities. Senators who, compelled to have the aid of books, and sometimes many of them, find it impossible to work in their rooms at the hotel; and those of us who find it necessary to summon to our assistance the wisdom of the dead as embodied in books are not permitted to carry those books, as I have said once before on this floor, into our committee rooms at the Maltby Building.

They tell us that the floor or the walls, or perhaps both the floor and the walls, have been so disjoined and are so out of level and plumb as to render it unsafe to carry into the building the ordinary books which a Senator desires to keep within easy and immediate reach.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] would not want to keep a colleague like myself confined to a house where it was impossible for me to carry the books which I need to consult. Other Senators—I say that without offense—can afford to rely upon their own judgment or conclusions reached without the aid of what others have thought or said or written, but all of us are not that fortunate.

I am free to say that for my part I count it no disparagement to my intelligence that I generally go to the books first to lead me to my conclusions, and even to confirm me when I have reached a conclusion before consulting them. I am never so well satisfied with any conclusion I have reached as when I find it in accordance with the choice and master intellects of the ages gone by; and I am not alone in this course of study. Other Senators need aid as well as I do, and to require me or them to work where we can not have the benefit of books is to deny to our constituents our best efforts.

No Senator desires to do that. I am sure that every Senator here knows that when each of us has done his best our conclusions are none too wise. When we have wrought under the most favorable circumstances, remembering that our work projects itself into the centuries for good or evil, we ought to work under conditions that insure the wisest conclusions.

Mr. President, I have seen a committee of the Senate conducting investigations, crowded into a committee room almost to suffocation. Would it not be wise that when the Senate provides this building there shall be rooms in which the people of this country may be permitted to come and hear the testimony, when testimony is taken, and hear the arguments, when arguments are made, concerning vital questions in which they feel an interest?

But, Mr. President, I am uselessly consuming the time of the Senate to argue this question longer. The only difference between other Senators and the Senator from Arkansas is one of degree, not of principle. He thinks the appropriation extravagant. I, myself, regret very much that a proper building could not be erected for less. I would not vote a dollar more than is necessary, nor would I vote a dollar less.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senate will bear with me for a moment, it is with some hesitation that I vote against the report of the committee; but I will put my vote upon an entirely different ground from that upon which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] places his.

I fully agree with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that our constituents want us to have proper accommodations. They want us to have proper opportunity and surroundings in our labor here, and I would not hesitate to vote for the amendment no matter how many millions it involved; but I do believe the genius of the Senate ought to be able to devise some means by which ninety Senators can be accommodated under the roof of the Capitol.

Take the House with its great body and it is necessary that it should go outside and erect another building; but with only ninety Senators, or ninety-four or ninety-eight, if the eight ultimately come, with the Supreme Court removed from this building to quarters such as it ought to have and such as it never can have in the Capitol building, with the library of that court removed, I believe room enough could be found under this roof to accommodate the members of the Senate instead of compelling us to go chasing underground on trolley cars, as this amendment proposes we shall do. As one of the unfortunates who is rapidly becoming web-footed from traversing the underground galleries here, I wish to say that a reasonable expenditure would keep rain out of that part of this building and make that part of it very comfortable for all.

Mr. President, it may be presumptious to set up one man's judgment against that of the committee. I know the architects say the Capitol ought not to be extended. I do not want to question the motive of any man, but I can readily understand how an architect would prefer to put up a new magnificent building rather than to be employed on an extension of the Capitol.

It is said the Supreme Court does not want the extension, because the extending the Capitol does not, as it is now considered, involve putting up an additional building for the court. I believe if that court realize that Congress has put up a building for them, such as they ought to have, they would very gladly vacate this building.

So, Mr. President, for one I shall vote against this amendment, believing that instead of going outside and putting up a building for Senators we should go outside and put up a building for the Supreme Court and rearrange this building so as to furnish offices under this roof for members of the Senate, and not require them to go from one place to another seeking places of business.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought not to provide in this bill for both the Capitol extension and this new building. I think if we adopt the amendments which have been suggested by the Committee on Appropriations, that will be precisely what we as a Senate should do.

The provision for the Capitol extension is already in the bill, and it is left in the bill; the committee has not struck it out. The committee has modified it, but still the provision for the Capitol extension will remain in the bill whatever the conference committee may do. If the Senate committee amendment passes, the work will not be constructed until the commission has received plans and submitted them to Congress, but still there will be a committal of Congress to that work.

Now, I do not think we ought to have both the Capitol extension and this building.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Do you not think the time has come when the Supreme Court of this country ought to have better quarters than they have?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. Do you think it can be obtained except either by the erection of a building outside or enlarging and extending the front of the Capitol building?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not at the present moment committing myself to either of these plans or to the question of another building for the Supreme Court. I want to leave that for the present. I want to consider just what we are doing now.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, that is just what we want to consider. I understand the Senator to say that if this plan to erect an additional building for the Senate is carried out he does not think the other ought to be. That leaves us, then, with the present condition as to the Supreme Court.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Put it the other way, if the Senator pleases, that if that Capitol extension is carried out I do not see any necessity for this new building.

Mr. CLAPP. Except for the Supreme Court.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We can erect a court building somewhere else. But I should like to state what I had in mind.

Mr. TELLER. I want to call the Senator's attention to the last proposition which he made, that no plan for the extension of the Capitol provides for Senators, and that it is impossible to do so under any plan that has ever been submitted.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think that if we could get twenty-eight new committee rooms it might be possible to pretty well provide for the Senators, that is, if they were in addition to the rooms which we already have. I have one very small room, and I am sure I would not trade that small room for a suite of rooms, however magnificent and commodious they might be.

Mr. BAILEY. Nor divide it with one of the twelve or fourteen Senators who are unprovided for.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But what I intended to say was that I think, if we adopt this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, we are going to commit ourselves to the Capitol extension sooner or later. The commission which is provided for is to employ architects and to bring in plans. They, to be sure, have to be approved by Congress; but nevertheless this provision will stand that the Capitol extension is to be completed according to the original plans of Mr. Walter, with such modifications and extensions as may be suggested by the proposed commission.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from Connecticut will observe that the sum of $500,000 is appropriated to carry on the work to which he has just been directing attention.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is more than that in it.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose to move an amendment modifying the sum, so that the architects will understand what is proposed by the committee. I shall offer an amendment inserting either $50,000 or $75,000, instead of $500,000.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Maine permit me a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is more in it than a mere appropriation of $500,000, because it is provided—

> And the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, subject to the approval of Congress as aforesaid, under the direction and supervision of said commission, is authorized to make contracts for said construction after proper advertisements and the reception of bids within a total sum not exceeding $2,500,000.

Whether we approve any of the plans that this commission brings us or not, finally we must, if this legislation is passed, make this extension of the Capitol.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not so understand. Taking the provisions of this amendment and construing them together, there can be no contract made under it as it now stands until after Congress shall have approved the plans.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I know that; but still we shall have legislation here which will commit Congress, as it seems to me, to the building of the Capitol extension whenever plans are suggested which Congress approves.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly when Congress shall agree to build it, then we shall build it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No.

Mr. ALLISON. But I agree with the Senator that the amendment in form commits the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. To the final extension——

Mr. ALLISON. To the extension of the Capitol when Congress shall have ascertained what the extension is to be, but not before.

Mr. ALDRICH. Congress is not only to ascertain, but to decide.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Senator doubt that Congress will eventually, after it shall have enacted this legislation, adopt some plans for carrying it out?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not doubt it, and I will not permit myself to doubt it, as I think it ought to do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then, Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa, at the head of the great Committee on Appropriations, as well as the Senate, will by passing this bill commit itself to the extension of the Capitol in some form. If the Senate is going to do that I do not think that we ought, in addition to that, provide for this building.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not agree at all with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] that because we have provided that this scheme for the extension of the Capitol—to which I am opposed entirely, root and branch—instead of being adopted now shall be put off until we can have a report by architects of what is contemplated, and until the Congress has adopted that or some other plan, commits us now to that proposition. I do not for one moment recognize that. I should like better, if I could have my way, to put through this provision for a building for Senators corresponding to that which we have already given to the House of Representatives, not to be so large and costly as that is, but to be spacious, handsome, near by, and, through modern methods of transportation, easily accessible to the Senate. I would desire that that proposition should go through, and that we should strike out entirely the House proposition.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That would do.

Mr. HALE. As to the extension of the Capitol, I look with dread, Mr. President, and with apprehension at any project, howsoever it may be sanctioned, by one body or the other, or by architects, as interfering with the simple and beautiful and almost perfect—so far as I am concerned, I will say perfect—façade of the east front of the Capitol. I shall never, for one, agree to any scheme that destroys that; least of all, to any scheme that projects into this intermediate space between the two wings of the Capitol a structure that fills it all up with projections, even farther out than the wings, and gives, instead of a beautiful, symmetrical, and gratifying front, a vulgar front, like that of common buildings; that fills up all this space between, and leaves everything else in darkness. I should never agree, for one, to vote for that; but would vote against it, if I voted alone finally.

But it is a great deal—as the House has put on a project for our doing this at once, ruthlessly, without consideration, without contemplation, and without investigation—it is a great deal to postpone that matter and to declare, as we have in this amendment, that it shall be submitted by the commission to architects, and that nothing whatever shall be done until it is reported exactly what the architects recommend, and that then nothing shall be done until Congress has adopted it.

While I would rather strike out the whole provision, as the Senator from Connecticut would, I do not agree that by postponing this matter and getting more information any Senator is bound to hereafter, whatever may be the report, vote for what, to my mind, destroys the beauty of this great Capitol.

If any Senator moves to strike out the entire provision of the House, I will vote for the motion; but if that can not be carried, it is the plan of the committee that we shall go on and provide for the building which we ought to erect for the accommodation of Senators, which it is proper that we should have, as the House has its great building, though ours will not cost more than half as much as theirs. I have no fear of being troubled with criticisms that we are doing an extravagant thing. But we can do that. The commission can take charge, can go on and condemn; and when we come together next winter, then we shall have a report upon this other and nearer and more vital and more important matter as to whether we shall commence the work of destroying this Capitol as it now exists.

I agree fully, Mr. President, with the reports that were made to the Senate when the two wings were put on this building—most enlightening reports—covering the whole subject-matter, in which this very subject was discussed and brought out. In a report made by the then Senator from Mississippi, Jefferson Davis, who had taste about these things, and Mr. Clark, of New Hampshire, they declared that in every step that was taken in building the two wings they bore in mind that nothing should interfere with the beautiful east front of the Capitol as it now exists, and that the two wings, by the light that they threw, would add to the charm of that wonderful façade that we all look upon with such pride and with such comfort. I may say I do every time I look at it. I am in favor of carrying out those projects—the very projects that they started upon.

The sketch that has been picked up has never had the indorsement and never been viséed by Mr. Walter. At the time when Mr. Davis and Mr. Clark were making their reports, declaring that they would not, under any circumstances, agree to anything that would interfere with this east front, Mr. Walter was making a report, as the Architect of the Capitol, and he never once intimated that he had any design or sketch that would destroy or cover and darken that east front.

It is assumed that these are plans which had been deliberated upon, perfected, studied out, and brought in by the Architect of the Capitol, Mr. Walter. There is not a particle of testimony that shows that that was a finished sketch. He struck out and designed three or four different plans, and one of these plans has been picked up, and it is assumed that it is Mr. Walter's plan; and, as I repeat, when the whole subject was up, he never, by word or phrase, intimated that that east front was to be desecrated or darkened or destroyed.

I should be in favor of striking out entirely this provision the House put in and going on to provide for our building, which they ought not to object to, as we did not object to their building; but if that can not be done, then I do not agree with the Senator from Connecticut that by postponing the matter and providing for further investigation and bringing it all before Congress we are committed to anything.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] does not feel as I do about that plan. We differ about that. That is a matter of broad ground on which we may differ; but I think the Senator would say that he does not consider that he or that anybody in the Senate is committed by this proposition to afterwards vote to destroy the east front of the Capitol.

Therefore, while, as I said, I would vote, and will do so now if any Senator makes the motion, to strike out the entire House proposition, yet if we can not do that, then we might certainly, in the interest of good legislation upon this project for saving the east front of the Capitol, do better by adopting the amendment the committee has reported.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, there is nothing of Mr. Walter's plan save mere sketches. There is not a working plan of any kind.

Mr. HALE. They were never carried into effect; there is no intimation that they were anything more than stray sketches. He made two or three or four of them; but I can find—and I have looked over the literature on the subject and have read the reports made in the Senate and the reports made by the architect when the wings were put on the building—not only nothing that indicates that there was a plan to change the east front, but I find repeated assertions in the debates and in the reports that nothing should be done that would change it.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator if the model in the Rotunda is according to the plans of Mr. Walter?

Mr. HALE. No; that has been constructed on the basis of one of those sketches to which I have referred, and it has been assumed that it was Mr. Walter's deliberate plan and that he believed it could be done; but I find no testimony and no evidence has been brought to show that.

Mr. LODGE. That plan was a mere suggestion.

Mr. HALE. A mere suggestion; a thought he had in his mind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question for information. I should like to know if this is not the actual situation: That if the new building to be erected across the street is built, will not that, as a practical proposition, prevent the extension of the Capitol for all time to come, no matter how we make up our minds hereafter?

Mr. HALE. I will answer that question frankly. I am in favor of the new building anyway, but I do not think that any extension of the Capitol, such as is contemplated by these plans, will give any relief to committees. There are too few of those rooms that would be light. A great wide space has got to be had in this projection for a centerpiece. The House rooms on the right-hand side will cover up that part, and the rooms on this side, with the exception of the great dark space, which can not be utilized, will be very few. Therefore, whether that building is erected or not, I am not in favor of this extension; but I am in favor of the new building, because it will be a relief to Senators who have not got good or safe quarters.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In common with many, or at least with some other Senators, I am not informed upon the merits or demerits of either proposition, but the question which occurred to my mind was this—and it has occurred to the minds of others—that if the building proposed should be erected across the street will it not have the practical result of preventing the erection of an extension to the Capitol for all time to come, no matter what might be our future judgment as to its advisability?

Mr. HALE. If the only object to be attained is in getting committee rooms, it would remove that object, undoubtedly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. HALE. But it does not in any way interfere with the general proposition that we ought not to interfere with the east front of the Capitol.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But that relates merely to the question of art; so that if the building across the street should be erected there would not for all time to come be any reason for the Capitol extension, except merely as a question of art and not of utility. Is not that the situation?

Mr. HALE. It is claimed by its advocates that the plan for the extension of the east front improves the Capitol; but I do not believe that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know, and I have asked the Senator for information because, as I say, there are many Senators around here who are not informed; but it appears, to repeat the question, that if the new building is erected, that will have the practical effect of preventing an extension of the Capitol at any time in the future, no matter what the future judgment of Congress might be.

Mr. HALE. It removes one reason?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And leaves merely the reason of art?

Mr. HALE. Which I think ought to be the main reason.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And not the reason of utility?

Mr. HALE. Not the reason of utility.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The reason of art, in the first place, which it leaves is not so powerful as is the reason of utility.

Mr. BACON. I presume that it will be conceded by every Senator that there ought to be some additional accommodations for Senators, and it is simply a question as to what shall be done. Something evidently must be done. There are not now accommodations which are sufficient for Senators or in the use of which they can properly discharge their duties.

The presentation has been so fully made as to the necessity of this proposed building that I shall not dwell upon it at all. I would not say anything now, Mr. President, but for the fact that the question has been suggested as to the propriety of the extension of the east front of the Capitol. I simply wish in a word to join most heartily in what has been said by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] as to the impropriety of any change to the east front of this Capitol.

I am not an architect, but it is not necessary that one should be an architect in order to be able to appreciate the beauty of the front of this Capitol. One may travel the world round and see no such public building, so beautiful in its architectural effect, as is this building when viewed from East Capitol street. I myself think it would be an absolute sacrilege, so far as I am able to judge of the question of architecture, to make the extension which is proposed by the plan which is now in the Rotunda of this Capitol.

I would not touch it or make any change in it. Much less would I make the change contemplated in the proposed extension. If anyone will take a stand on the east front of the Capitol, he must perceive that one of its chief beauties is found in the great Dome, and that the splendid colonnade of that east front, of which from that standpoint it seems to form a part, constitutes really a feature of its architectural effect. If you extend the east front, you destroy the effect of the Dome from any near point of view. Besides that, to my taste, the extension would destroy also the fine architectural effect of the beautiful colonnades to the right and left.

I would very much prefer that the provision for the extension of the Capitol should be stricken from this bill altogether. It is true that it does not make any definite and permanent provision for it. It is true that if the plans are not subsequently approved the work will not be undertaken; but I am so impressed with the fact that to change it in any particular is to destroy its beauty that, for myself, I would be glad to see no step taken in that direction, even in the way of an investigation.

I was about to ask the Senator from Iowa what was to be done with this $500,000. I understood from him—I could not hear the Senator from Iowa distinctly—but I understood he proposed to reduce that amount to $500. Was I correct?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. BACON. I could not hear the Senator very well on account of the conversation around me.

Mr. ALLISON. I said fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. BACON. Well, for what purpose, I would ask the Senator from Iowa, with his permission, would the fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars be used if it is simply to provide for an investigation by this commission, with a report to Congress? I do not understand that that involves the expenditure of money.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that it involves the study and preparation of plans in detail, including specifications for all the work that is to be done under the plans. Therefore it is a very great work to make the plans and the specifications covering all the details.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it seems to me that that could be very well postponed if we are going to enter upon the work of the construction of this building for the Senate. The extension of the Capitol could not in any measure supply the demand that the Senate now has for additional accommodations for Senators. Whatever building is put up ought to be in harmony with this Capitol. It ought to be a building not for this year or next year or the next century, but, so far as we can anticipate, for all time.

I would be very glad if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] would make the motion to strike this provision out altogether, but it seems to me that, even if it is not stricken out, we ought not to go to the expense of fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars for plans for the execution of which there would be little reason if we are to erect this proposed Senate building. The extension of the Capitol itself will not answer the demands of the Senate, and the extension itself would not do away with the necessity for the Senate building; but the erection of that building will do away with the necessity for the extension of the east front of the Capitol.

Mr. HALE. In order to test the sense of the Senate on the question of the extension of the Capitol, I will move to strike that provision out.

Mr. BERRY. I think it would be better to first take a vote on the proposition for an annex to the Senate, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. Very well. After that vote is taken I will move to strike out the House provision regarding the Capitol extension.

Mr. BERRY. I ask for a vote on the question of the adoption of the amendment in regard to the new building for the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON obtained the floor.

Mr. TELLER. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment on page 81, providing for the erection of an annex for the use of Senators.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say a word or two on that amendment whenever the Senate is in order, so that anyone can be heard. It is impossible for us to know over here what is going on in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. TELLER. There is so much disorder that we must be in ignorance of what is going on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Colorado want to speak?

Mr. TELLER. I want to make some remarks; but I will wait until the Senator from Iowa gets through.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say a word or two. The Committee on Appropriations considered this subject with as much care as possible, having in view such enlargement of accommodations and the situation as would accommodate Senators, the Senate, and the business of the country, which all of us here know is growing with great rapidity as respects its relations to the two Houses of Congress and to the Executive Departments.

It is manifest to us all, and has been manifest to many of us for some years, that it is impossible to do well, with convenience and with comfort, the necessary business of the two Houses of Congress. Since I have become a member of this Senate I believe the work of the Senate has grown threefold and more.

When I entered the Senate, during my first term, Mr. President, I was not permitted even to have an assistant to help in the work that I was called upon to do as a member of the Senate. It was some time before I had an opportunity in the work of committees, etc., of which I was a member, to even have a skilled laborer assigned to me to assist in the necessary work that I was called upon to do. That was only thirty years ago.

I have lived to see within my service here every Senator on this floor provided with a clerk at an adequate compensation. I have seen, and we now know, that, in addition to that, every Senator is entitled to a messenger. I am speaking now of those who are not chairmen of committees and who do not have a committee room. A clerk and a messenger are given to the Senators, because we all know that the public business requires that they shall have such aids in order to enable them to transact the business which their constituents require them to do in this Chamber.

I have always been in favor of giving Senators, whether they be chairmen of committees having committee rooms or otherwise, such reasonable aids and instrumentalities as will enable them to do the work of their constituents.

You may go into every committee room in this building, and you find the shelves and every nook and corner occupied by public documents connected with the everyday business of the Senate. There is not a committee room having sufficient space in it for the accommodation of the useful papers necessary to carry on the work of the committee. Now, what is true of the Senate and what is true of its membership discloses that this wing of the Capitol, occupied first in 1859, is wholly inadequate for the business of this great country of ours in 1904.

Therefore, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations and partially responsible for the amendments and the measures that it projects into this Chamber for adoption or rejection, I am willing to take my share of the responsibility of everything that is proposed in this bill. We took up this question not only this year, but we had it up two years ago, when the House of Representatives made provision for a building outside of the House itself in order to accommodate its membership and its committees and to enable the Members of the House to perform their public duties by having instrumentalities necessary for that purpose. We undertook then to put on a provision here for the purpose of examining the question whether or not we should not pari passu with the House of Representatives have a building on the northeast corner. That fell through. The House of Representatives then wanted to enlarge the Capitol in the center, so that, in addition to securing accommodations in the new building, they would also secure accommodations in the Capitol.

I do not know by what law or by what authority it is, but the Capitol is divided into two parts. One part of it is south of the center of the Dome, and the other north of it. There is a comity, whatever we may say or whatever we may believe, that leads us at least to acknowledge that the Capitol belongs to the two Houses of Congress and not to one House. Therefore, in examining this question we should study it with reference to the present situation and what is necessary to improve that situation.

Senators have said in this debate that there is a desire on the part of the Supreme Court, representing one great branch of our Government, to vacate the Capitol, where they have been since the Capitol was constructed, in order to have a building of their own.

I do not speak for them and I do not know positively what they favor, but if I have a correct understanding with respect to their view, it is that they desire to remain in the Capitol and not be banished to some other portion of the city for the purpose of having a temple of justice. I think it is to the interest of the public service that they should remain here if they so desire, and if we can make provision whereby they can be suitably accommodated we should do so. Their numbers are but nine, and they do not require very large accommodations, and it is not probable that that number will be largely increased, if it is increased at all. While they have not accommodations suitable to their situation and the work they have to do, yet it is very easy to provide in some way for additional accommodations for them without sending them out of the Capitol.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator understand that the Supreme Court is finding fault with its present quarters?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not.

Mr. HALE. They are content if we let them alone.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore, with our enlarged work and our enlarged necessities, if we are to retain the Supreme Court where it is, we have, in my judgment, an obligation resting upon us to provide suitable accommodations for the business of the Senate and the House, which is the business of the country.

The House has decided that for its convenience it requires not only what it has now, but space for the uses of the House and its committees plus the building it is now constructing. Whilst I believe that the building proposed by the House, in enlargement of the present Capitol, would in a great measure relieve the stress and strain we have here now, I agree with Senators that when that is done, if it is properly done, there will still be necessity for some rooms for the purposes of the Senate in addition to the Capitol. So I have no trouble and no scruple as respects the two things that are in this amendment—the enlargement of the Capitol and the construction of this building on the northeast corner.

That brings us to the consideration of the question whether we should or should not enlarge the Capitol. I do not lay very great stress on the fact as to what Mr. Walter said or what Mr. Walter did in 1855 regarding the extension of the Capitol. Neither do I lay special stress on the plans which he made in the year 1873–74. I only know that there was even then a pressure, as there was thirty years ago, for an enlargement of the Capitol or for some additional accommodations in other quarters. That necessity finally resulted in the purchase of the Maltby Building, which is wholly inadequate for the purposes intended.

Mr. President, I have changed my mind with respect to the center of the building and the construction proposed there. I had the idea that an enlargement of the building, by putting an addition on the east front, would impair the beauty and harmony of the building, but I have reason to believe that all of the architects, or all of them with very few exceptions, now believe that to make a suitable enlargement of the central building will greatly enhance the beauty of the Capitol and not impair it. That is the impression I gathered from the architects who appeared before the committee with respect to the House provision. And so understanding, the Committee on Appropriations have put in this bill provisions whereby the most eminent architects of our country shall study these questions and see whether or not the Senator from Maine is right in his belief that the beauty of this façade will be marred or impaired by the additional construction proposed. If it can not be done architecturally, it will not be done. If it can be done architecturally, I have no doubt of the importance of doing it. I have no doubt of its utility.

The Senator from Minnesota expressed what I am sure must be the view of most of the Senators, that they would greatly prefer to have accommodations for committee rooms at least in this building if those accommodations can be secured. I know of no Senator who has a comfortable committee room who is willing to exchange it for a place in the Maltby Building. I know of no Senator who would be willing to leave the Capitol, if he has a good committee room here, and place himself and his committee in the distant northeast building which we propose to construct.

Therefore I take it for granted it is important, both as a measure of utility and as a measure necessary to increase the beauty of the Capitol and not to mar it, that we should have an addition, or, rather, a central building, constructed here, not as the Senator from Maine says, to mar its beauty or impair any other portion of the Capitol, but which would add to its beauty.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator acknowledge, while he says he thinks the new plans would be as good or better than the old, that the filling up of the space entirely destroys the present façade?

Mr. ALLISON. We have no proposition before us to fill up that space. It is not a question of filling up space that is proposed in the model, if you call it such, of the front of the building.

Mr. HALE. I examined that model with Mr. Woods the other day. It fills up almost the entire space between the two wings and projects farther out than either wing.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. HALE. Now, I say that can not be done. The Senator thinks it would be a better design than the present——

Mr. ALLISON. I have not said so.

Mr. HALE. I thought so.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly I have said nothing about the design.

Mr. HALE. I thought the Senator said it would improve it. Does not the Senator think it would destroy the present design?

Mr. ALLISON. I have said, and I repeat it, that I have enough confidence and faith in the skill of American architects to believe that they can so modify this plan as not to mar the present structure, but to add to its beauty and harmony as well as its utility.

Mr. HALE. And preserve the present eastern front?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. That is the object of it. If that can not be done, then, of course, Congress will not approve the plan. If we have no architects who can put the dome somewhere in the neighborhood of the center of the Capitol instead of limping on one side, and thereby add to its beauty, we had better reject the scheme we have here that Congress shall approve this plan.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask a question because I am as uninformed as I am concerned. The Senator from Iowa knows all about the question——

Mr. ALLISON. I do not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. While some of us know nothing about it. Suppose the new building is built with ample accommodations for the entire present membership of the Senate and all that may hereafter be added to it. Will that not as a practical matter have the result of foreclosing all possible extensions of the Capitol, whatever our future opinions may be about it? I am very willing myself, I think, on a vote to take the opinion of the committee, but it seems as the discussion goes along that that may be a pertinent question.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a pertinent question, assuming as a basis suggestions made by Senators. But as I understand, whatever we may do, if we build a building over there capable of providing for each Senator ample room, and in addition to that spacious committee rooms, if you please, still there would come up after we have passed away, or some of us at least, a desire on the part of Senators who may come here that they should have some committee rooms in the Capitol.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Assuming that to be true, does not the Senator think it would be better and more economical to proceed with these projects one at a time? They are both very large and involve a very considerable sum of money. We have demands for buildings for the accommodation of other branches of the service, and does not the Senator think it is enough for the moment for us to provide for the construction of the independent building for the use of Senators, for folding rooms and the like, a complement to the building in course of erection for the House of Representatives, and then, if need be, after this work is completed, take up consideration of the question of an extension of the Capitol?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator as I understand the question. I think it is important that at as early a day as practicable we provide additional accommodations for Senators, and that is just what this amendment proposes, as we have it here.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. We propose now to do what? We propose now to provide a building on the north side of the Senate which shall in a measure be the counterpart of the building which the House of Representatives is now constructing.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is not proposed to make that less than sufficient to accommodate the present needs of Senators, is it?

Mr. ALLISON. It is supposed that the commission which is named in the amendment will provide a suitable plan for that purpose.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Ample in every respect?

Mr. ALLISON. Ample for what? Certainly it is not expected that the committee rooms in this wing are to be transferred to the new building in any great number. It is certainly important that every committee we can have in the Capitol should be placed here. Therefore the commission will provide a suitable building. Our other amendment to the House provision looks to a careful study, not so much by ourselves, not by people who have not devoted their lives to the study of architecture, but by the most eminent architects in our country, of the great question of improving and enlarging and beautifying the Capitol of our country, and at the same time providing such room as will enable the country to get the greatest benefit from the services of the great men who are sent from the various States to perform the work of the country.

That will take the architects some time. They will not be able to report a suitable improvement of this building, if they make the study of it they ought to make, until the next Congress convenes. I am not myself prepared to postpone this question five or ten years. I want to see it progressing intelligently, in order that whatever is necessary may be done by the two Houses of Congress to provide such accommodations as they require to transact the public business.

We have built a Library here at an expenditure of $6,000,000, in round numbers, for the purpose of accommodating the people who come from every part of our country and for the purpose of accommodating the Representatives and Senators with respect to the literature which they need in their work. But we have thus far failed to provide ourselves with proper accommodations to do our work.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] made an observation a few moments ago which impressed me, and that was that a Representative or a Senator requires a lot of books about him in order to investigate questions which daily arise here and which are of the utmost importance. If Senators are to investigate the subjects, they must have about them books. With respect to the deficiency bill which is now under consideration in the Committee on Appropriations, we had a request from the Attorney-General that there should be provided an additional set of the Reports of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the Federal Reporter. He said there were only six sets in the Attorney-General's Office, and that each Assistant Attorney-General ought to be provided with a set in his own room.

If it be true that in the Executive Departments of the Government, with respect to the people who are the arms of the Attorney-General in the Department of Justice, they require these instrumentalities, is it not true also that Senators require them? That is impossible under existing conditions, and therefore I am in favor of enlarging the Capitol: first, because I believe it is necessary for Senators; secondly, because the coordinate branch with us in making the laws of this country have decided that it is important for them as well as for ourselves. Even if we had some doubt as respects the utility and the immediate and pressing necessity of the enlargement of the Capitol, I think we ought to have some regard at least to the comity that should exist between the two Houses.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator said he supposed the committee rooms in this building would be retained as committee rooms; that he was impressed with the remark made by the Senator from Minnesota that it was preferable to have committee rooms in this building.

Mr. ALLISON. So far as practicable.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator realizes, I take it, that each chairman of a committee having suitable rooms in this building will not require an office in the new building?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not want to commit myself on that question.

Mr. BERRY. Very well; if a man wants two offices in two different buildings, that is a proposition which has never been discussed. I put this question to the Senator from Iowa: He says he is in favor of the eastern front extension; that it will furnish a number of rooms necessary for committee rooms for Senators. There are about fifty Senators now who have rooms in this building, and the Senator thinks they would prefer those rooms rather than to go to the northeast corner. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think that $4,500,000—and he will not deny that it will reach that sum before we get through with it, but put it at $3,000,000, if you will, which is the amount specified in the amendment—is an excessive amount to provide for the remaining forty Senators who are in the Maltby Building? Does he think we ought to have a building costing this enormous sum of money for the forty Senators remaining now in the Maltby Building? As I said a while ago, I do not think the Senator will say we will complete the building for $3,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. If I can remember all of the questions the Senator puts to me, I will try to answer them.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will answer such of them as he can remember, I will be glad.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer that part of the question which stated as a premise that there are fifty Senators who have suitable accommodations in this building.

Mr. BERRY. I said who have rooms here.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh; rooms are a different thing. I want to provide, if I can, suitable rooms for Senators.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator any doubt that there are at least a dozen, and I think more, rooms now here under the present arrangement which are occupied as committee rooms, in the terraces and those places, that are not suitable, and the occupants of which would be very much improved in accommodations if they had rooms in the new building?

Mr. ALLISON. I think probably they would be improved. The rooms in the new building, I think, would be an improvement on the rooms in the terrace.

Mr. HALE. I know myself there are here a dozen rooms occupied as committee rooms the occupants of which would be furnished improved accommodations in the new building. So the object of this building is not only to take care of men who have not committee rooms here, but of those who have not good committee rooms here. That is the proposition of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that perfectly. The Senator has emphasized what I am trying to say when I say that we need all the committee rooms we can have here that are suitable, and in addition to that I feel quite sure we will require a great amount of additional room in the new building.

I wish to say a word about the committee rooms in the Capitol. They are not suitable committee rooms, with a very few exceptions. There are but few rooms that are suited to the work that has to be done. The Senator from Arkansas saw proper to suggest that I would not like to change to any new building that was constructed or even to the central part of this building, if improved, the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman at this time. I would not.

Mr. BERRY. I did not say that. The Senator will pardon me. I said that he had said that those who had committee rooms here would not want to move.

Mr. ALLISON. I would not, but at the same time the room of the Committee on Appropriations lacks just what the Senator from Texas in his observations said was most needed—that is, it practically lacks having a private room where study can go on, where books and reports can be provided suitably and examined. The committee room is lumbered up, and it is from necessity almost a public room.

Mr. President, with great deference to other Senators, especially to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], who has charge of legislation affecting public buildings and grounds in this city and elsewhere, in my opinion we will not provide a temple of justice within the next few years for the Supreme Court. I see no movement looking to that end. It will not come. They do not want to go, and as long as they prefer to stay here that pressure will not be upon us.

I wish to say another thing before I sit down, and that is with respect to these two provisions. I believe our first duty or our equal duty is to provide accommodations for Senators and Members of the House which will be equal at least to the accommodations afforded the Executive Departments of this Government. I do not know of the head of an Executive Department, except perhaps one or two, who is not amply provided with accommodations, and with better accommodations for the transaction of the public business than any Senator in the Capitol.

The Senator from Arkansas says that these two provisions involve four and a half million dollars. This is limited to $2,225,000. I should have been willing to have made the limit less. The ground which is ample and which is probably necessary in many ways, outside of the building itself, will not cost to exceed $750,000; so the outside cost of the building will be $3,000,000.

The cost of the central building is limited to two and a half million dollars, and not $3,000,000, in the bill. If the views expressed by the Senator from Maine and others are to prevail, then the central building will be much smaller than the building proposed to project away out in the center of the Capitol. If it is a much smaller building, it will cost much less money. So we can accommodate suitably the committee rooms in this building, the House of Representatives, and the Supreme Court, and also take care of the number of Senators in the new building who may require care.

Mr. President, I do not share the view of either Senator who has spoken against this central building as respects taking only one or the other. I am for both of them and for starting both upon their pathway, one more rapidly than the other, but both, in order that we may provide here suitable accommodations for ourselves and for those who come after us.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the primary purpose of this amendment——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is a question merely for information. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Iowa how many Senators will be accommodated in this building after the front is extended as proposed?

Mr. ALLISON. That depends entirely, of course, upon the plan which we have provided shall be most carefully studied. It may accommodate twenty-five; it may accommodate thirty-three; it may accommodate a less number. I know if it can accommodate even ten and will add to the beauty and harmony of this great structure, it ought to be entered upon, in view of all the circumstances surrounding the situation.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I asked how many would be accommodated all told, taking those who are accommodated now and those to be provided for by the addition.

Mr. ALLISON. In the two buildings?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes, approximately.

Mr. ALLISON. There are ninety Senators now, and I think there are forty-eight or forty-nine committees, so that Senators not having committees would be obliged to get suitable quarters for their work, which they must do and ought to do and which they would like to do, in the neighborhood of the Capitol.

So I should think there would be required some forty rooms in the building on the other side for committees, in addition to, say, twenty or twenty-five here, as we could find room. I think it is very important that we should have as many committee rooms as possible in this building.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I simply wanted to find out how many would have to be provided for in the new building.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a conjecture—an estimate.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, as I was proceeding to say, the primary purpose of the Senate committee amendment is to provide committee rooms or office rooms for Senators, or both. Now, there are two projects to meet that demand. One is to do what the Senate committee proposes to do—to construct a building. The other is to meet that demand by increasing the Capitol by the extension of the east front. If anybody has for a moment considered and given any attention to the last proposition, he must admit that it does not solve the difficulty. There will be some room, but of the whole number that anyone has claimed half must be surrendered to the House, and the other half will be practically dark rooms.

Mr. ALLISON. The two together will accommodate them.

Mr. TELLER. The two together, the Senator says, will accommodate them. But, Mr. President, we have no expectation that the House is going to divide that space with us. Years and years ago the line was drawn between the House and the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I refer to our outside building and the number who will be accommodated here.

Mr. TELLER. I expect we will erect the outside building big enough to accommodate the Senate. How big that will be I do not know. That will be determined. But I do know, and so does the Senator from Iowa, and every other man on the committee and off the committee ought to know, that if you extend the east front you still leave the problem unsolved as to how you are going to take care of your membership. You leave a great number of Senators who are not treated as other Senators are treated even with the extension as proposed.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say merely a word or two about the proposed extension. The Senator from Iowa says he has changed his mind—that he has heard some architect. I myself heard the architect before the committee the other day. There were six or eight of them who appeared before the committee, and there was not a single man of them who knew what Walter's plan was. Finally they said they did not believe that it was a fixed and determined plan of Walter's. Some of them said they could devise a scheme that would beautify the front.

Oh, Mr. President, I suppose you could find a carpenter out here who would agree to do that. I do not care what an architect says about this front, the public opinion and the world's opinion for fifty years has declared that it does not need any tinkering by anybody, whether he is an architect or anything else. There is not a public building on the face of the earth that has had more laudations of its beauty than the very building in which we are now, and when some man who labels himself as an architect because, perhaps, he has studied the question of drawing angles and corners comes here and tells me that he can beautify it and improve it I want first to see his work.

Mr. President, no great architect who has ever looked at this building has ever suggested any improvement on it by that process, by extending the front. Common sense ought to show every man that it puts the whole Capitol building out of its order and that the symmetry is destroyed.

If it had not been for the pressure for room you would not have heard of any demand for the extension of the east front of the Capitol. I have heard it here for years, first for the east front, and when public opinion would not approve of that, then it was for the west part of the building. Then, as I said the other day, we devised the crypt, which is not a fit place for anybody to stay in except the engineer who takes care of the engines down there, or something of that sort.

Mr. SPOONER. There are eleven Senators down there.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Wisconsin says there are eleven Senators down there. Mr. President, I spent two years there. I spent two years in the Maltby Building. When I came here I spent two years looking around for a place, and finally I hired a room down on F street to transact my business in. I came from a law office in a small country town. I never have had since I have been here accommodations which I would have regarded for a moment as suitable for a law office in a town of 3,500 or 4,000 people. I surrounded myself with books, when books cost four or five times what books cost to-day, and in the library in which I profess to have an interest there are several thousand law books, and none too much for the law office to which I formerly belonged and of which I am not now a member.

I am like the Senator from Texas. I can not do business without books. I heard a Senator the other day talking about a brilliant young man, who had studied law and who came to the bar. He did not seem to give much attention to books, and one of his brothers said to him, "Why, you ought to give more attention to the law books and study the law." "Oh," he said, "I looked over them and found that they said the law was as I thought it was, and I do not think I need go any further."

Mr. SPOONER. He did not go much further, did he?

Mr. TELLER. I guess he did not go much further, either. Mr. President, I am not one of those. I have my ideas of what the law is. I am like the Senator from Texas; I want to fortify myself and find out whether I am right or not. I find, occasionally, that the Supreme Court of the United States has said one thing is the law one day and subsequently it modified or revoked it. I want to keep in touch with those things. I think every Senator ought to have a set of the Reports of the Supreme Court of the United States in his office, where he can have access to them. Two-thirds of the Senate are lawyers, and always will be, probably, and it is upon the lawyers of the Senate we depend in law questions.

Mr. President, I am going to vote with the Senator from Maine, who moves to strike out all about the east front. I do not agree with the Senator from Connecticut that we commit ourselves to it; but I believe when you have a special building built you will cease to hear any demand from anybody for the extension of the east front. But, anyway, the proposition as it came from the committee is in a better shape than when it came from the House. What was that? That immediately we are to go to work and tear down the east front.

There is not a man living who knows what the architect would bring out of it. Now, I do not intend to be silent when a proposition is made that any man living shall be authorized to tear down that front and substitute something for it except as Congress directs him to do it. I know the people of the United States will hold us responsible if we allow some one calling himself an architect or calling himself what he pleases to make a botch of that work, as I believe would be the case if they are allowed to go on unrestricted and unrestrained and undirected.

I have taken great pride in this Capitol. I came here at an early day, long before I ever expected that I would become a member of this body or of any other connected with it. I stood around the building and looked at it. I was not an architect, but I do not need to be an architect to know whether the lines of a building are drawn with reference to symmetry and taste and beauty. That is a thing that is given to you by the Almighty, and you do not get it out of books. There never was an architect in the world who was not, if a great architect, like a poet, born. The men who built the great buildings of the world were great teachers of architectural beauty, and there are now in the world lines of architecture of systems of buildings that the world recognizes as a correct idea and a correct system.

This extension of the Capitol will find no parallel on the face of the globe. In all the great buildings that have been built in the history of the world there has been nothing like what is now proposed. It can not be classed with any order of architecture or class of buildings that mankind ever looked on before. Yet we are to have it, first, in the interest of economy, and then in the interest of a few traveling architects who think they would be able to do something to immortalize themselves. Mr. President, I believe they would—but not in the way they hope to do it—if they were allowed to have their way and perform the work they propose, to extend the building out 200 feet.

Mr. President, undoubtedly that part of the building could be taken down and a new one put up that would not greatly destroy the harmony of the building, but it would not be big enough to accommodate any considerable number of Senators. On the contrary, if you should do what ought to be done, if at all it is to be touched, you would have to keep close in the lines of the original building. I do not believe there is a first-class architect in the world who would tell you that he can improve the building. At all events, there has been no public demand that we should attempt to do that thing.

As I said the other day in committee, I repeat, if you allow profane hands to be put upon the building and it turns out not to be symmetrical and beautiful, and a building that does not receive the plaudits of the world, as this has done, you will hear a complaint from one end of the land to the other, and not from the masses, but from the best minds and best people of the land.

Mr. President, I want to address myself for a moment or two to the expense of this building. I know, of course, we have different ideas about the matter.

Like the Senator from Texas, I would not spend a dollar of the public money that was not properly expended; but I know a great nation like this is not bound down by the economy that individuals are bound down by. The buildings that we build for the nation should not be such as a man builds for himself either for business or for residence. It should be a building that will accommodate the necessities of the Government. It should be a building built, as the Senator from Texas says, strong, splendid, useful; and it should be built not for this year or the next or the next hundred years, but it should stand like the old buildings of Rome, for two thousand years.

Mr. President, if I had been a member of the Senate seventy-odd years ago I do not suppose I would have thought of expending $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 upon a house for Senators, but when I was born the population of this country was less than 12,000,000. To-day it is 80,000,000 and more. Senators sitting here will yet live to see that population doubled, and with the doubling population you will double the wealth and you will double the necessities of the Government for places of business here. You may not get more Senators than the Senator from Texas says you are going to get. It may be four and it may be eight more——

Mr. STEWART. How about Alaska?

Mr. TELLER. But, Mr. President, I believe there are Senators sitting here who will see more than eight additional Senators coming into this Chamber. Fourteen Senators have come into it from seven new States since I took my seat in the Senate. I can not say what the future will be as to Alaska, as the Senator from Nevada suggested, but I believe that eventually there will be a population there that will justify the admission of a State from Alaska. If we maintain our relations with Porto Rico, some day we are either to put Porto Rico by herself or we are bound to take her in as a State. Possibly, and it has been one of my hopes and one of my dreams, at some time this great country north of us, peopled with people like ourselves, of the same race and the same aspirations, may say to us, "Let us come in under your flag." They could do it, Mr. President, without loss of dignity. They could do it without loss of prestige. They could do it, I believe, to great advantage for us and for them. Suppose they asked us to accept them as a part of this great Republic, dividing them up into States, I should like to see this Capitol in such a shape that it could take them in when they came.

I do not believe in economizing to such an extent that we shall appear mean. I think since I have been in the Senate I voted not less than four or five times against a proposition to build a library building in this city. Why? Because no proposition came to us from the other body that was of a proper character. Finally, after rejecting bill after bill, we passed a law to build the present grand and magnificent Library building to which everybody who comes to Washington holds up his hands in admiration. The first Librarian of that building said to me, "I have seen every great library of the world. There are bigger buildings, but there is no such library building in its appointment, in its fitness, in its beauty, anywhere else under the sun."

Thousands and tens of thousands of people come here from our own land and look upon that building with pride and with pleasure. I want to see the public buildings in this great capital of ours built so that when the people come here they will look up to them with reverence and be delighted.

Mr. President, if the building costs $3,000,000 or $5,000,000 or $10,000,000, we are able to build it and ought to build it.

I have a committee room. I could get from my committee room in the proposed building almost as quickly as from the one in the Capitol. I have no privacy in it. It is a place where I must open the door for any man who comes from my State or any other on public business, or who desires a place to write or to read or to consult me or anybody else.

I say every Senator ought to have two rooms. Every Senator ought to have two rooms, one of them large enough to contain his library. I do not know whether the Government of the United States will supply each Senator with a library. I have for many years supplied myself with such books as I felt I ought to have. I can not put them in my committee room, and I am compelled to put them in my rooms at the hotel. I pack them up every time I go away and send them to some storehouse, and unpack them again when I come back. I say no Senator can do his duty here without more or less books of reference, without books of authority on the great questions that come before us day by day.

Mr. President, it is said one could not get from the building over there into the Senate in time to answer to a roll call. In my judgment, that would be one of the advantages in having Senators there. I say it is the duty of a Senator not to be in his committee room during the hours when the Senate is in session. It is his duty to be here. I do not care what is up or what is being considered, it is the duty of a Senator to attend the sessions of the Senate and not be in his committee room. Early in the morning or after adjournment there is time enough for us to do our work in committees.

Mr. President, I would be very glad to see adopted, as I said, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, striking out all about the east front; but if that is not done I do not believe, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says, that we are committed to that scheme. We have appointed a commission. The Senators we have selected I am sure can not be objectionable to anybody, and I believe I can say, although in their presence, that they are men who are not going to allow any architects or anyone else to cajole them into doing a thing that ought not to be done.

The same may be said of Members of the House of Representatives who have been included in this provision after consultation with Members of that body.

Mr. President, when they have got right-thinking architects before them—and the commission are to select the architects—I believe we shall get a report from that commission that under no circumstances do they want or do we want to touch the east front of the Capitol.

I do not expect, Mr. President, that I shall ever have the advantage of this new building. My term of office will undoubtedly have expired before it is sufficiently completed to be suitable for occupation; but there will be others to occupy it.

I believe it is the duty of the Senate to provide what we ought to have provided years ago. As I heard a Senator say to-day, the House for twenty years knew that they ought to do just what they have done, but they were afraid of public criticism; and yet when they did it, Mr. President, there was not a suggestion from any place in the country that there had been any lack of economy or lack of judgment in so providing for their accommodation in the future.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I understand that there are not thirty of the ninety Senators who are properly provided for so far as their rooms are concerned. In other words, there are over sixty of the Senators not properly accommodated.

Mr. HALE. Not over twenty-five Senators are properly provided for.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from Maine suggests that there are not over twenty-five who are properly provided for.

Mr. TELLER. I think the last statement is more nearly correct than the first.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am very heartily in favor of providing the most ample accommodations for Senators, upon whom a vast amount of work devolves and great responsibility rests. I do not think there is any difference of opinion among Senators upon that point. The only question which arose in my mind was whether it was advisable to carry forward both of these contemplated projects at the same time. The committee proposes by its amendment to go forward with the purchase of a site and the construction of a separate building for the use of Senators which shall be the complement of the building in course of construction for the House of Representatives.

It will take some years to complete it. It seems to me that it should be adequate for the reasonable present necessities of those Senators who are very inadequately provided for, and at a later date the work of extending the Capitol might be entered upon if that course, upon the most mature consideration, should be thought advisable.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to continue this discussion further. I think the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] has substantially said what I was about to touch upon, so I need not continue.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make a single remark.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to be recognized for a moment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. There is a good deal of necessity for an executive session this evening. There are many nominations that have not been disposed of for some days, and in addition to that there is a ratification of a treaty to be considered, which I am anxious to have attended to as soon as possible. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he will not yield, that I may move an executive session?

Mr. ALLISON. I had hoped that we should be able to finish the sundry civil appropriation bill this evening, but I am willing, under the circumstances, to yield to the Senator from Illinois, as I am sure we can not finish the bill to-night.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. STEWART. I want to say just a few words on the matter which has been pending, but I will make my remarks in the morning.

G. W. HARDY AND JOSEPH LARD.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5245) to indemnify G. W. Hardy and Joseph Lard, of Scott County, Miss., for homestead land by granting other lands in lieu thereof. It will take only a minute. A similar bill passed the Senate in the last Congress.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has in part promised to yield to the Senator from Mississippi, so I will yield to him; but I give notice that I will not yield to any other Senator.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to grant to G. W. Hardy and Joseph Lard, Scott County, Miss., each 80 acres of the unreserved public land of the United States in the State of Mississippi, such as they shall, respectively, select and notify to the Secretary of the Interior, in subdivisions not less than 40 acres, in lieu of land held by them but awarded by the General Land Office to the Alabama and Vicksburg Railroad Company, and that such selection shall not be made of any land lawfully held by any other person at the time of such selection as a homestead entry, or to which any other person shall have at such time any lawful claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 20, 1904, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 19, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

STATEHOOD FOR THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House numbered 331, have had the same under consideration, and ask leave to report in lieu thereof the following:

"Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution the bill (H. R. 14749) entitled 'A bill to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States,' shall be taken up for consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and general debate may be had on said bill until 4.30 o'clock p. m., at which hour, or earlier if said general debate shall cease earlier, a vote shall at once be taken upon the following amendments to said bill, which shall be considered as pending—that is to say, on page 5, in line 2, after the word 'marriages,' and on page 22, in line 25, before the word 'are,' insert in each case the words 'and the sale, barter, or giving of intoxicating liquors to Indians,' so that the closing sentence of the paragraph in each case as amended shall read: 'and that polygamous or plural marriages and the sale, barter, or giving of intoxicating liquors to Indians are forever prohibited'—and on the bill to its final passage, without intervening motion or appeal."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule relates to the consideration of the bill proposing to admit to statehood Oklahoma and the Indian Territory as one State and Arizona and New Mexico as another State. The provision in the rule is for debate until half past 4 o'clock this evening, at which time a vote is to be taken on the bill and upon one amendment that is suggested in the rule and which relates to the sale of liquor to Indians. I have no disposition to occupy the time of the House. How much time does the gentleman from Mississippi want?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The usual time under the rule.

Mr. DALZELL. I did not ask the previous question; I forgot that. I will yield to the gentleman such time as he wants.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Very well.

Mr. DALZELL. Twenty minutes?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi twenty minutes and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that the attention of the country has been sufficiently called to the rapid-fire, drastic legislation lately proceeding from the Committee on Rules.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been so long the mouthpiece of the Committee on Rules for purposes of this sort that his former urbane countenance has assumed here of late a Draconian expression.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps no matter of equal importance permanently and remotely to the American people has been pushed through in a manner like this. In order that the House may appreciate the importance ultimately and with regard to the future history of the country of the legislation now proposed, I wish to call its attention to some facts, but before that I want to say that in my opinion there is not an idea in the mind of gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber that this bill will become a law at this session of Congress; probably not an idea that it ever will become law. It is a pretext to satisfy the popular demand for statehood for Oklahoma and the Indian Territory and New Mexico and Arizona; a mere pretext, "apples to the eye and ashes to the taste." It is, in my opinion, purposely presented here in such a form as that it was known beforehand that it could not receive the approbation and votes of this side of the Chamber and will receive the votes of that side of the Chamber only for the purpose of holding up this pretext to the country.

What is proposed to be done here? Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that Montana has 145,310 square miles; Texas, 262,290 square miles; California, 156,172 square miles; Nevada, 109,740 square miles; New Mexico, 122,460 square miles; Arizona, 112,920 square miles, making for Arizona and New Mexico put together an area of 235,380 square miles, more than any State in the Union except Texas. Now, I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that these States mentioned, if these two are admitted as one State, will contain the enormous area of 908,822 square miles, and that Montana, Texas, California, Nevada, and the new State of Arizona, composed of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, will for all time be limited in representation in the Senate of the United States to ten Senators, whereas the North Atlantic States, having all put together only 162,103 square miles; the South Atlantic States, having all put together only 268,620 square miles, making the sum total of the Atlantic seaboard States 430,720 square miles, will have for all time a representation in the Senate of the United States of twenty-eight Senators, eight more than double the Senatorial representation which will be held in the States mentioned by me, with an area of nearly 909,000 square miles—over twice as many square miles.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that legislation like this is laying up a curse for the future. The time will come when the people of the Union will not submit to the Atlantic seacoast having twenty-eight Senators in the Senate of the United States and the entire Pacific slope only six, and the great States which lie on the Mississippi River, five on each side, ten altogether—the most fertile and destined to be the richest and most populous in the Union—only twenty representatives in the Senate of the United States, while the States of the Gulf coast, excluding Florida, will have for all time only ten Senators. When the country is met finally with the constitutional bar against changing this unjust and inequitable representation in the Senate save with the consent of each State, a representation that becomes more and more unjust and inequitable as time rolls on and the West and South become equal in density of population with the Atlantic seaboard, we have been taught by past history in this country that that bar will not restrain the people when they are seeking substantial justice. You are laying up a curse, you are laying up revolt against the Constitution itself, and you are laying up a glaring injustice for the future historian to consider.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left, because I do not wish to consume all the time myself?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has fourteen minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield those fourteen minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have, as a rule, no serious objection to this House, through the Committee on Rules, limiting debate. It often happens that debate is too prolonged on immaterial matters in this House, and with a body of this size there ought to be some means by which it can be limited. It may occur, though seldom, that a bill ought to be presented and considered by this House without amendment. Scarcely, however, ought this to occur. To-day we are considering, not a matter of minor importance, but a matter that affects the rights and the destiny of nearly 2,000,000 of American people. Under the provisions of the Constitution we are proposing to-day to admit four Territories into the sisterhood of States. It has occurred to me that in view of the manner in which this bill was framed in the Committee on Territories, framed in the dark by the majority, without due consideration, that this House at some time ought to have the privilege of considering this intensely wicked partisan measure.

There are provisions of the bill which, I take it, will appeal to your sense of justice and right. There are provisions in it that deny equal representation in the constitutional convention which must adopt this act. There are provisions in the bill that do not permit the two great parties to participate by their representatives in the election or in the naming of the judges and the boards of election. These, perhaps, are of minor importance from a partisan standpoint. They ought to appeal to us, but ordinarily they do not to men seeking party advantage.

I now desire to submit to gentlemen on the other side of the House a matter which I believe will appeal not only to their sense of duty, but to their morality, their honesty, their integrity in the solution of this question. You have said that but one amendment ought to be submitted to this bill—that a prohibition amendment. I submit to you that this House ought to let the people of those Territories have a voice in the consolidation proposed under the bill. I submit that if New Mexico and Arizona are to vote together, if either of the States should reject the bill, that they should not be consolidated.

If Oklahoma and the Indian Territory are to vote together and if either rejects the provisions of the bill, it ought not to be passed. And why? You put it in the power of the Territory having the majority to mercilessly coerce the smaller Territory against its will into a union, although every vote in that smaller Territory may be polled against the measure. In the case of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory I say to you, gentlemen, that you can not pass this bill unless you violate the plighted faith and the honor of the United States to the Five Civilized Tribes, unless you permit an amendment that authorizes a separate vote in the Indian Territory on this question. If that be true, if your personal and political integrity are involved in this question, if the honor of the United States is involved, if the duty to keep treaties with the Indians is involved, is it wise for you to pass a measure without consideration of that question?

Listen for a moment and see if this does not appeal to your sense of justice: You remember the Indians were removed from east of the Mississippi in the early thirties and placed in the Indian Territory; that they agreed to treaties alone upon the ground that that was to be made a home for the Indians, a permanent abiding place, not to be controlled and no dominion to be exercised over it by the white men without their consent. That provision runs through all of their treaties. Yes, as late as 1898, this very House affirmed this provision of those treaties. Let us take the treaty of 1835 and see what it provides:

> Whereas it being the anxious desire of the Government of the United States to secure to the Cherokee Nation of Indians a permanent home, and which shall, under the most solemn guaranty of the United States, be and remain theirs forever, a home that shall never in all future time be embarrassed by having extended around it the lines or placed over it the jurisdiction of a Territory or State nor be pressed upon by the extension, in any way, of any of the limits of any existing Territory or State.

Is not that a solemn treaty obligation? How dare you oust the Five Tribes from their heritage under the treaty without their consent? Again, article 5 of the treaty of 1856 provides as follows:

> The United States hereby covenant and agree that the lands ceded to the Cherokee Nation in the foregoing article shall in no future time, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory.

How are you to obtain their consent? I say in no other way than by giving them a separate vote. If you permit Oklahoma to coerce them into this union, do you not violate the treaty? Again:

> The United States do hereby solemnly agree and bind themselves that no State or Territory shall ever pass laws for the government of the Creek or Seminole tribes of Indians, and that no portion of either of the tracts of country defined in the first and second articles of this agreement shall ever be embraced or included within, or annexed to, any Territory or State, nor shall either or any part of either ever be erected into a Territory without the full and free consent of the legislative authority of the tribes owning the same.

An agreement was again made with the Choctaws who there reside, as follows:

> No Territory or State shall ever have the right to pass laws for the government of the Choctaw Nation of Red Men and their descendants; and that no part of the land granted them shall ever be embraced in any Territory or State.

Again you affirmed it; you gentlemen of the majority, sitting there, by your solemn vote affirmed the stipulation that was made:

> This stipulation is made in the belief that the tribal governments so modified will prove so satisfactory that there will be no need or desire for further change until the lands now occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes shall, in the opinion of Congress, be prepared for admission as a State to the Union.

Mr. CURTIS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman, as was said to me yesterday afternoon, "Not now."

Mr. CURTIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I never declined to yield to him for a question.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Very well; I believe it was not you; ask the question if you wish to.

Mr. CURTIS. In what part of the treaty of 1898 do you find the words declaring in effect "We agree to wait to admit those Territories as States until the tribes consent?"

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That provision is not in the treaty of 1898. That treaty is a stipulation reaffirming the old treaty. That old treaty has never been abrogated anywhere.

Why, sir, good morals, decency, common honesty, ought to give the people of the Indian Territory some rights on this question; and of all the men in this House that I would have suspected least of standing here to protest against the exercise of the power by the Indians under the treaty is the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. I am not asking to violate any treaty; but I want to say that the agreement of 1898 with the Chickasaws and Choctaws was made with the understanding that they would be taken into the Union as States by 1906.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Exactly, and they are ready to come in as States now, but with their consent, as every one of these treaties stipulates, and not by the coercion of Oklahoma. [Applause.]

We, sir, have no objection to a State being erected by the people of Indian Territory. Here is the language—I will ask that it go into the RECORD—which was written only a few weeks ago, on the 23d of March, by the chief of the Choctaw Nation to the chairman of this committee, protesting, in the name of the treaties, in the name of the honor and integrity of the United States, and for the sake of the welfare of the Indian Territory, against the consummation of this wrong on your part. [Applause.] I ask that this paper, without reading, be published as an appendix to my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Gentlemen, how can you override these treaties? What purpose have you in doing so? Are you not willing even to allow an amendment to be submitted to this House that will give these people their rights?

Turning from that question, let us look at the general issue of law involved in this controversy. Arizona was organized as a separate Territory. In pursuance of the long-established policy of this Government, in the discretion and judgment of the Congress of the United States, she is entitled to be a State. The inchoate right of statehood vested in her when her Territorial government was formed under the law, subject alone to the judgment and discretion of Congress as to the time of admission. What do you appeal to to determine this question? To political conditions? I hope not. New Mexico was entitled to admission under the same rule. We do not object to her separate admission. We do not object to the separate admission of any of these Territories. We do object to their consolidation against their consent.

What is the duty of this House in determining this question? If the Territory has sufficient area, if it has sufficient population, if its resources are sufficient to enable it to maintain an independent State, then it is the duty of this House, following all precedents, following the rule of law, to admit the Territory into the Union as a State.

This is the exercise of a discretion—a legislative, a semijudicial discretion; not a willful, arbitrary discretion; not a discretion that appeals to the political feelings of Members of this House. But if the facts are such——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to give me five minutes more.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania very much.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Can not the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow ten minutes more, so that the gentleman from Tennessee may complete his argument?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman has kindly granted the time I asked.

Mr. DALZELL. Any time that is yielded now must of course be charged to that side of the House.

Several MEMBERS on the Democratic side. Oh, yes; that is all right.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee want?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I should be glad if the gentleman could make it ten minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Very well; let it be ten minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that it is impossible for me to cover this whole field in this short time. I will only ask, during the consideration of this rule, the attention of the House for a few minutes.

This is a vast bill, with a very large number of sections. It disposes of much public property. It disposes of the rights of all of these people. I can not now enter fully into its discussion.

It is a bill almost identical on the question of consolidation with an amendment which the House, by a nearly unanimous vote, rejected two years ago. The gentlemen representing the Territories here have protested against this bill until the hour of coercion by the Republican party to meet the political exigencies as that party assumes them to exist in that country. They are estopped from saying that the amendment we ask you to grant should not be granted. Time and again they have said, the majority of this House have said—ah, more than that, the national Republican platform says—you shall make three States out of the Territories of Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona, to say nothing of the Indian Territory. The Democratic platform proclaims the same. Are you going to pass this law in violation of your party pledges? Are you going to pass it in violation of your treaty obligations? Are you going to pass it in violation of the law and the long-established policy of this Government in the admission of States?

For what purpose, gentlemen, are you here? Do you want us to say—I would be loath to say it—that you believe that by the consolidation of these States you will obtain one Republican State and the Democrats one Democratic State, or possibly you obtain two Republican States, when, if you should incorporate these Territories into separate States, you fear the result would be three Democratic States and one Republican State? Have we descended so low in the political scale that we are to measure the rights and the liberties of nearly 2,000,000 people according to the necessities of a political party? Are we to determine questions that are sacred to them for the purpose of a mere temporary political advantage?

I warn you that these Territories may not always remain Democratic or Republican; that political lines may and probably will be changed. The time has already arrived in this Republic when a united West, North, and East can not stand together against that which you are pleased to call a solid South. The economic conditions are such that at no late day hence the Southern States will probably be found in alignment upon these great questions with the East.

Then it will be that the people of the West will point their fingers with scorn at you men who now represent the West, and will tell you that you have betrayed the best interests of that great section of this great country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not care to see a condition exist when it shall be in the power of a combination of any three sections of this country to override the welfare and the interest of any other. Unhappily, we have experienced the misfortunes that arise from that condition in the part of the land in which I live. I would rather see an equipoise maintained. I would rather see conditions such that in the great citadel of Federal power—the United States Senate—no section shall have an advantage over any other, whatever the conditions upon this floor may be. 'Twere better in the end for the Union, better for the maintenance of constitutional government and the glory and honor of this great Republic, that no sectional strife exist.

You are here to-day to build other Commonwealths. You are to ordain constitutional government, to establish justice, to raise the shield of liberty against oppression again, to put an end to dependence, to establish independence, to breathe sovereignty into new Commonwealths. Shall you do it rudely, shall you do it disorderly, or shall you follow the methods of the Constitution? Shall you pursue the course of deliberative bodies? Shall you look to the interests of those people, or will you blindly and roughly ride over their rights and their wishes in the interest of party politics?

I ask you to consider here an amendment for a separate vote upon the question suggested, that these people may have a voice in determining their own destiny. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

APPENDIX.

[Copy of letter addressed to Hon. E. L. HAMILTON, Chairman of Committee on Territories.]

KINTA, IND. T., March 23, 1904.

SIR: On behalf of the Indians of the Choctaw Nation I most emphatically protest against the enactment by Congress of any legislation that seeks in any way to abrogate that portion of the Atoka agreement which guarantees that the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory shall be admitted as a separate State of the Union. The Atoka agreement, among other things, provides as follows:

"This stipulation is made in the belief that the tribal governments so modified will prove so satisfactory that there will be no need or desire for further change until the lands now occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes shall, in the opinion of Congress, be prepared for admission as a State to the Union."

This agreement was negotiated by representatives of the United States Government and representatives of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and was enacted into law by Congress on June 28, 1898 (30 Stat., 495). I was a member of the commission representing the Choctaw Nation, and recall that the representatives of the United States Government wrote in that agreement the provision above quoted as an inducement to the Five Civilized Tribes to make agreements. The Indians of the Five Tribes have always been solicitous about their status when their tribal governments should cease. That solicitude was repeatedly expressed by the Indians while we were considering the Atoka agreement. As a result the United States commissioners made the guaranty just mentioned, which became to the Indians one of the most favorable provisions of the agreement.

However, this was but a reiteration of the solemn guaranties made to the Five Tribes when the United States Government first sought to make treaties with them, whereby the Indians relinquished their lands east of the Mississippi and moved to the Indian Territory. In the treaty of 1828 with the Cherokee Nation of Indians the United States Government used the following language:

"Whereas it being the anxious desire of the Government of the United States to secure to the Cherokee Nation of Indians a permanent home, and which shall, under the most solemn guaranty of the United States be and remain theirs forever, a home that shall never in all future time be embarrassed by having extended around it the lines or placed over it the jurisdiction of a Territory or State, nor be pressed upon by the extension, in any way, of the limits of any existing Territory or State."

Again, in 1835, in a treaty with the Cherokees, language even more forcible was used, as follows:

"ARTICLE 5. The United States hereby covenant and agree that the lands ceded to the Cherokee Nation in the foregoing article shall in no future time, without their consent, be included within the Territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory."

In 1856 the United States Government made an agreement with the Creeks and Seminoles, and article 4 of the agreement contains the following guaranty:

"The United States do hereby solemnly agree and bind themselves that no State or Territory shall ever pass laws for the government of the Creek or Seminole tribes of Indians, and that no portion of either of the tracts of country defined in the first and second articles of this agreement shall ever be embraced or included within, or annexed to, any Territory or State, nor shall either or any part of either ever be erected into a Territory without the full and free consent of the legislative authority of the tribe owning the same."

An agreement was made with the Choctaw Nation in 1830 whereby the United States Government guaranteed that:

"No Territory or State shall ever have the right to pass laws for the government of the Choctaw Nation of red men and their descendants; and that no part of the land granted them shall ever be embraced in any Territory or State."

These quotations from the earlier agreements, considered in connection with the Atoka agreement of 1898, show conclusively that the United States Government has always intended that the lands of the Five Tribes in Indian Territory should finally be admitted as a separate State. It shows also that the lands of the Five Tribes can not be annexed to or become a part of any Territory or State without the consent of the Indians. The Indians of the Five Tribes have so interpreted the language of these agreements.

I pause to remind you, and through you the Congress of the United States, that the friendship of the Choctaw people for the United States Government has existed for more than a century. The most memorable proof of that friendship was furnished by Pushmataha, the great Choctaw warrior and friend of President Jackson, when he organized several regiments of Choctaw warriors and rendered valuable assistance to the United States Government at a most critical period in her early history. That friendship has continued unabated through the years. When the United States Government sought to make agreements with the Indians of Indian Territory, whereby their lands might be allotted, their property divided, and their tribal governments dissolved, the Choctaw people were the first to accede to the request of the Government. They made and ratified the first agreement, namely, the Atoka agreement, referred to herein.

Afterwards it was found that the Atoka agreement would have to be amended in some particulars in order to finally settle all our tribal affairs. The Choctaw people readily complied with the request of the honorable Secretary of the Interior and negotiated an agreement supplemental to the Atoka agrement, commonly called the "supplementary agreement," ratified by Congress July 1, 1902, and by the Choctaw people on September 25, 1902, but that agreement in no way modified that portion of the Atoka agreement guaranteeing to us a separate State for Indian Territory.

So firmly were the members of the Five Civilized Tribes of the opinion that the United States Government would observe the various provisions above quoted that, at my suggestion, the chief executive of each of the Five Tribes appointed representatives to an international convention to formulate plans that would acquaint Congress with the Indians' wishes as to the kind of government that should be erected here at the expiration of the several tribal governments.

The plans were outlined in a convention held at Eufaula, Creek Nation, Ind. T., May 21, 1903, and for your information I inclose herewith a copy of the resolutions there adopted. I might add that these resolutions represent the very best thought of the leading men of each of the Five Tribes, and I most earnestly request that they receive the careful consideration of your committee and that Congress enact legislation embodying the ideas therein set forth.

I would further state that the Indians of the Choctaw Nation carried out these resolutions to the letter. December 19, 1903, they held the election provided for in section 3 of the resolutions. At that election 987 votes were cast for the plans therein outlined, and only 5 votes were cast against them. This fact is a most eloquent indorsement of the plans and shows conclusively that the Indians of the Choctaw Nation are unalterably opposed to the union of Indian Territory and Oklahoma.

Adverting to that section of the resolutions which provides that the constitution of the new State shall prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, I desire to say that the Choctaw people are warmly in favor of prohibition, but they request that Congress will either make the prohibition absolute or not embody it in the constitution at all. In other words, it would be very distasteful to the Indians of the Five Tribes for Congress to require that the constitution of the new State shall discriminate between citizens of Indian blood and citizens without Indian blood. In theory the Indian loves liquor; in practice he is not as bad as the Irish.

There is a widespread tendency to classify the Indians of Indian Territory with the reservation Indians which are maintained by the Government in several States, including Oklahoma Territory. I fear this impression prevails even in Congress. The Indians of the Five Tribes object to being classified with the reservation Indians. Thus far the policy of the United States with reference to those Indians has been to keep them principally on the reservations, and they have been slow to take part in political affairs.

Having no experience in matters of government, they are possibly not qualified to assume the responsibilities of United States citizenship. But the Indians of Indian Territory have had their own governments for nearly a century, and are thoroughly competent by actual experience to become citizens of a State and to intelligently participate in the administration of its affairs. Moreover, we are acquainted with the noncitizens of Indian Territory. They know us. We have been neighbors for many years, and our earnest wish is that we be made citizens of a State with them. We object to becoming citizens of a State with the people of Oklahoma. They know us not; neither do they know that we are qualified in every respect to take part in the formation and administration of a State government. Not only that, the people of Oklahoma, being accustomed to the reservation Indians, would be inclined to classify us with them, and thus be prejudiced against us and our rights.

Our friends in Congress must not forget that, comparatively speaking, there are but few full-bloods in Indian Territory, and that a great majority of them are thoroughly capable to take care of themselves and of their own affairs. The Indians of the Five Tribes have never been reservation Indians; they have always been self-sustaining. For nearly a century they have been taking care of themselves and of their personal affairs, and have been intimately identified with the affairs of government.

Inasmuch as the Choctaw Nation is the only tribe that held the election provided for in the inclosed resolutions, the question naturally arises, Why did the other tribes not hold their elections? The councils of the Creek and Seminole nations passed resolutions authorizing the appointment of delegates to the constitutional convention. The Cherokees and Chickasaws took no action, although I know, by correspondence and conversation, they are heartily in favor of the plans. A reason that operated strongly upon the tribes is that they can not appropriate money except by approval of the President of the United States. They were naturally apprehensive that the President might not approve acts appropriating the money with which to hold the elections and pay the expenses of the constitutional convention.

Furthermore, the severe criticisms indulged in by a noncitizen press at home and abroad who favor the union of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, so thoroughly discouraged the Indians of the other nations that they lost active interest in the movement. The Indians having failed to hold their constitutional convention, it was impossible for the noncitizens to perform the part assigned them in the Eufaula resolutions. It must also be borne constantly in mind that there is such diversity of opinion in Congress on the question of statehood legislation for Indian Territory that it is impossible for the Indians and noncitizens here to unite on any plan acceptable to Congress. However, I express the sentiment of the great majority of the Indians of the Five Tribes when I say that we are in favor of any statehood that Congress may provide, so long as it is statehood for Indian Territory alone, independent of Oklahoma. In this connection I invite your attention to a memorial passed by the general council of the Choctaw Nation in October, 1903, and addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, in which they protest against the annexation of Indian Territory to Oklahoma, giving their reasons therefor at length. A copy of the memorial is inclosed herewith.

In conclusion, permit me to say that the inclosed resolutions of the Eufaula convention recite the moral obligations resting upon the United States Government to maintain its treaty obligations inviolate, and that the inclosed memorial advances, with great perspicuity, the manifold material reasons why the Indian Territory should be admitted as a separate State of the Union. However, I repeat that the Indians of the Five Tribes will not insist upon Congress giving us statehood legislation drawn in strict conformity with the resolutions of the Eufaula convention, but they will steadfastly insist that such legislation be drawn in conformity with the provision of the Atoka agreement herein quoted.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Respectfully,

GREEN MCCURTAIN,
Principal Chief Choctaw Nation.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The minority of the Committee on the Territories do not agree with the conclusion of the majority, and dissent from the provisions of the bill presented by them in its material details and the general policy of the consolidation of the four Territories involved into two States. On the question of fact as to the ability of the four Territories to maintain separate and distinct organization and statehood we present separately the facts as to the condition, population, and resources of each Territory.

ARIZONA.

Area, 113,939 square miles, or 72,792,500 square acres.

Its vast area is distributed as follows: Forty-two million acres grazing land; 30,000,000 acres mineral land, the grazing and mineral lands blending; 10,000,000 acres agricultural land. One million acres of this agricultural land has already been reclaimed, and 9,000,000 acres more may be.

The grazing belt extends from the line of New Mexico on the east to the timber belt 140 miles west. The timber belt is a vast area of great pine forests, containing nearly 10,000 square miles of as fine timber as there is in the world.

MINERAL LANDS.

The mineral belt of this Territory is one of the largest in the world. It reaches from Nevada and Utah in the northwest, passing diagonally through the Territory into the State of Sonora, Mexico, in the southeast, a distance in length of 437 miles by about 100 miles in width. There are now 1,840 patented mines in operation in said Territory, and thousands of mining claims are being operated and developed which are not patented. Out of these mines is taken annually, in round numbers, $43,000,000, and the development of this great mineral belt is very fast growing. The output of these mines consists of the precious metals—gold and silver—and copper, and the testimony is that this great mineral belt is scarcely yet prospected, notwithstanding that it takes out $43,000,000 per year.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS.

The great portion of the agricultural lands lie south of the mineral belt just referred to, and are known as the Salt, Gila, and Colorado river valleys. Agriculture there is maintained by irrigation, and they have, all told, over 800 miles of irrigating canals and laterals for that use. In the Salt River Valley alone there are 152,000 acres in cultivation by means of irrigation. The receipts for the products sold last year are given below:

Hay	$1,200,000
Fruits	80,000
Stock fattened and sold from pastures and hay not otherwise sold.	1,500,000
Honey	80,000
Butter and cheese	76,000
Poultry and eggs	50,000
Total	2,906,000

In the Graham Valley on the upper Gila about 40 per cent of that amount was produced. The agricultural products of the balance of the agricultural portion of the Territory are not known, but they are vast.

PRODUCTIVE POWER OF THE SOIL.

The soil of this agricultural country is very deep and has wonderful productive power. They produce here all the tropical fruits, as well as cereals, cantaloupes, alfalfa, hay, etc. It has been shown that the soil yields an annual return per acre as follows: Almonds, $75 to $150 net; cantaloupes, from $75 to $110 net; alfalfa, from $36 to $56 net, and so on, showing the productive power of the soil to be wonderfully great.

The Salt River and Gila valleys converge and come together and have a length of about 368 miles in extent, making an area of country susceptible of reclamation and cultivation greater than the valley of the Nile.

PRODUCTION OF LUMBER.

This is a great industry in Arizona. There are three great lumber companies there whose plants will each cut 200,000 feet of lumber per day. Their returns are about 200,000,000 feet annually.

RAILROAD FACILITIES.

There are over 1,400 miles of railroad in the Territory and others fast building.

There are two great trunk lines passing through Arizona from east to west. The Santa Fe Pacific through the northern portion and the Southern Pacific through the southern part. The Santa Fe, Prescott and Phoenix runs north and south, connecting with the Maricopa and Phoenix Railroad, which connects with the Southern Pacific. There are feeder lines of railroad branching out in all directions and aiding in the development of the mineral section.

The El Paso and Southwestern, owned by Phelps, Dodge & Co., is built in the southeastern part of the Territory, reaching from the grazing land in the south to the great mines at Bisbee and other places. The Arizona and New Mexico is another eastern railroad, built by a Scotch corporation for the purpose of handling the copper in the Clifton and Morenci country and the interstate commerce passing into Mexico from that line. The United Verde and Pacific in the north, connecting the Black Hills mineral section with the Santa Fe, Prescott and Phoenix, is another system for developing the heavy mineral country. All of these railroads are in a prosperous condition and their business increasing about 33 per cent annually, and that is about the per cent of their annual increase for the last five years.

TAXABLE PROPERTY.

The railroad property costs not less than $30,000,000, and its assessed valuation is $6,000,000.

Mines and realty, value more than $200,000,000; taxed, improvements and all, $2,724,238. So the taxable property is assessed at $43,880,041 when it is really worth $400,000,000.

POPULATION.

The census gives Arizona 122,921. As given by counties last fall it was 178,600, and the immense increase to-day has no doubt reached the 200,000 limit. The population is almost entirely American, not 700 of it having been born in Mexico, and only about 4,400, all told, of the population were born in foreign countries. It is an intelligent population. Outside of 27,500 Indians, not taxed, who belong to the illiterate class, there is not 1 per cent of the population illiterate. All do their own reading and writing in the transaction of their affairs.

LAW AND SCHOOL.

Law.—The Territory of Arizona has as fine a code of laws as any of the older sections of the Union, and they are as well enforced as anywhere in the land. Therefore life and property rights are as well protected there as anywhere from the Atlantic coast to the Rocky Mountains. She has her own capitol and other public buildings—up-to-date and new, paid for by herself—and is thus ready prepared for housekeeping as a State as well as any State in the Union.

School facilities.—Arizona has its own university, with mining and agricultural schools connected therewith. Normal schools 2, 10 high schools, 278 common schools.

The number of pupils from 6 to 21 years attending public schools are 25,951; from 8 to 14 years in other schools, 13,311.

SCHOOL PROPERTY AND VALUE.

Common school buildings and furniture	$727,182
Value of apparatus	21,802
Value of school libraries	9,144

Number of male teachers, 115; female, 359.

Average wages paid males, $80.33 per month; females, $67.53 per month.

The school fund collected for 1903	$515,633.49
Amount expended, 1903	415,243.15
Balance cash on hand for the present year	100,390.34

POSTAL RECEIPTS.

For the first and second class offices alone, 1903, $138,302—16 per cent more than any previous year.

NEW MEXICO.

From official sources we find the Territory of New Mexico to have:

Area, 122,469 square miles.

This does not include the production by individual placer miners or by prospectors not mining in a systematic manner. In addition, New Mexico produced a vast quantity of coal, iron, turquoise, gypsum, building material, and a number of other useful minerals and precious stones. The Colorado Fuel and Iron Company during the fiscal year hauled 138,152 long tons of iron ore out of New Mexico. At this time of year considerable money is withdrawn from the banks to move the wool crops and stock.

OKLAHOMA.

AREA.

The area of Oklahoma is 39,030 square miles.

POPULATION.

The population of Oklahoma in 1890 was 61,834. In 1900 it was 398,331, and by the last estimate of the report of the governor of Oklahoma for 1903 it was 650,000, and, allowing a reasonable increase, would now be about 725,000 people.

RESOURCES.

The governor of Oklahoma in his annual report of 1903 estimated the taxable property in Oklahoma at $400,000,000.

The banking facilities of Oklahoma consisted of 79 national banks and 247 Territorial banks, with deposits on the 1st day of January, 1904, of $22,456,510.

There are 250 weekly newspapers, 28 daily papers, and a number of monthly and semimonthly publications, representing every phase of political, social, religious, educational, and industrial life.

Oklahoma has 2,192 district schoolhouses, and 180,000 children enrolled. Nearly 3,000 students are attending the university, agricultural and mechanical college, and normal schools.

There are over 3,000 miles of railroad, penetrating all of the twenty-six counties in the Territory and giving close connection with the great trunk lines of the surrounding States. More miles of railroad were constructed in Oklahoma last year than in any State or Territory.

The rolling prairie makes an easy grade and cheap construction of railroad lines. Many other roads are projected and under construction, and it can safely be said that that section will speedily have very highly developed transportation facilities.

In Oklahoma are 280 grain elevators and 66 flouring mills, marketing over 10,000 barrels of flour per day. There are 233 cotton gins; over 1,600,000 live stock. Over 35,000 carloads of products were shipped out of the Territory and 27,000 carloads of freight shipped in.

Oklahoma has a splendid climate, good water, a health-giving section, and its development has been the astonishment of the West. It is capable of sustaining a population as dense as any part of the United States.

By area, by population, by resources, and by virtue of the tremendous development to be expected of the immediate future of Oklahoma, it is entitled to statehood—a right which should not be withheld on any pretext whatever.

Certainly there is no reason why Oklahoma should be denied statehood in order to compel the formation of one State out of Indian Territory and Oklahoma. The representative of Oklahoma in Congress has vigorously demanded the rights of that magnificent country. No good reason exists for denying the right of statehood to the people of Oklahoma, and none such has been offered.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

AREA.

The area of Indian Territory, excluding water areas, is 31,000 square miles of actual land surface.

POPULATION.

The population of Indian Territory for 1890 was..... 180,182
The population for 1900 was..... 392,060

an average increase per annum of 21.76 per cent. At this rate of annual increase, the population of Indian Territory in 1901 was 467,372; for 1902, 544,509; for 1903, 657,855, and will be for 1904, 796,004.

The rate of increase has been greater since 1900 than before.

POST-OFFICES.

The Presidential post-offices number 45; gross receipts for year ending September 30, 1903, $220,000. There are 630 fourth-class post-offices, making a total of 675, which is greater than the number of post-offices in one-third of the States of the Union. There have been established since the census of 1900, 250 new post-offices.

BANKS.

The last report of the Comptroller of the Currency gives the number of national banks in Indian Territory at 95. There were organized in Indian Territory, from March 14, 1900, to October 31, 1903, in two years and seven months, 75 national banks. During the same period there were organized in Maine, 5; New Hampshire, 3; Vermont, 1; Massachusetts, 6; Rhode Island, 1; Connecticut 3; or a total of 19, thus exhibiting the remarkable fact that Indian Territory established five times as many national banks as all of the States of New England combined.

RAILROADS.

By the census of 1900 there were over 2,500 miles of railroad, and over a thousand miles have been constructed since the census was taken. The following was the mileage by the census of 1900:

St. Louis and San Francisco Company	600
Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad	275
Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company	200
Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, and St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern	190
Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad	150
Gulf, Colorado and Sante Fe	120
Kansas, Oklahoma Central and Southwestern Railroad	80
Atchison, Topeka and Sante Fe Railroad	20

There are thousands of miles of telegraph and telephone lines, local and long distance. There are sixty fire, life, accident, and other insurance companies over which there is no official supervision, and who contribute nothing in taxes.

NEWSPAPERS.

There are 200 newspapers, including 20 dailies, 175 weeklies, and 5 monthlies.

The number of persons to the family, by the census of 1900, in Indian Territory was greater than in any State or Territory in the Union, except Texas and North Carolina, and is therefore not subject to the charge of the great Republican leader of "race suicide."

The percentage of native white of native parents in Indian Territory is only exceeded by West Virginia, Oklahoma, Kentucky, Indiana, and New Mexico.

The percentage of native white male population of militia age is only exceeded by West Virginia and Oklahoma.

The percentage of foreign born is the least in the United States except North Carolina.

The per cent engaged in agriculture is only exceeded by three States—Mississippi, Oklahoma, and Arkansas.

GENERAL RESOURCES.

The available farm lands in Indian Territory would probably reach 15,000,000 acres, of which probably 15 or 20 per cent is under cultivation. Probably three-fourths of the land of Indian Territory are woodlands. There is probably 2,000,000 acres of commercial pine lands and a large quantity of hardwood timber, including various varieties of oak, ash, hickory, etc. The larger part of the woodland is of no commercial value, but suitable for fuel and fencing. The farm animals are worth probably $55,000,000; other farm products about $35,000,000. There were about 250,000 bales of cotton produced in 1902 and nearly 35,000,000 bushels of corn. The lands of Indian Territory at a fair estimate are worth not less than $300,000,000. There are probably 2,000,000 acres of land bearing coal in commercial quantity. There are very large deposits of asphalt.

Petroleum of a good quality, worth from $1.10 to $1.60 a barrel, has been discovered over an area 100 miles long by 40 miles wide, with splendid commercial natural gas in the same area. A large number of wells have been sunk at Bartlesville, at Tulsa, at Redfork, at Muscogee, and at numerous other points between Muscogee and the Kansas line. The values which this field is capable of producing are estimated by a competent man to be enormous.

SCHOOLS.

There is no school system for the people of Indian Territory except the Indian schools. There are about 85,000 Indian citizens, all of whom are now citizens of the United States; 22,000 of these are full-blood Indians, or may be properly classed as such. There are probably 20,000 negroes, 5,000 whites, and the remainder, 38,000, are Indian crossed on white to an extent that they are not distinguishable from white. These are the only people who have proper school privileges, except such limited opportunities as the town affords where they have the right of self-taxation.

MANUFACTURERS.

The number of manufacturers in 1890 was only 20; the number of manufacturers in 1900 was 789, a remarkable increase of 3,800 per cent, and the increase during the past three years has been at a greatly increased ratio.

In view of these facts, it can not reasonably be contended that each of the four Territories is not now entitled to statehood by reason of sufficiency of area, population, and resources. The resources of each are more that sufficient to support a State government, and much greater than those of a majority of the States now in the Union at the time of their admission, and greater than many of them now.

The area of each of these Territories is greater than that of many of the States, and that of Arizona and New Mexico is greater than any of them except five.

Each Territory has now a greater population than four-fifths of the States when admitted, as is shown by the following statistics:

State.	Date of admission.	Population.

The United States, in order to induce the Five Civilized Indian Tribes to sell their lands east of the Mississippi River and remove to the land now embracing the Indian Territory, entered into a number of treaties with the Five Civilized Tribes, in which the United States bound themselves with great formality, and upon a formal vote of the Senate of the United States, with the approval of the President, contracting that they would not at any future time establish over the Indians of Indian Territory any State or Territorial government without their consent, as follows:

"CHEROKEES.

"ART. 5. The United States hereby covenants and agrees that the lands ceded to the Cherokee Nation in the foregoing article shall in no future time, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory." (Rev. Ind. Treaties, p. 63.)

Similar treaties with the other four tribes were also made.

Again:

"The United States agrees to maintain strict laws in the Seminole country against the introduction, sale, barter, or giving away of intoxicants of any kind or quality."

Similar agreements were made with the other four tribes.

In this connection the minority feel constrained to point out that no effort whatsoever has been made to secure the consent of the Five Civilized Tribes to the union of Oklahoma with the Indian Territory into one State, which must be done unless it be determined to ignore all treaty obligations and agreements with these Indians, and reverse the policy of the Government in its treatment of them for nearly a hundred years.

If the policy advanced by the majority for making two States out of the four Territories were accepted, the bill itself is objectionable because of the inequality and injustice in representation at the constitutional convention. By the provisions of the bill Oklahoma is given sixty delegates and Indian Territory only fifty. The census of 1900 gives the population of Oklahoma 398,331. The population of Indian Territory, according to the same census, was 392,060. There has been a large increase in population in each Territory since that time, but it is doubtful as to which has had the greater increase.

The hearings indicated that the present population is purely conjectural, ranging in estimate in each from 500,000 to 800,000 inhabitants. Every advocate of joint statehood from either Territory favored the proposition that the Territories should be admitted with equal rights and privileges. No valid excuse can be offered for giving such extraordinary advantages to Oklahoma. The representation, in our judgment, should be equal; but if not equal, Indian Territory should have at least 54 of the 110 delegates.

In Arizona and New Mexico a similar condition is presented by the bill. Arizona is given forty delegates and New Mexico seventy, when, from any standpoint, Arizona should have much larger representation in the convention. Another objection to the bill as it is framed is in the election management provided for Indian Territory. Authority is given to Federal officials to fix the various districts which are to select delegates to the constitutional convention and then to define the election precincts and appoint the judges who are to hold the elections. Returns are made to these Federal officials to be canvassed, and their action is final. There is nowhere any provision for any minority representation, excepting only that one of the judges at each election precinct must belong to a different political party to the others. In our judgment, nonpartisan commissions should have charge of the elections, and the districts should be proportioned among the various recording districts as nearly according to the population as may be.

There should be no restriction on either of the new States with reference to their capitals, because the State when admitted is to be admitted upon the same terms and enjoy the same privileges as any other State.

Other objections may be urged to the bill, which we do not embody in this report.

We can not understand how the majority can disregard their party obligations and violate the specific pledges of their national platform on the question of statehood. The Republican party in 1896 had this plank in its platform:

"We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard for the interest of the people of the Territories and of the United States."

The same party in 1900 had this declaration:

"We favor home rule for, and the early admission to, statehood of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma."

These pledges are plainly violated in the failure to report a bill in favor of statehood for each of these Territories. Such a bill passed the House of Representatives in the last Congress, and each of them certainly has a much stronger claim for recognition now than it had in 1902 when that statehood bill passed. The Delegate from Arizona, near the beginning of this session, presented a bill for the admission of Arizona as a State. The Delegate from New Mexico presented a similar bill for the admission of New Mexico, and the Delegate from Oklahoma likewise presented a bill asking for the admission of Oklahoma to statehood, and in the hearings before the committee each of them insisted that the bill presented by him reflected the wishes of his people and insisted upon a favorable report thereon.

The people of Arizona and New Mexico especially have repudiated the action of the committee in trying to make joint statehood for their Territories. Why should the Committee on the Territories change its base with reference to this matter? What excuse can be given to the country for this utter disregard of party pledges and failure to consider the wishes of the people?

Under this bill Arizona, being numerically the weaker, could be forced into a union with New Mexico, even though every vote in Arizona were cast against the consolidation, and this applies with equal force to the proposed union of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. The stronger of the two Territories can mercilessly coerce the other into union.

It has long been a settled doctrine of American polity, founded in wisdom and justice, that a Territory of the Union is, upon organization, clothed with the inchoate right of ultimate statehood—a right to be exercised in the discretion of Congress when the Territory is capable, by reason of its resources and population, to assume the duties and obligations of a free State.

The denial of this right, the reversal of this policy by an arbitrary exercise of power by Congress in forcing an unnatural union of Territories against the will of their people, the forcible union of peoples distinct in customs, habits, manners, and religion, is ultraradical and revolutionary. It is a pitiful illustration of the degradation to which a party may fall when violating for party purposes its plighted faith made to the people in the national platform.

Should the Republican party pass this bill, wicked as it is in the denial of equal rights in representation and partisan in all of its material details, it will but afford another indecent example of the suppression of individual, Territorial, and national rights to subserve partisan ends. Even more than that, it is the surrender of the power that four sovereign States would exercise in the Union if constitutional methods were orderly followed in the admission of States. It is the last effort to minimize the influence of the West and Southwest in the citadel of Federal power—the United States Senate.

We are of the opinion that it will ultimately be better for the Union that the Territories opposed to consolidation shall be denied statehood under the theory of this bill indefinitely than that the conditions that will be forced by an unnatural union should exist.

JOHN A. MOON.
JAMES T. LLOYD.
JAMES M. ROBINSON.
JOHN R. THAYER.
GORDON RUSSELL.
CHAS. C. REID.
J. F. WILSON,
Delegate from Arizona.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, how much time was consumed by the gentleman from Tennessee?

The SPEAKER. There are thirty-two minutes remaining of the hour.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention or desire to occupy the attention of the House in the discussion of the merits of this proposition, and I should be willing to give all my time to some member of the committee to address the House upon the merits did I not think I should say something in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The gentleman from Mississippi has seen fit to charge this side of the House with bad faith. I do not know whence he derives his information. It must be from some source which is not accessible to me. We expect that this bill will take its course as a party measure. It is before the House to-day as a party measure, carefully considered by the Republican majority of the Committee on the Territories, submitted to a party caucus, and brought into this House to-day pursuant to a rule recommended by that party caucus.

Whatever any other legislative body may see fit to do, we expect to do our duty in the expectation that that body will do its duty.

Now, I can not agree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] in his argument as to what should constitute statehood. I do not agree with him that the paramount question is as to how many square miles of territory there are, without respect to the character of that territory, without respect to its population, without respect to its possibilities.

We justify our action on this bill on the high ground that we are endeavoring to sustain the proper relative power of the Senate and the House of Representatives in legislation. It was never contemplated by the men who made the Constitution that any State in this Union should have more Senators than it had Representatives, outside of those mentioned at the foundation of the Government.

I desire to call the attention of the House to some very significant figures.

The following States, to wit, Delaware, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, have each two Senators and only one Representative.

The following States, to wit, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, and Vermont, have each two Senators and only two Representatives.

The following States, to wit, Colorado, New Hampshire, and Washington, have each two Senators and only three Representatives.

It thus appears that there are in the United States to-day fourteen States with twenty-eight Senators and only twenty-five Representatives; there are six States with twelve Senators and six Representatives; there are five States with ten Senators and ten Representatives. When you come to add Oklahoma and Arizona upon the basis of this bill, you will have sixteen States with thirty-two Senators and thirty-two Representatives.

I do not agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] that the fathers of the Republic intended that the Senate should be the citadel of Federal power. On the contrary, the fathers, the men who made the Constitution, intended that the power of the people should rest in this House, this House that comes directly from the people. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] And the concession that was made when the Constitution was framed that there should be two Senators from the small States was made upon the express terms that the power to originate revenue legislation should rest with the people's representatives. [Renewed applause.] So that we are here to-day endeavoring to sustain the true power of this House with respect to legislation, the House's proper relation to the Senate. We are here trying to carry out, so far as may be, the original theory of this Government, and not to admit States upon the basis of square miles of arid land without regard to population and without regard to possibilities.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to ask the gentleman this question: Does he think that we ought to legislate for the present comparative population of States, or whether we ought to legislate for the probable population of the future? Is this legislation for this moment, or is it legislation for all time?

Mr. DALZELL. We ought to legislate upon certainties as nearly as possible. There is very little to be found out respecting New Mexico and Arizona that we have not already discovered. Thirty years ago New Mexico was knocking at the door of the Union for admission as a State. We know from the past what we may expect with respect to that Territory in the future; we know likewise what we may expect as to Arizona, and we have before us always, and will always have before us, unfortunately because of our system, the example of Nevada.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker, of the hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I concur in the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that this is not only a question of privilege, but it is one of great moment and importance to the people of the whole country; and especially is it important to people living in the several Territories which it is proposed to organize into sovereign States. To-day they are under the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States, which controls their legislation and defines their rights and privileges. By the passage of this bill, if accepted by them, they become sovereign States. They then elect their own governors, their own judges, and have all the rights, powers, and duties that citizens of other States may have.

Like the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who preceded me, I can not understand the force of the argument of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which is based upon the principle that the total number of square miles in certain States or Territories should have a controlling influence and bearing upon the question of representation either in this body or any other. I believe it is population and not square miles; it is the people and not arid, desert acres that are and should be represented here. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman admit that upon the average the square mile is the basis upon which to reckon future population?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I do not admit it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, one word more. And does not the gentleman admit that all histories of the world show that where irrigation is introduced and becomes the practice and custom population is more dense than in countries where it is unnecessary?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I do not admit either of these propositions. I think the growth of most states in the history of the world and of the nations of the world will show that square miles have had but very little to do with population.

The number of square miles in the isles of Great Britain, compared to the square miles in Siberia, is very small, while the population of the former is far in excess of that of the latter territory. And Holland, the most densely populated of any nation on the globe, I think, has not been dependent upon irrigation for its many millions. [Laughter.] Therefore I do not admit that either proposition of the gentleman is correct.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to ask the gentleman just one question.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. Is it not a fact that you voted in the Fifty-seventh Congress to admit Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico as separate States?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I will answer the gentleman that question. A bill was brought in here to admit them as States. I did not myself personally believe in the bill, but, being new upon the floor of this House, knowing that it was certain to pass, and not desiring to fight a hopeless case, I sat quietly in my seat.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman wants to excuse himself on the ground that he is a new Member, he can do so.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech in my time or for him to give me a lecture. Now, I was indeed sorry to hear the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, for whom I have unbounded respect and admiration, attempt covertly at least to appeal to sectional prejudice and refer to what might happen because there was not sufficient representation on the far Pacific coast or States verging that way. We have had enough in years past of appeals to sectional prejudice. We are one people and one country and we should have fair representation of all the people everywhere in this grand Republic. The political rights and power of one citizen, no matter where he may live, should, as far as may be, be equal to that of any other.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. You are mistaken; I did not appeal to any section. I appealed to you not to consider that question.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Well, that is one and a very good way to really appeal to it by referring to it in the way the gentleman did. Now, let us see what the real facts are. Here is a proposition to make one State from Oklahoma and what is termed the Indian Territory. Now, the Indian Territory is not an organized Territory in the common sense or acceptation of the term. It is simply a strip of land or tract of land upon which certain tribes were settled in 1832 and after. Oklahoma has been carved out of it, and it was undoubtedly intended by Congress that it should include all of it as soon as tribal relations were extinguished. When the gentleman was talking about violating the treaties, all of which have been abrogated, when he was talking about that he must have known that every particle of the Territory of Oklahoma, with the exception of a small strip called "No Man's Land," has been taken from the Indian Territory, or, in other words, the lands ceded to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Do you mean to say all of those treaties have been abrogated?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Substantially, or will be in 1906, when this State will be created.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. They will be if we pass this bill, but not before.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. They were abrogated and are abrogated, and nearly everything that was originally contemplated by the treaties has been blotted out. I admit that those treaties originally contemplated tribal government and tribal autonomy, but the Curtis Act and other acts have taken all that away. They are now a judge-governed country. They have no longer tribal courts, and in 1906 all tribal relations are to cease; and this bill does not take effect until 1906, when those relations do cease. They are now under the Arkansas code administered by United States judges, and their lands are rapidly being alloted and assigned to them in severalty. Now, I wish to call the gentleman's attention to some facts.

I will venture the assertion—and I do this because he is very solicitous that nothing shall be done in reference to the other Territories in creating the State of Arizona that the people do not want—I will venture the assertion, from what has appeared before the Committee on Territories and from what I have seen in both Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, and know, having been there several times myself, that more than three-fourths of the people of those two Territories, if they may be called two, desire to be made into one State, and I want to say to him one thing more, that while I have seen there and heard before the committee prominent Republicans desiring that there be two States I do not recall of ever seeing in that Territory a single Democrat who was not earnest and active in his desire for one State, or, as they call it, single statehood. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The chairman of the Democratic committee of Oklahoma, Mr. Doyle, as all know, who is one of the ablest lawyers in Oklahoma Territory, came before the Territorial committee and in a very able and lengthy argument, which is printed in the hearings, urged that we have one State from those two sections of Territories, and presented reasons and arguments which seem to me unanswerable and convincing to any unprejudiced mind.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask now for the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I ask that the gentleman will permit me to correct him there.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has not yet expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I beg pardon; I thought the gentleman's time had expired.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. For a question, not for an argument.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not desire to make an argument. I desire to ask the gentleman, inasmuch as there is a great difference of facts between us, whether these Territories are separately favorable to this bill, is not the better way to determine that to let the people vote separately on it? That will test the question.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. That involves a great deal of difficulty and trouble, so much so that it is impracticable.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Does it?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker, these Territories have been knocking at our doors for admission as States for a long time, and we are desirous of presenting some measure that has some prospect of passing this Congress. New Mexico especially has been asking statehood for, lo, these many years. Oklahoma has been asking it more recently, and I believe that the only practicable and equitable solution of this question which has any fair chance of passing this Congress is the one now before it in the pending statehood bill. We submit to the people of those Territories whether or not they will accept the organic acts and accept the provisions in these bills. And it will be the first time any statehood proposition has been submitted to them.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And they can vote those down if they want to.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. If they see fit, they can vote them down, and if the gentlemen of the minority are correct in their report, in which they state that both are opposed to this bill, they will vote them down in New Mexico and Arizona. If they do so, that is an end of the matter, as we are not forcing statehood upon them—simply giving them an opportunity to enjoy it.

Now, it is said that Arizona will have a territorial area much too large for a State. It will have something over 30,000 square miles of area less than the State of Texas. It will be more compact than Texas—I have heard a Texan complain of the size of that State—and it is so situated with those great trunk lines of railway running across it in the northern and southern portions or parts of the Territory where there are settlements, so that the residents can easily assemble at any given point. It is not so difficult for the people of Arizona to-day to go to a place where they may finally locate their capital as it was not very long ago for the people of some of our smaller States to do the same. By the railroad, the telegraph, and the telephone we have annihilated distance. When Arizona was carved out of New Mexico—of which it had been a part for some fifteen or sixteen years—conditions were different. There were no railroads in that country and none were expected. That was in 1863. When there was a need or desire to cross from one section to the other, it took some ten or twelve days. Therefore, on account of its being too far from settlements in that part where Arizona now is to the then capital, Santa Fe, it was deemed wise, for the time being at least, to make two Territories. Had the same conditions existed then that exist now, I do not believe two Territories would have been made or considered.

Considering the question of population, the gentleman from Mississippi asks, if I understood him correctly, if we should not take into consideration future prospects, as well as the past. Certainly we should, and that has been done in admitting States in the past. New Mexico was settled before the landing at Jamestown. They will show you a church in Santa Fe built before any Englishman had settled on this continent. It developed very slowly until these railroads were constructed, because they had to go to St. Joe, Mo., I think a distance of some 1,500 miles, to have any intercourse with what you might call the outside world. For the last decade, however, and more there have been railroads in that country. Mining has been developed. Access has been comparatively easy. Does the gentleman know exactly what has been the growth in those two Territories in the last ten years, according to the census, under the most favorable circumstances? According to the census of 1890 the population of Arizona was 88,243, of which 29,981 were Indians. The population of New Mexico in 1890 was 160,282, and in 1900 195,310. The Indian population in 1900 was 13,144 and in 1890 it was 15,044.

So that we find that the increase in the white population in that decade, with all of these railroads going through there, with the mining developed, was 38,169 in Arizona, according to the census, and the decrease in the Indian population was 3,501. The white population in New Mexico in the meantime increased 30,928, and the Indian population decreased 1,900. Now, any man who has studied the geography of that country, any man who has visited it, knowing as he must that there are energetic people living there, and there are people living there who are worthy of being citizens, must also know that a very large proportion, especially of Arizona, is not only arid, but that it is an arid, rocky desert, which can never, never be brought under cultivation. Hence its increase in population has been slow.

I have no unkind things to say of those Territories or their people, but I have not found the conditions of things as glowing there as some others who have gone there have; neither have I found them as bad as others have reported. On the whole I believe they are fit for statehood. There is, it is true, a large system of irrigation contemplated to irrigate the Salt River Valley. It is, however, yet in its tentative period. I presume that will add to the population. I hope it will largely increase the population, but when you take the population of both of those Territories and add them together, and also add any reasonable future increase, you will find that, taking into consideration the population of our country today and its probable increase, it will be evident that in making one State from these two Territories and assigning them two Representatives, though they were hardly entitled to them, basing it upon the population, we have done all that in fairness could be done.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if he has considered this point, that the southern boundary of the United States, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Gulf of California, has within it only two States—Texas and the proposed State of Arizona? Has the gentleman also considered that extending from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean along the northern boundary of the United States there are four States, and only four? Now, stretching from Iowa across to the Pacific coast there are six. Does the gentleman think that that is fair and just to the southern portion of the United States, and has he further considered that we have the same kind of country stretching from the Gulf of Mexico to the Gulf of California, through the State of Texas and through the proposed State of Arizona, that they have farther north, where there are six States?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I do not understand the question of the gentleman from Texas. I have only a few moments, and I must therefore decline to yield further. I understand the gentleman to say that the northern boundary of this country extending from the Mississippi to the Atlantic has four States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No, to the Pacific; and that has four States, I say.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I do not see what that has to do with this bill, and I must ask the gentleman not to interrupt me further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Again, we are called upon to make four States down there, or three at least, because the gentleman says that the Republican party in its platform has pledged itself to make that number of States.

I take issue with the gentleman on that. The Republican party stands by its platforms. It does not have to change them every four years and ask the charity of oblivion and forgetfulness for something that it would have forgotten—like "sixteen to one." As a party we have nothing of that kind to do. I will read the three planks of the Republican party in three successive platforms—its declarations in reference to this statehood matter—and I will submit to the judgment of this House whether I am right or wrong on this question. In 1892 this was the declaration of the platform of the Republican party:

> We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable day, having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States.

We stand upon that now. [Applause on the Republican side.] In 1896 this was the declaration of the Republican platform:

> We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States. All the Federal officers appointed for the Territories should be selected from bona fide residents thereof, and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as practicable.

In 1900 this was the declaration of the Republican platform:

> We favor home rule for, and the early admission to statehood of, the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

The bill which we propose to pass accomplishes the admission of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahama—New Mexico and Arizona in one State, Oklahoma in another. By the admission of Oklahoma we take into this Union the last part of that splendid empire that we purchased from France one century ago——

Mr. GILBERT. Against the protest of New England.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. The protest of New England I know nothing about. New England may have protested against some things. You gentlemen of the South have protested against others; and we may both have found that we ought not to have protested, as the logic of events very effectually proved. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

At this time, when we are celebrating the centennial of the Louisiana purchase, it seems to me a perfectly proper and good thing to admit what remains of that territory to statehood. Speaking from personal knowledge, I say it is my deliberate judgment that Oklahoma, composed as it ought to be and as it will be of what is now Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, will make one of the most splendid States west of the Mississippi. [Applause on the Republican side.] It has a large, rapidly increasing population, it has a splendid soil, it has mineral wealth, it has everything necessary to make a grand State.

When we come to New Mexico and Arizona, I can not say, as I did of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, that the desire of three-fourths of the people is for single statehood. I am of the opinion that if New Mexico could have its way, and if Arizona could have its way, each would prefer to be a State by itself, each to have two Senators, each to have a capital and all that constitutes two State governments, because they have down in that country a great many able men and a great many able politicians and Senatorial aspirants. But when it comes to this question, which I think the good of the whole country requires to be submitted to the people, when you submit to them the question, Will you unite, will you come into this Union on equal terms with us as one State, or will you stay out? I predict that they will vote to come in.

Mr. Speaker, there are many things I might say, but I will not go into the details of this bill; my time forbids. We have attempted, for the time being, at least, to insist that certain conditions be adopted by the constitutional convention as a part of the State constitution, conditions which we believe will start the States right. Whether it will or will not be in the power of those communities to change those provisions when they become States I do not intend to discuss, for I do not believe they will want to change them. We have provided for proper courts; we have provided for the protection of the Indians; we are endeavoring as soon as we can to provide for the more than 100,000 white children in the Indian Territory that are crying aloud to us for schools in which to get an education and at present have no schools whatever, and with that view we have provided in this bill that in 1906, as soon as the last remnant of these treaties expire, as soon as these tribal relations are dissolved, Oklahoma may, upon the adoption of these conditions, be admitted as a State in the Union, and I know she will adopt them. Let us then give them an opportunity. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on the adoption of the proposed rule.

The previous question was ordered; there being on a division (called for by Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi)—ayes 137, noes 123.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In order to save time we may as well have the yeas and nays at once.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 111, answered "present" 15, not voting 104, as follows:

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. SIBLEY. Then I desire to be recorded as "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14749) to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to enable the people of New Mexico and Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the second reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the second reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that one-half of the time for debate be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that one-half of the time shall be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SPALDING].

[Mr. SPALDING addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to consume some of his time now.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Very well; I will yield one hour to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman from Arizona will consume one hour, perhaps it would be more advisable for us to use, say, fifteen or twenty minutes more before proceeding.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman prefers that, very well.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear one of the Delegates speak before I address myself to the subject.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, so far as this discussion has proceeded it seems that the main question is whether or not these Territories shall be admitted as four States or as two. It is generally conceded, I think, that they are entitled to admission into the Union as States, and I shall confine my remarks mainly to the question as to whether it is wise to create four sovereign States out of these Territories or whether we would better make them into two States. If the gentlemen on the other side of this House proceed on the theory that States are composed simply of area, that square miles and broad acres constitute a State, then it were better, perhaps, that these Territories be made into four States instead of two; but if, as I believe, the proper basis for creating a State is the number and character of the people, then there ought not to be but two States made out of the four Territories. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] asked a question when he was on the floor as to whether or not this Congress was legislating for the immediate present or whether it was legislating for the future.

I submit that this Congress now is legislating for the future. It is legislating for all time to come. It is therefore important that we consider the future possibilities of these States. If the natural resources of that part of our domain will justify a great population, then New Mexico and Arizona have sufficient area for two States. Population will always be limited by the opportunities. But I submit to the gentlemen on the other side of the House that it is absolutely impossible for Arizona and New Mexico ever to have a dense population. They will never have any great centers of commerce. They will never have any great cities through which commerce from the East to the West will pass. The only cities that can possibly grow up in these Territories will be simply such as are made by agricultural communities and such as are supported by agricultural communities. This is not newly settled territory. The white man entered there and founded settlements more than three centuries ago.

All of the States of the Union have been settled, organized, and developed since the first white settlements there. Yet there are but four cities that by the last census contain more than 5,000 people. Tucson has a population of 7,000, Albuquerque a population of 6,000, and then comes Phoenix and Santa Fe with 5,000 each. There is nothing beyond Arizona. There is nobody to whom to carry the commerce of the North and East through these Territories. There is no trade, no commerce, no production beyond Arizona that must come through these Territories to the East and North, and therefore it is impossible that any great cities should ever grow up in those Territories. The population will be along the streams. The permanent population will be sustained mainly by the country and on the land that it is possible to irrigate, and there can never be any great scope of that country subject to irrigation, though enough, perhaps, to sustain a State. It has been said by the gentlemen representing those two Territories here in the House that there are 20,000,000 of acres that can and will some time be irrigated. This, then, will be the limit of agricultural development. When this limit is reached this new State of Arizona will have less than one-seventh of its area devoted to agriculture. Twenty million acres is but little more than one-half the area of Illinois. It is but little more than one-half the area of Iowa.

Its mineral resources are valuable, but that of itself can not constitute a State. The population drawn to this new State by reason of its mineral resources will be largely transient. It will build a city to-day and to-morrow will be gone. The mining population will not be a permanent factor in the future growth and development of the State.

The enduring civilization of this new State will depend on its agriculture, and that is dependent wholly upon the success of irrigation. Six-sevenths of the State can never be reached by irrigation, so that it can not be hoped for the new State that it will ever contain a dense population.

There are almost 1,000,000 persons now to each United States Senator. The new State must have 2,000,000 people before it reaches the average of the States. With a population of only 318,000 in 1900, it must be many years, if ever, before it will average with the other States of the Union.

This new State now has 1½ persons to the square mile. New York has 146 persons to the square mile; Illinois has 85, and Iowa has 40 persons to the square mile. The entire nation has 26.11 persons to the square mile, and in all reasonable probability the time will never come when Arizona will have a population to equal this average density of population of the whole nation. Then, if it does, the other States will have increased far beyond their present population, so that this State will still be lacking much to entitle it to the representation which this bill gives it in the Senate, if computed on the basis of population.

Of course representation in the Senate is not based on population. It is the single exception, so far as I know, among all our institutions, State and national, where the number of people is not the basis of representation. The membership of this House is apportioned equally among the people. Representation in the State legislatures of every State in the Union is according to population. County and city government everywhere is so formed as to give to each person an equal voice and equal influence in affairs. That is the true principle of all representative government, and it is the rule in all our republican institutions except the United States Senate.

This necessarily creates inequality of representation in the Senate. But this House has it in its power now to mitigate the evil of this inequality to a small extent. By creating one State we give the people of this section two Senators instead of four. I submit the question: Is it wise or just to give to that Territory, with 318,000 people, four Senators, while New York, with more than 7,000,000 people, has but two? Pennsylvania, with more than 6,000,000, and Illinois, with nearly 5,000,000, together have a representation in the United States Senate of four members. On what ground can gentlemen justify an equal representation in that body for Arizona and New Mexico, which together have a population of only 318,000? The present situation does not justify it, and the possibility of the future can not.

Representation in government must be based on population and not on land. It must be based on humanity and not on space; otherwise our whole system might degenerate into a rule of the minority. We are here to legislate for men and women and not for square miles or acres. We are here to legislate for the whole people and not for any section of our common country. This claim that square miles constitute a State is a miserable makeshift, and its fallacy ought to be corrected so far as possible. The authors of this bill think that by a union of Arizona and New Mexico into one State and Oklahoma and Indian Territory into one State they have to a slight extent remedied the evil.

Gentlemen say that in making these Territories into two States instead of four is a discrimination against the West and in favor of the East; that the Atlantic seacoast has a greater representation in the Senate than the Pacific seacoast; that it gives to one section more power than to another in the citadel of Government. I believe that if the Congress of the United States loses sight of the people and keeps in view the interest of one section, regardless of population, then there is a danger of discrimination. If there is discrimination in this bill it is certainly in favor of the West. The States on the Atlantic coast are represented by 28 Senators, and these 28 Senators represent 28,000,000 of people. The Pacific coast is represented by six Senators, and these six Senators represent two and one-half millions of people.

I repeat, it is not a question of sectionalism, nor is it a question of area, nor is it a question of miles of seacoast, but it is purely a question of humanity and of equal rights, so far as possible, to every man in the land.

It is argued here, and was argued before the committee, that the people of Arizona and New Mexico do not want to be joined into a single State. It is said that Congress has no right to compel these two Territories, against the will of their people, to join in one State government. It is not the purpose of Congress and it is not the purpose of this bill to compel them to unite into one State. This bill simply gives to the people of these two Territories the privilege and opportunity of coming into the Union as a State if they desire to do so. Congress has the unquestionable right to prescribe the conditions, just as it has prescribed the conditions for the admission of every State since the formation of the Constitution, and if the people desire statehood they can have it by complying with the conditions prescribed.

But I insist that the people of these Territories are not alone concerned in the question as to whether they will be admitted as one State or two. It is a question that affects every citizen of the United States, and it affects them equally with the citizens of these two Territories. It all reverts to a question of equal representation, and the people of my State and the people of every State are interested in giving to the people of these two Territories just and equal representation and no more. The power that is given this new State in the Senate must come from the power which all the other States now have. In the degree that the influence of the citizens of Arizona is increased in the Senate, in the same degree the influence of the citizens elsewhere is diminished.

What I have said about the conditions and possibilities in these two Territories is not said for the purpose of minimizing their importance or detracting from their real merit, nor is it said to derogate their rights, but it is a plain practical situation which must be taken into account in arriving at the merits of this question.

I believe that the people of these two Territories are entitled to statehood. They are an enlightened, intelligent, and Christian people. They are qualified for statehood as well as the people of the States from which they came. They are the sturdy, honest pioneers of a country new in its development, and State government will give them an opportunity to grow, and to improve their local conditions.

Nothing need be said with reference to the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. Their fitness and their right to statehood can not be questioned. In my judgment, based on my information as a member of the Committee on Territories, the people of these two Territories are favorable to a union in one State. The statement that this bill abrogates the treaties between the Government and Indians is a mistake. These treaties were with Indian tribes, and these tribes have been dissolved. Tribal relations have been abandoned voluntarily. Individual Indians have agreed to take their lands in severalty, and to absolve their allegiance to tribes, and to stand as common citizens before the law of the land.

There are no treaties in conflict with the purposes of this bill. It confers upon the Indians all the blessings that it confers upon the white people of that Territory. It will make a splendid State, containing now more than a million and a quarter of inhabitants, and from the start must rank among the leading States of the West.

I hope this bill will pass. It takes into the Union as a State the last foot of our nation's contiguous territory, solidifying the American nation into a union of States, and giving to every citizen within its boundaries all the rights and privileges of a citizen of the Republic. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to incorporate in the RECORD the report of the minority of the committee.

There was no objection.

The minority report is as follows:

The minority of the Committee on the Territories do not agree with the conclusion of the majority, and dissent from the provisions of the bill presented by them in its material details and the general policy of the consolidation of the four Territories involved into two States. On the question of fact as to the ability of the four Territories to maintain separate and distinct organization and statehood we present separately the facts as to the condition, population, and resources of each Territory:

ARIZONA.

Area, 113,929 square miles, or 72,792,500 square acres.

Its vast area is distributed as follows: 42,000,000 acres grazing land; 30,000,000 acres mineral land, the grazing and mineral lands blending; 10,000,000 acres agricultural land. One million acres of this agricultural land has already been reclaimed and 9,000,000 acres more may be.

The grazing belt extends from the line of New Mexico on the east to the timber belt 140 miles west. The timber belt is a vast area of great pine forests containing nearly 10,000 square miles of as fine timber as there is in the world.

MINERAL LANDS.

The mineral belt of this Territory is one of the largest in the world. It reaches from Nevada and Utah in the northwest, passing diagonally through the Territory into the State of Sonora, Mexico, in the southeast, a distance in length of 437 miles by about 100 miles in width. There are now 1,840 patented mines in operation in said Territory, and thousands of mining claims are being operated and developed which are not patented. Out of these mines is taken annually, in round numbers, $43,000,000, and the development of this great mineral belt is very fast growing. The output of these mines consists of the precious metals—gold and silver—and copper, and the testimony is that this great mineral belt is scarcely yet prospected, notwithstanding that it takes out $43,000,000 per year.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS.

The great portion of the agricultural lands lie south of the mineral belt just referred to, and are known as the Salt, Gila, and Colorado River valleys. Agriculture there is maintained by irrigation, and they have, all told, over 800 miles of irrigating canals and laterals for that use. In the Salt River Valley alone there are 152,000 acres in cultivation by means of irrigation. The receipts for the products sold last year are given below:

Hay	$1,200,000
Fruits	80,000
Stock fattened and sold from pastures and hay not otherwise sold.	1,500,000
Honey	80,000
Butter and cheese	76,000
Poultry and eggs	50,000
Total	2,906,000

In the Graham Valley on the Upper Gila about 40 per cent of that amount was produced. The agricultural products of the balance of the agricultural portion of the Territory are not known, but they are vast.

PRODUCTIVE POWER OF THE SOIL.

The soil of this agricultural country is very deep and has wonderful productive power. They produce all the tropical fruits, as well as cereals, cantaloupes, alfalfa, hay, etc. It has been shown that the soil yields an annual return per acre, as follows: Almonds, $75 to $150 net; cantaloupes, from $75 to $110 net; alfalfa, from $36 to $53 net, and so on, showing the productive power of the soil to be wonderfully great.

The Salt River and Gila valleys converge and come together and have a length of about 368 miles in extent, making an area of country susceptible of reclamation and cultivation greater than the valley of the Nile.

PRODUCTION OF LUMBER.

This is a great industry in Arizona. There are three great lumber companies there whose plants will each cut 200,000 feet of lumber per day. Their returns are about 200,000,000 feet annually.

RAILROAD FACILITIES.

There are over 1,400 miles of railroads in the Territory and others fast building.

There are two great trunk lines passing through Arizona from east to west. The Santa Fe Pacific through the northern portion and the Southern Pacific through the southern part. The Santa Fe, Prescott and Phoenix runs north and south, connecting with the Maricopa and Phoenix Railroad, which connects with the Southern Pacific. There are feeder lines of railroad branching out in all directions and aiding in the development of the mineral section. The El Paso and Southwestern, owned by Phelps-Dodge & Co., is built in the southeastern part of the Territory, reaching from the grazing land in the south to the great mines at Bisbee and other places. The Arizona and New Mexico is another eastern railroad, built by a Scotch corporation for the purpose of handling the copper in the Clifton and Morenci country and the interstate commerce passing into Mexico from that line. The United Verde and Pacific in the north, connecting the Black Hills mineral section with the Santa Fe, Prescott and Phoenix, is another system for developing the heavy mineral country. All of these railroads are in a prosperous condition and their business increasing about 33 per cent annually, and that is about the per cent of their annual increase for the last five years.

TAXABLE PROPERTY.

The railroad property cost not less than $60,000,000, and its assessed valuation is $6,000,000.

Mines and realty, value more than $200,000,000; taxed, improvements and all, $2,724,238. So the taxable property is assessed at $43,880,041 when it is really worth $400,000,000.

POPULATION.

The census gives Arizona 122,921. As given by counties last fall it was 178,600, and the immense increase to-day has no doubt reached the 200,000 limit. The population is almost entirely American, not 700 of it having been born in Mexico, and only about 4,400, all told, of the population were born in foreign countries. It is an intelligent population. Outside of 27,500 Indians, not taxed, who belong to the illiterate class, there is not 1 per cent of the population illiterate. All do their own reading and writing in the transaction of their affairs.

LAW AND SCHOOLS.

Law.—The Territory of Arizona has as fine a code of laws as any of the older sections of the Union, and they are as well enforced as anywhere in the land. Therefore life and property rights are as well protected there as anywhere from the Atlantic coast to the Rocky Mountains. She has her own capitol and other public buildings—up-to-date and new, paid for by herself—and is thus ready prepared for housekeeping as a State as well as any State in the Union.

School facilities.—Arizona has its own university, with mining and agricultural schools connected therewith. Normal schools 2; 10 high schools; 278 common schools.

The number of pupils from 6 to 21 years attending public schools are 25,951; from 8 to 14 years in other schools, 13,311.

SCHOOL PROPERTY AND VALUE.

Common school buildings and furniture	$727,182
Value of apparatus	21,802
Value of school libraries	9,144

Number of male teachers, 115; female, 359.

Average wages paid males, $80.33 per month; females, $67.53 per month.

The school fund collected for 1903	$515,633.49
Amount expended, 1903	415,243.15
Balance cash on hand for the present year	100,390.04

POSTAL RECEIPTS.

From the first and second class offices alone, 1903, $138,302—16 per cent more than any previous year.

NEW MEXICO.

From official sources we find the Territory of New Mexico to have:

Area, 122,469 square miles.

This does not include the production by individual placer miners or by prospectors not mining in a systematic manner. In addition, New Mexico produced a vast quantity of coal, iron, turquoise, gypsum, building material, and a number of other useful minerals and precious stones. The Colorado Fuel and Iron Company during the fiscal year hauled 138,152 long tons of iron ore out of New Mexico. OKLAHOMA.

AREA.

The area of Oklahoma is 39,030 square miles.

POPULATION.

The population of Oklahoma in 1890 was 61,834. In 1900 it was 398,331, and by the last estimate of the report of the governor of Oklahoma for 1903 it was 650,000, and allowing a reasonable increase would now be about 725,000 people.

RESOURCES.

The governor of Oklahoma in his annual report of 1893 estimated the taxable property in Oklahoma at $400,000,000.

The banking facilities of Oklahoma consisted of 79 national banks and 247 Territorial banks, with deposits on the 1st day of January, 1904, of $22,456,510.

There are 250 weekly newspapers, 28 daily papers, and a number of monthly and semimonthly publications, representing every phase of political, social, religious, educational, and industrial life.

Oklahoma has 2,192 district schoolhouses, and 180,000 children enrolled. Nearly 3,000 students are attending the university, agricultural and mechanical college, and normal schools.

There are over 3,000 miles of railroad, penetrating all of the 26 counties in the Territory and giving close connection with the great trunk lines of the surrounding States. More miles of railroad were constructed in Oklahoma last year than in any State or Territory.

The rolling prairie makes an easy grade and cheap construction of railroad lines. Many other roads are projected and under construction, and it can safely be said that that section will speedily have very highly developed transportation facilities.

In Oklahoma are 280 grain elevators and 66 flouring mills, marketing over 10,000 barrels of flour per day. There are 232 cotton gins, over 1,000,000 live stock. Over 35,000 carloads of products were shipped out of the Territory and 27,000 carloads of freight shipped in.

Oklahoma has a splendid climate, good water, a health-giving section, and its development has been the astonishment of the West. It is capable of sustaining a population as dense as any part of the United States.

By area, by population, by resources, and by virtue of the tremendous development to be expected of the immediate future of Oklahoma, it is entitled to statehood—a right which should not be withheld on any pretext whatever.

Certainly there is no reason why Oklahoma should be denied statehood in order to compel the formation of one State out of Indian Territory and Oklahoma. The representative of Oklahoma in Congress has vigorously demanded the rights of that magnificent country. No good reason exists for denying the right of statehood to the people of Oklahoma, and none such has been offered.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

AREA.

The area of Indian Territory, excluding water areas, is 31,000 square miles of actual land surface.

POPULATION.

The population of Indian Territory for 1890 was	180,182
The population for 1900 was	392,060

an average increase per annum of 21.76 per cent. At this rate of annual increase the population of Indian Territory in 1901 was 467,372; for 1902, 544,509; for 1903, 657,855, and will be for 1904, 796,004.

The rate of increase has been greater since 1900 than before.

POST-OFFICES.

The Presidential post-offices number 45; gross receipts for year ending September 30, 1903, $220,000. There are 630 fourth-class post-offices, making a total of 675, which is greater than the number of post-offices in one-third of the States of the Union. There have been established since the census of 1900 250 new post-offices.

BANKS.

The last report of the Comptroller of the Currency gives the number of national banks in Indian Territory at 95. There were organized in Indian Territory, from March 14, 1900, to October 31, 1903, in two years and seven months, 75 national banks. During the same period there were organized in Maine, 5; New Hampshire, 3; Vermont, 1; Massachusetts, 6; Rhode Island, 1; Connecticut, 3; or a total of 19, thus exhibiting the remarkable fact that Indian Territory established five times as many national banks as all of the States of New England combined.

RAILROADS.

By the census of 1900 there were over 2,500 miles of railroad and over a thousand miles have been constructed since the census was taken. The following was the mileage by the census of 1900:

St. Louis and San Francisco Company	600
Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad	275
Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company	200
Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, and St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern	190
Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad	130
Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe	120
Kansas, Oklahoma Central and Southwestern Railroad	80
Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad	20

There are thousands of miles of telegraph and telephone lines, local and long distance. There are 60 fire, life, accident, and other insurance companies over which there is no official supervision, and who contribute nothing in taxes.

NEWSPAPERS.

There are 200 newspapers, including 20 dailies, 175 weeklies, and 5 monthlies.

The number of persons to the family, by the census of 1900, in Indian Territory was greater than in any State or Territory in the Union except Texas and North Carolina, and is therefore not subject to the charge of the great Republican leader of "race suicide."

The percentage of native white of native parents in Indian Territory is only exceeded by West Virginia, Oklahoma, Kentucky, Indiana, and New Mexico.

The percentage of native white male population of militia age is only exceeded by West Virginia and Oklahoma.

The percentage of foreign born is the least in the United States, except North Carolina.

The per cent engaged in agriculture is only exceeded by three States—Mississippi, Oklahoma, and Arkansas.

GENERAL RESOURCES.

The available farm lands in Indian Territory would probably reach 15,000,000 acres, of which probably 15 or 20 per cent is under cultivation. Probably three-fourths of the land of Indian Territory are woodlands. There is probably 2,000,000 acres of commercial pine lands and a large quantity of hardwood timber, including various varieties of oak, ash, hickory, etc. The larger part of the woodland is of no commercial value, but suitable for fuel and fencing. The farm animals are worth probably $55,000,000; other farm products about $35,000,000. There were about 250,000 bales of cotton produced in 1902 and nearly 35,000,000 bushels of corn. The lands of Indian Territory at a fair estimate are worth not less than $500,000,000. There are probably 2,000,000 acres of land bearing coal in commercial quantity. There are very large deposits of asphalt.

Petroleum of a good quality, worth from $1.10 to $1.60 a barrel, has been discovered over an area 100 miles long by 40 miles wide, with splendid commercial natural gas in the same area. A large number of wells have been sunk at Bartlesville, at Tulsa, at Redfork, at Muscogee, and at numerous other points between Muscogee and the Kansas line. The values which this field is capable of producing is estimated by a competent man to be enormous.

SCHOOLS.

There is no school system for the people of Indian Territory except the Indian schools. There are about 85,000 Indian citizens, all of whom are now citizens of the United States; 22,000 of these are full-blood Indians, or may be properly classed as such. There are probably 20,000 negroes, 5,000 whites, and the remainder, 38,000, are Indian crossed on white to an extent that they are not distinguishable from white. These are the only people who have proper school privileges, except such limited opportunities as the town afford where they have the right of self-taxation.

MANUFACTURERS.

The number of manufacturers in 1890 was only 20; the number of manufacturers in 1900 was 789, a remarkable increase of 3,800 per cent, and the increase during the past three years has been at a greatly increased ratio.

In view of these facts, it can not reasonably be contended that each of the four Territories is not now entitled to statehood by reason of sufficiency of area, population, and resources. The resources of each are more than sufficient to support a State government, and much greater than those of a majority of the States now in the Union at the time of their admission, and greater than many of them now.

The area of each of these Territories is greater than that of many of the States, and that of Arizona and New Mexico is greater than any of them except five.

Each Territory has now a greater population than four-fifths of the States when admitted, as is shown by the following statistics:

State.	Date of admission.	Population.

The United States, in order to induce the Five Civilized Indian Tribes to sell their lands east of the Mississippi River and remove to the land now embracing the Indian Territory, entered into a number of treaties with the Five Civilized Tribes, in which the United States bound themselves with great formality, and upon a formal vote of the Senate of the United States, with the approval of the President, contracting that they would not at any future time establish over the Indians of Indian Territory any State or Territorial government without their consent, as follows:

"CHEROKEES.

"ART. 5. The United States hereby covenants and agrees that the lands ceded to the Cherokee Nation in the foregoing article shall in no future time, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory. (Rev. Ind. Treaties, p. 69.)"

Similar treaties with the other four tribes were also made.

Again:

"The United States agrees to maintain strict laws in the Seminole country against the introduction, sale, barter, or giving away of intoxicants of any kind or quality."

Similar agreements were made with the other four tribes.

In this connection the minority feel constrained to point out that no effort whatsoever has been made to secure the consent of the Five Civilized Tribes to the union of Oklahoma with the Indian Territory into one State, which must be done unless it be determined to ignore all treaty obligations and agreements with these Indians, and reverse the policy of the Government in its treatment of them for nearly a hundred years.

If the policy advanced by the majority for making two States out of the four Territories were accepted, the bill itself is objectionable because of the inequality and injustice in representation at the constitutional convention. By the provisions of the bill Oklahoma is given 60 delegates and Indian Territory only 50. The census of 1900 gives the population of Oklahoma 398,331. The population of Indian Territory, according to the same census, was 392,060. There has been a large increase in population in each Territory since that time, but it is doubtful as to which has had the greater increase.

The hearings indicated that the present population is purely conjectural, ranging in estimate in each from 500,000 to 800,000 inhabitants. Every advocate of joint statehood from either Territory favored the proposition that the Territories should be admitted with equal rights and privileges. No valid excuse can be offered for giving such extraordinary advantages to Oklahoma. The representation, in our judgment, should be equal; but if not equal, Indian Territory should have at least 54 of the 110 delegates.

In Arizona and New Mexico a similar condition is presented by the bill. Arizona is given 40 delegates and New Mexico 70, when, from any standpoint, Arizona should have much larger representation in the convention. Another objection to the bill as it is framed is in the election management provided for Indian Territory. Authority is given to Federal officials to fix the various districts which are to select delegates to the constitutional convention and then to define the election precincts and appoint the judges who are to hold the elections. Returns are made to these Federal officials to be canvassed, and their action is final.

There is nowhere any provision for any minority representation, excepting only that one of the judges at each election precinct must belong to a different political party from the others. In our judgment, nonpartisan commissions should have charge of the elections, and the districts should be proportioned among the various recording districts as nearly according to the population as may be.

There should be no restriction on either of the new States with reference to their capitals, because the State when admitted is to be admitted upon the same terms and enjoy the same privileges as any other State.

Other objections may be urged to the bill, which we do not embody in this report.

We can not understand how the majority can disregard their party obligations and violate the specific pledges of their national platform on the question of statehood. The Republican party in 1896 had this plank in its platform:

"We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard for the interest of the people of the Territories and of the United States."

The same party in 1900 had this declaration:

"We favor home rule for and the early admission to statehood of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma."

These pledges are plainly violated in the failure to report a bill in favor of statehood for each of these Territories. Such a bill passed the House of Representatives in the last Congress, and each of them certainly has a much stronger claim for recognition now than it had in 1902, when that statehood bill passed. The Delegate from Arizona, near the beginning of this session, presented a bill for the admission of Arizona as a State, the Delegate from New Mexico presented a similar bill for the admission of New Mexico, and the Delegate from Oklahoma likewise presented a bill asking for the admission of Oklahoma to statehood, and in the hearings before the committee each of them insisted that the bill presented by him reflected the wishes of his people and insisted upon a favorable report thereon.

The people of Arizona and New Mexico especially have repudiated the action of the committee in trying to make joint statehood for their Territories. Why should the Committee on the Territories change its base with reference to this matter? What excuse can be given to the country for this utter disregard of party pledges and failure to consider the wishes of the people?

Under this bill Arizona, being numerically the weaker, could be forced into a union with New Mexico, even though every vote in Arizona were cast against the consolidation, and this applies with equal force to the proposed union of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. The stronger of the two Territories can mercilessly coerce the other into union.

It has long been a settled doctrine of American polity, founded in wisdom and justice, that a Territory of the Union is, upon organization, clothed with the inchoate right of ultimate statehood—a right to be exercised in the discretion of Congress when the Territory is capable, by reason of its resources and population, to assume the duties and obligations of a free State.

The denial of this right, the reversal of this policy by an arbitrary exercise of power by Congress in forcing an unnatural union of Territories against the will of their people, the forcible union of peoples distinct in customs, habits, manners, and religion, is ultraradical and revolutionary. It is a pitiful illustration of the degradation to which a party may fall when violating, for party purposes, its plighted faith made to the people in the national platform.

Should the Republican party pass this bill, wicked as it is in the denial of equal rights in representation and partisan in all of its material details, it will but afford another indecent example of the suppression of individual, Territorial, and national rights to subserve partisan ends. Even more than that, it is the surrender of the power that four sovereign States would exercise in the Union if constitutional methods were orderly followed in the admission of States. It is the last effort to minimize the influence of the West and Southwest in the citadel of Federal power, the United States Senate.

We are of the opinion that it will ultimately be better for the Union that the Territories opposed to consolidation shall be denied statehood under the theory of this bill indefinitely than that the conditions that will be forced by an unnatural union should exist.

JOHN A. MOON.
JAMES T. LLOYD.
JAMES M. ROBINSON.
JOHN R. THAYER.
GORDON RUSSELL.
CHAS. C. REID.
J. F. WILSON,
Delegate from Arizona.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I now yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. WILSON] one hour, or so much thereof as he may desire.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, it is always embarrassing to me to undertake to argue a case against time. It is more embarrassing to undertake to meet predictions, suggestions, and mere assertions substituted by an opponent for facts.

I have listened to the arguments offered on the other side to sustain the majority report in favor of this bill, yet I must say that these suggestions and predictions and statements that have been offered instead of facts I have listened to with much astonishment. It only confirms me in a view which I have heretofore been inclined to adopt—that the less a man knows about the West the more he talks about it when he is away from there. [Laughter.]

I presume such arguments are presented in lieu of fact because the facts are not at hand.

In the limited time I have I shall attempt to present a historical statement of facts to sustain the assertions that I shall make—facts that are of record and have been strung out over the course of the nation's action for more than a hundred years. When these facts are known, when they have been seen and studied, no fair-minded man, be he layman or Congressman or anything else, can help but conclude that this course of uniting these Territories against their will is ultraradical—revolutionary in legislation and policy. Not only these, but it is downright rebellion against the platform pledges the Republican party in convention made to these Territories and to the country in 1900. I say we will establish these facts.

In the beginning there were thirteen colonies that obtained independence from Great Britain. They were organized into thirteen States. Their population at the time of admission was as follows:

Connecticut	237,946
Delaware	59,096
Georgia	82,548
Maryland	319,728
Massachusetts	378,787
New Hampshire	141,885
New Jersey	184,139
New York	340,120
North Carolina	393,751
Pennsylvania	434,373
Rhode Island	68,825
South Carolina	24,073
Virginia	747,610

These were the populations of the original parent States which organized the Government into a family of States called the United States of America. They formed a Constitution. They conferred upon the Congress of the United States, after the departments had been established, the power to create States out of territory belonging to the United States. That was simply power conferred. No manner of its enforcement was placed in the Constitution, only a power was given to the legislative department of the Government to create, and to them was left the power to put in motion by legislative action the manner of such creation. Therefore, the colonies in Congress assembled, before the Constitution was made, did provide a rule of action by means of which States might be created and the minimum limit of a State population was fixed. I give that in exact language. I now have reference to the ordinance of 1787. Mark you, after the power was conferred by the Constitution, by rule of action by means of which States were to be created, Congress ordained as follows:

When any of the said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein such State shall be admitted, by its Delegates, into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government.

This, I say, gave the Territories the absolute right of admission. This is the only law in force that would ripen Territorial government into statehood, the power being conferred upon Congress to do it. That is the rule of action by means of which it was to be done. A further provision was made:

And so far as it can be consistent with the general interests of the confederacy, such admission shall be allowed at an earlier time, and when there may be a less number of free inhabitants in the States than 60,000.

Sixty thousand free inhabitants gave the right of admission. Congress had the discretion to admit them earlier. That was the only act ever enacted by the Congress of the United States, before or after the Constitution, providing for the admission of Territories into States.

At that time the Government had ceded to it by the States al of that land lying east of the Mississippi River and west of the Ohio, known as the "Northwest Territory." It was agreed and understood that this Territory should be admitted into States, not less than three nor more than five, and this was the rule by which it was to be done. That is the ordinance of 1787. A little more than fourteen months later the Constitution was formed. By act of Congress under the Constitution this ordinance was extended over all of that territory lying to the south of the original States and down the Mississippi. This then was made the rule of action applying to that. Thereafter we acquired other territory. In 1803 the Louisiana purchase was obtained from France. In 1819 the Floridas were obtained from Spain. In 1848 all of that country west of the Rocky Mountains was obtained from Mexico. In every one of these treaty provisions were made for the admission of the Territories then, and thereafter to be, inhabited, as States. I will give you what that is. Now, for that country in all of this territory lying east of the Rocky Mountains and west of the Mississippi, all of that obtained from France, part of it populated and part of it expected to be, a provision was made for cutting that up into Territories and admitting it into States, and this provision was made by solemn treaty, which is the highest law of the land:

The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and admitted, as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution.

That was a provision made for the protection and admission of the people inhabiting that territory which was obtained from France in 1803. The obligation has been faithfully carried out, and twelve great States were made out of the ceded territory.

Later on, in 1819, the Floridas were obtained from Spain, and for the admission of those people into the United States this provision was made by treaty:

The inhabitants of the territory which His Catholic Majesty cedes to the United States by this treaty shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States as soon as may be consistent with the principles of the Federal Constitution, and admitted to the enjoyment of all the privileges, rights, and immunities of the citizens of the United States.

That obligation was also strictly observed by its early enforcement by this Government.

Time passed on, national disputes arose, the Mexican war came and went, the treaty of 1848 was framed with reference to the admission of all that territory which we are now considering, or a part of it, known as the "Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo." This is the provision made there by solemn treaty:

The Mexicans who, in the Territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted, at the proper time, to be judged of by the Congress of the United States, to the enjoyment of all of the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution.

These are the only laws that were ever passed and contracted for the admission of Federal territory of American citizens into the Union. Now, Congress having the power to create States, they have enacted a rule of action by means of which it shall be done for all territory not obtained by treaty. This Government has contracted with the contracting powers from which we obtained ceded territory how they should bring in the people in the territory ceded to the Federal Government. In every instance it was to be according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, and as early as possible according to those principles. The question is, What are these principles? Necessarily it can not be denied by any lawyer who ever studied it that one of the principles of the Federal Constitution is the due enforcement of Federal law. The power is a vested power in the Federal Departments of the Government (for it can not be done otherwise) for its due enforcement. The ordinance of 1787 is the only enacted law providing a direct rule of action for the admission of Territories.

Now, I say, that is the basis upon which we start. The number of inhabitants of the original States ran from 24,000 to 741,000 and gave what was understood by the fathers of this country as the legal definition of a State. Under that ordinance they believed that a Territory that should be settled by people when it had a population of 60,000 free inhabitants should as a right be admitted. Be admitted how? To the enjoyment of all the liberties, etc., of all the original States; on the same footing, with the enjoyment of all the rights of the original States. Now, that was the emphatic provision of that clause. Permit me to comment at this point on what was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] this morning; saying that this bill is not revolutionary, that this bill is not revolutionary because the fathers intended that the equal enjoyment, etc., of Senatorial representation. etc., was intended to remain, rest in, belong to the original States and none other.

Now, I say, according to this law, ever since its enactment—and it is yet unrepealed—and according to the practice and policy of this country for more than a hundred years, it seems to me that any lawyer who is not blind can not read this law without observing that they—the Territories—were to be admitted upon the same footing, with all the rights and all the privileges of the original States; that we should come in upon the same basis and stand upon the same platform, and under the same principles, and live under the same Constitution, and breathe the same national air that the original States did. The Government has so construed it from that time up to this good hour. No other effort was ever made but to carry out that principle and live upon this line from the admission of Vermont in 1791 to the admission of Utah in 1896. The same policy has been carried out that was enacted even with the ceded territory, even to the admission of California.

Now, in order to establish that fact, sir, let us go and see what is the history on that particular line.

Mr. Speaker, I stated at the beginning that this is revolutionary. It is a revolution against a national policy. It is a revolution against the law for the admission of States. It is a revolution against American right. The policy has been to make smaller States because of the growth of large ones. On March 4, 1791, when Vermont belonged to New York, thinking that the whole State was too large, desired to be made into a separate State. New York consented and the National Congress admitted it, and it has been a State ever since. It came in with 85,425 people. Kentucky came in three years later with 73,627; Tennessee, in 1796, with 60,000; Ohio, in November, 1803, with 42,366. Ohio at that time had not the right of admission, but Congress had the discretion to admit her and Congress did. No mistake was made over the case of Ohio, which grew to be a great State. Louisiana was admitted April 12, 1812, with 76,000 people. Indiana was admitted on December 11, 1816, with 24,530. Indiana belonged to the Northwest Territory. She came under that rule of action prescribed by Congress; she was admitted by the discretion of Congress before she had the right to demand it, a State just being carved out of the wilderness, a Territory without a bank or school within her dominion was made a State, and no mistake was made. How can such a case be compared to ours now? The question itself furnishes its own emphatic answer.

Mississippi was admitted December 11, 1816. She had 75,448 population. Now, Mississippi was part of the territory over which the ordinance of 1787 had been extended in 1791. Mississippi at that time, as we all know, included all of that territory now included in the States of Alabama and Mississippi. The States of Alabama and Mississippi to-day together will not equal one of these Territories represented by myself and the gentleman from New Mexico. You can lay the whole bosom of one of these Territories over both and hide them all. But then the Congress of the United States said that the admission of that great territory into one State would be monstrous—it was too large—therefore it was divided. The west side was made into the State of Mississippi and the east side was left as the Territory of Alabama. That was but following the fixed national policy. They were following up the policy that was made when Vermont was cut away from the State of New York and made a State because it was too large, and coming down to the State of Mississippi, where that State as a Territory applied for admission as a whole, it was chopped in two by the will of Congress because it was also too large, and the national policy was fixed.

The same thing is followed up in the admission of other States. Therefore, I say the action here is a change. It is a revolutionary policy and it is wrong, and therefore this bill should be defeated upon that ground. Alabama came in later, in 1817, with 127,000 people. Maine came in. Way up in the northeast corner of the continent there is the State of Maine. It belonged to Massachusetts. All of New England there, you see, looks almost like the boot of a prospector, with some injuries inflicted at the top, and it was too large, and Maine was cut off and made a State, leaving Massachusetts still a great State. That was still carrying out the national policy, making small States out of great Territories, and it was followed down to this good hour until now revolution begins. Say it is not revolutionary? Who can deny it? Say that it does not revolutionize the national policy? No one can deny. Well, Missouri came in later, in 1821, with 66,000 people. Arkansas came in later, with 52,000 people. Michigan came in with but 58,000 people. It had 300,000 in the census which followed later. Florida was admitted with 72,000. Iowa was admitted with but 61,000 and with only $23,000,000 of taxable property, and so on down until there were thirty-two States admitted from the admission of Vermont, in 1791, to the admission of Utah, in 1896. Here I append a list of States admitted, with dates and populations:

Out of thirty-two States that have been admitted into this Union, only five of the whole of them have ever been admitted with more people than the Territory of Arizona has to-day. There are only two of them with more people than the Territory of New Mexico, and not one of them had the people that the Territory of Oklahoma has or that the Indian Territory has; and always, when a Territory was to be admitted with great breadth and great scope, from Vermont, West Virginia, Mississippi, on to the division of the Dakotas, the policy has always been to make small States that would be compact, easily governed, and economically maintained. That was the policy that endured for one hundred and seventeen years without a break, without interruption, without division. But now, when it comes down to the admission of these Territories, at the last hour we find objections made, and the objection is based upon Senatorial representation. To a student of Story on the Constitution, to him who has studied the proceedings and debates in the Constitutional Convention when forming the Federal Constitution, it does seem, unless I am extremely biased, and I may be—it does seem shocking to hear such an argument made.

When this Government was being formed, after the smoke of Revolutionary battle had passed from the field, a government that should be safe and enduring forever was being framed—a government of checks and balances, of equal coordinate powers; and when the legislative department was reached two branches were considered, a Senate, reflecting something like the House of Lords from the mother country, and a House of Representatives, representing the people. It occurred to the fathers of this country that sovereignties and sovereignties alone should be represented by Senators, and that population and population alone should be represented only by Representatives coming directly from the people of the different districts. In that discussion, when that proposition was being considered, we find that there were in one State 24,000 population, another 89,000, another 93,000, another 741,000, another 368,000, and another something over 400,000, and so on, all different in size, different in population, different in resources, and so on; and the same argument was made there that has been attempted to be made here to-day, that there is an inequality in Senatorial representation.

The theory was, Mr. Speaker, and no constitutional lawyer can deny it, while the Senators represented nothing but sovereignties, did not come directly from the people, that therefore, representing a sovereignty and nothing but a sovereignty, each sovereignty had a right to equal representation in the United States Senate. That argument was carried so strongly in the Constitutional Convention that George Washington, the Father of his Country, being in that convention, was convinced that the argument was sound; that it was creating the body that should hold the cool rein of government; that it represented sovereign States and not populations, and he changed his vote in favor of the proposition. He announced it there, and announced it for the reasons, first, that it was sound; and secondly, that if this sound policy should not prevail the States would not adopt the Constitution. So that, Mr. Speaker, he who objects to this sovereign equalization ought to remember that when he does so he objects to the principle upon which the nation was founded.

When he does it he objects to the basic principle underlying the Constitution itself, and makes an enemy of himself to the principles that underlie the great fabric of this nation. Was it done wrong? Who says it was? If it was right then, is it not right now? You tell us it was a compromise. Our reply is: It was made, it was agreed to, it is the law of the land, it is the organic basis of this country, and it is as strong, therefore, as if it had been passed by every "yea" in that convention, as it almost was. So I say, in respect to that argument, that it needs no further reply. It falls of its own weight. I am reminded by my friend on my left, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], that that part of the Constitution which I have been discussing and that is now being objected to as a reason for this legislation is the only part of the Constitution of the United States that can not be changed by a two-thirds vote of the States. It can not be done.

Mr. Speaker, when I began this argument with the list of States and how they were admitted, my point was to show the establishment of a national policy first—that States are admitted when they are competent to take care of themselves. The basic rule of action was when they had 60,000 free inhabitants they should be admitted. They have been admitted with that rule in observance always every time. Remember California, when she was admitted in 1852, never had to go through the Territorial existence. She never was a Territory. After the Mexican war the boundary lines between the Governments were settled by the Gadsden Purchase. California elected her Senators, she had her Delegates, and she organized her State government, as was provided might be done under the ordinance of 1787. They went straight to Washington and knocked at the door of their father's house for admission, as we are doing to-day. They were admitted. Why? Because they had more than 60,000 free inhabitants and had a right to admission.

Now, I say that was the policy fixed upon then, and there is not a single one of these Northwest States that has been admitted with as many people as the Territories now individually knocking have. They were admitted upon those lines, and when they were too large they were cut in two. So that two lines of national policy have been followed from 1791 down to 1896. The first is that when a people had domain enough and population enough and resources enough to take care of themselves they were admitted as a matter of right. That is the first policy. The second is that when a Territory was so large that it would be a cumbersome State, too large for practical administration, another State was carved out of it, as they did in the Northeast and as they did in the South and as they have done in the Northwest and as they ought to be doing now. These are the policies that have lasted for more than one hundred years. This bill now does what? This bill comes and proposes to weld together two States large enough to make half of the entire Eastern States, to violate a policy, to absolutely destroy a policy which has been inaugurated so long and so long followed to a degree that so far as legislative construction is concerned it is stare decisis, and we are to violate it, revolutionize it, destroy it, and against the sovereign will of the people who live there.

Not only do we do this, but we do it with a union of Territories that will make a State so large, so expansive, that practical government can not be administered. That must be done, too, under this bill, and thus another rule of national policy is to be violated, walked over, and ground under the heel of political arbitrary power. Mr. Speaker, it is to the American manhood of this House we appeal that this should not be done. Who here can deny that these things are being done? If you deny it, upon what ground? If you dispute it, upon what facts, upon what law? We defy the presentation of either.

This proceeding is revolutionary in another respect. In 1863, when one of the greatest men that ever lived or died was President of the United States, long after the settlement of the question with reference to the acquisition of territory and the establishment of boundary lines as the result of our conflict with Mexico, Abraham Lincoln, then President of the United States, recommended that because of the vast size of these two Territories—New Mexico, including Arizona—each lying on either side of a great continental divide, covering so much territory, being so far from the center of administration and the executive head of their legal system, they should be divided and the continental divide should be made the dividing line. Arizona was created out of the western portion of New Mexico and the continental divide was made the line. It is understood, I apprehend, that there is a great range lying between the two Territories, from 4,800 to 8,000 feet high, which can be passed only at certain places, making impracticable a passage from one State to the other at certain points. For these reasons President Lincoln recommended this division. That division was made, and an act was passed declaring that Arizona should remain a separate Territory, with an organized Territorial government, with a view to its ultimate admission as a State. In other words, that it should remain a Territory with a Territorial government until such time as it—Arizona—should be admitted as a State.

That was the language of the law which established the Territory of Arizona. That law was never repealed. This is no effort to repeal that law—not even by implication. It is only an effort to disregard and override it.

But that act guaranteed to that Territory the right of Territorial government until such time as it should be suited for admission as a State. The people believed that the faith of the Government of the United States by that law was pledged to admit the Territory as a State when it reached its majority. That being so, they went forward. The people who went to that Territory had to meet butchery and the red-handed savagery of the Indians. People from all the States went there. They braved the savagery of the red man. Through their efforts the uncivilized tribes were finally transformed from roaming warriors to tillers of the soil; they were induced to give up the arts of butchery and bloodshed and devote themselves to the pursuits of civilized men and to learn to hate carnage and love the peaceful joys of quiet homes. These things have been done by the people there until to-day there are no wild Indian tribes remaining.

There are Indian tribes, of course; but they are civilized. They till the soil; they are being educated upon their reservations. This has been done by the industry, nerve, and energy of American manhood going there from all the States. That policy has continued until now those people have in cultivation 1,000,000 acres of land—not embraced within three or four settlements merely, as some men seem to suppose who never saw the sun shine on that soil. On the contrary, all over the Territory those people have erected their own public buildings. We are to-day as ready for housekeeping as a State as any State in the Union. Our statehouse would do credit to any of your communities. Our public institutions are as good as yours. We have one institution in my own city, the city of Prescott, that is not equaled, so far as its appointments or arrangements are concerned, by a single school building in any State of this Union excepting two buildings—one in New York and the other in San Francisco. We have carried our society to these high grades, relying upon the faith of the Government couched in the law that in due course of time this Territory should be admitted as a State.

Are you now going to force down our throats a policy which contradicts all the pledges, made in the face of the law, on which we have relied? Can this Congress afford to do that? Can this, the proudest nation under the sun—this great Government whose sun is shining around the world to-day—can this great Government afford to violate its own plighted faith in that way with its people, who have so much aided in making this country so great?

One word in regard to the people who are there. There is not a State in the Union that has not sent numerous people there who have aided in accomplishing such things as I have recited.

Here I append the list by States:

There is not one of you on this floor, either on that side or on this, some of whose people—energetic, nervy, American manhood—do not live there; people who have helped to build up this Territory as it is, expecting some day, when they knocked at the door of their father's house, that they would be admitted as was pledged them by the law that made them a Territory. Is it going to be violated all the way through?

When they heard that this bill was being prepared in the dark by the majority, when they heard that it had been prepared, they were not only surprised and alarmed, but they were shocked, and they trembled for their own safety. I began to receive protests, coming in day after day, and here they are: Protests from the Bankers' Union, protests from the citizen in the valley, the tiller of the soil, the miner with his pick, all protesting against what they feel to be an outrage threatened to be committed upon them. I now ask unanimous consent to print with my remarks these protests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to print certain documents in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., January 24, 1904.

Col. J. F. WILSON,
Delegate in Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Over 100 members of the Yavapai Club, representing the principal business interest in Prescott and Yavapai County, last night at an informal meeting unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the people of Arizona are unalterably opposed to New Mexico and Arizona being consolidated and made one State; that they prefer to remain as citizens of a Territory than enter the sisterhood of States under these conditions. That the president of the club is directed to telegraph this resolution to the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Territories and Colonel WILSON, Delegate in Congress."

President Yavapai Club.

Hon. J. F. WILSON,

MORENCI, ARIZ., January 27, 1904.

Hon. J. F. WILSON,
The Capitol, Washington, D. C.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, citizens of Morenci, Ariz., irrespective of party affiliations, in mass meeting assembled, respectfully represent that—

Whereas it has come to our knowledge that your honorable bodies may without full knowledge of the wishes of the people, residents of Arizona, enact a measure whereby Arizona and New Mexico may be admitted to the Union as one State:

Resolved, That joint statehood with New Mexico is at utter variance from the spirit offered and independence handed down to us and inculcated in us by our forefathers and so abhorrent that we would that the great Congress of the United States would irrevocably for as long as our glorious Union exists and forever declare Arizona a Territory than that a union so incompatible, so irreconcilable, so discrepant should come to pass.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be telegraphed to our Delegate to Congress in Washington, requesting him to transmit a copy to each House of Congress.

H. B. RICE,
J. H. PUCKETT,
J. F. CLEVELAND,
A. VALJEAN,
Committee.

Memorial unanimously adopted to-day.

H. B. RICE.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the people of the town of Williams and vicinity, in Coconino County, Territory of Arizona, in mass meeting assembled, pursuant to a call of the board of supervisors of said county, most respectfully represent and show unto your honorable bodies that—

Whereas the people of Arizona have long been and they still are very desirous of admission to the Union as one of the sovereign States thereof, and they have persistently urged, and they still do so urge, their rights and claims for such admission; and

Whereas it has come to the notice of our people that it is contemplated by your honorable bodies to join in single statehood the present two Territories of Arizona and New Mexico: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That whilst we are all earnestly in favor of statehood for Arizona, yet it is the unanimous sentiment of our people that we are unalterably opposed to joint statehood with the Territory of New Mexico; and rather than incur the disaster of joint statehood with that Territory we prefer Arizona to remain a Territory indefinitely.

Be it further resolved, That we fully appreciate the earnest efforts of our Delegates to Congress in our behalf, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to Colonel WILSON, our present Delegate.

Adopted at public mass meeting, January 25, 1904.

RINGING RESOLUTIONS AGAINST STATE MERGER—ROUSING MEETING AT LIBRARY HALL—PEOPLE UNANIMOUS AGAINST MERGING WITH NEW MEXICO.

In pursuance to the recommendations of Governor Brodie, and in compliance with the request of the board of supervisors, a monster mass meeting of the citizens of Clifton was held at Library Hall Tuesday night. Hon. Dan. Lynch, in forcible and eloquent language, stated the object of the meeting. Col. Ben. M. Crawford was elected chairman and W. A. Leonard secretary. The following committee was then appointed on resolutions: Hon. Wiley E. Jones, Dan. Lynch, James Smith, Robert Dunagan, and W. A. Leonard. After a short intermission the committee reported the following resolutions:

Whereas information has come to us from numerous reliable sources that an intention exists upon the part of various Senators and Members of the House of Representatives in Congress to urge strenuously the merging of the Territory of Arizona and the Territory of New Mexico as one in the enabling act providing for their admission into the Union as a single State; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance that the great mass of people who make up the citizenship of Arizona should have a hearing upon said proposition while the statehood measure is still pending before Congress, and that their emphatic protest thereof should be recorded: and

Whereas each of said Territories, separate and alone, as constituted by act of Congress forty-one years ago under the Administration of Abraham Lincoln, and as they now exist have an area exceeding that of all the New England States and the Empire State of New York combined, which seven States have their area now divided into 127 counties in the aggregate created therein for the proper, convenient, and economical administration of their public affairs, as illustrative of the wisdom of our protest herein expressed: and

Whereas the merging of the vast area of said Territories of Arizona and New Mexico into one State would render such State much too unwieldy for the convenience of government and prove an insurmountable obstacle to the economical administration of its affairs as a Commonwealth; and

Whereas the legislative statutes, both civil and criminal, of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico have a vast difference throughout, and the judicial procedure of each Territory, in every respect, is as an unknown quantity to the other, and any act merging them into one State would precipitate our people into such indescribable chaos that the sagacity of sages could not extricate us for generations; and

Whereas since the wise act of division creating us into separate Territories forty-one years ago our populations have increased and our resources have been developed under conditions peculiar to each Territory, and thereunder our political and social habits are now as widely different and as inharmonious as those of Pennsylvania and South Carolina; and

Whereas necessary public institutions have been erected at great expense by each Territory within the limits of each, and an act of merger would cause vexatious questions and controversies over these institutions which would inevitably engender bitterness and feelings of retaliation, thereby resulting in extravagance, against which all public servants should strive with their best endeavors; and

Whereas each of these Territories at the last census had a population greater than the aggregate and combined population of 113,000 that the present great States of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and Michigan had at the last census preceding the admission of each as a State of the American Union, since which time each of these Commonwealths has grown into its present power, might, and magnificence; and

Whereas the population of Arizona is made up of the good citizenship of other States who have come from populous localities attracted by the varied inducements offered by her boundless resources, and by the untiring application of energy, toil, and capital have made her proudly worthy of the boon of statehood, singly and alone, the voice of her people is the voice of American manhood and womanhood, urging the unwavering demand of right before the Tribune of the Just: Therefore

Be it resolved, That we, the people of the progressive town of Clifton, Ariz., urge hereby the early admission of Arizona as a State of the Union, and that we do hereby protest with a united voice against our admission as a State jointly as one with the Territory of New Mexico.

Resolved further, That all people are entitled to self-government, and, in the language of the immortal Lincoln, "No man is good enough to govern another without his consent," and we earnestly assert that no people are good enough to govern Arizona but the patriotic citizens within her own borders.

Resolved further, That we prefer to remain in our present condition, as a Territory, rather than be admitted as a joint State with New Mexico, and thereby encounter the intolerable conditions rendered inevitable by our admission under such circumstances. The platforms of both the great political parties have solemnly pledged the American people to bestow upon us that which we herein demand. Under that pledge, under our inalienable rights of liberty and the pursuit of happiness, our motto is, and ever must be, "Give to Arizona and her people, for themselves, statehood and a shining star in the Union or permit her to continue her travels indefinitely in the tortuous paths of a Territory."

Resolved, That a transcript of these resolutions be transmitted to our Delegate in Congress, with the request that he place them before both Houses of Congress.

Speeches supporting the resolutions were made by Dan Lynch, Wiley E. Jones, Henry Collins, Editor Bennett, Bob Dunnagan, Adam Smith, and many other prominent citizens, which were received with vociferous applause by the large audience. There can be no question as to the sentiment of the people in regard to this proposed merger of the two Territories. They are a little sore on mergers anyway, and this one they will have none of. The Era regrets that its limited space will not permit it to reproduce them in full. When the question was put it was carried by a whoop and a hurrah, there not being a single dissenting voice from the several hundred present.

CLIFTON, GRAHAM COUNTY, ARIZ., January 23, 1904.

This is to certify that at a public mass meeting, after due notice given thereof, held in Clifton, Ariz., on the night of January, 1904, the undersigned were elected chairman and secretary, respectively, of said meeting, and the foregoing resolutions were unanimously adopted.

BEN M. CRAWFORD,
Chairman of said Mass Meeting.

Joint resolutions passed by the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., and the mayor and common council of the city of Tucson, Pima County, Ariz., protesting against the union of Arizona and New Mexico as one State.

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The board of supervisors representing the interests of the county of Pima, in the Territory of Arizona, and the mayor and common council of the city of Tucson, being the county seat of the said Pima County, most emphatically protest againt the passage of any bill providing for the union of Arizona and New Mexico into one State, and join with the citizens of the other counties and cities of Arizona in appealing to the Congress to defeat such a measure so obnoxious and unjust to the people of this Territory.

The board of supervisors of Pima County and the mayor and common council of Tucson here enumerate only the most potent and most manifest of the many reasons why the two Territories should not be joined into one State:

First. The Territories of Arizona and New Mexico have different codes, different laws, different forms of county and municipal government, and different histories. They have different universities, asylums, penitentiaries and other public institutions, and each has its separate debt. An attempt to reconcile their laws or to unite their institutions would result in unparalleled chaos.

Second. United into one State the two Territories would make a Commonwealth unwieldy in size. Such a State could neither be practically nor economically governed. The distance between the present capitals, Santa Fe and Phoenix, is nearly 700 miles.

Third. In New Mexico the present industries are agriculture and stock raising, while in Arizona mining is of first importance, although the agricultural and live-stock industries are of no small moment.

Wherefore be it resolved, That these two bodies speaking for the people of Tucson and Pima County petition the Congress of the United States, praying that no bill shall pass providing for the union of Arizona and New Mexico into a single State; and

Be it further resolved, That copies of these joint resolutions be sent to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, and to Hon. J. F. WILSON, Delegate from Arizona, with the request that he should present the same to the Committee on Territories in the Senate and House of Representatives.

Passed and adopted by the board of supervisors of the county of Pima, Territory of Arizona, this —— day of January, 1904.

[SEAL.]

E. L. VAIL,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors, Pima County, Ariz.
JOHN METS,
Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, Pima County, Ariz.

Passed and adopted by the mayor and common council of the city of Tucson, Pima County, Ariz., this —— day of January, 1904.

[SEAL.]

C. F. WHIMACHER,
Mayor City of Tucson, Pima County, Ariz.
FRANK S. TREAT,
Recorder City of Tucson, Pima County, Ariz.

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, the citizens of Douglas, at a mass meeting representing the business men and people of Douglas, Cochise County, Territory of Arizona, and her tributary country, file and enter our solemn protest against the enactment of any bill which in the slightest degree favors in any manner the annexing of our gallant Territory of Arizona with New Mexico, for the following reasons, viz:

I. The area of the country covered by such a measure, considering the means of traffic and access from different points, would be too large to insure a practical and economic government.

II. The population of our beloved Arizona is an English-speaking people, while the language of New Mexico is largely Spanish.

III. The population of New Mexico being greater than that of Arizona would be uniting an English-speaking people with that of a Spanish race, placing the Spanish race in power, and by the ballot the gallant sons of our land would be subjected to government by an inferior class of people and would impose upon the people of Arizona a government against their will and consent, and a condition which would be by far more intolerable than the one which we have so long endured.

IV. The Territory of Arizona has a different government, different codes, different laws, different language, different history, different capitol, different university, asylums, penitentiary, school system, and different institutions from our sister Territory, all of which have cost large sums of money and of which her people are proud, and which a union would cause the disbandment of all to adopt laws, capitol, schools, etc., which would be far from as beneficial as the present; divided they stand, united they fall.

V. That we heartily indorse the intelligent, firm, and unswerving attitude taken in opposition to joint statehood by Arizona's sons, Governor Alexander O. Brodie and our loyal representative, the Hon. JOHN F. WILSON, Delegate to Congress, which meets with our unqualified approval.

We believe it is the universal sentiment of the people of Arizona and pray that no bill shall pass the Congress uniting these Territories into a single State.

While we believe we are entitled to statehood, we would rather submit to our present condition for years to come than to be united into statehood under such unfavorable conditions.

Resolved, That a copy of this petition be sent to the President of the Senate, Speaker of the House, and two copies to the Hon. John F. WILSON, Delegate to Congress from Arizona, with the request that he present the same to the Committee on Territories in Senate and House, and use his best efforts to avert the threatened calamity which is now about to be thrust upon us.

DOUGLAS, ARIZ., January 23, 1904.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the citizens of Holbrook, the capital of the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, in mass meeting assembled, upon call of the chairman of the board of supervisors of said county, and in compliance with the proclamation of the governor of said Territory of Arizona, respectfully represent and show unto your honorable bodies that,

Whereas the people of Arizona having full faith and confidence in their ability and their right under the Constitution of the United States to support and maintain a State government, for which they have in many years past been desirous and have persistently urged upon your honorable bodies; and

Whereas we are informed that it is contemplated and intended by you to join in statehood the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico; and

Whereas on account of the diversified interests of the people of the said Territories and the immense area of said proposed State, a very large majority of its citizens will be practically debarred from active participation and such familiarity, by personal contact, with the affairs of their State as intelligent citizens should enjoy; all of which is contrary to the best interests of a sovereign State; and

Whereas it will be destructive of the present Territorial organizations of church, fraternal, social, and political organizations, which are so deeply embedded in the hearts of our devotees.

Now, therefore, we do most respectfully represent that we are well acquainted with the sentiment of the people of this Territory in this particular and know that they are unalterably opposed to the joining of said Territories of Arizona and New Mexico as one State, and to be thus admitted to the Union of States, and if statehood is to be gained by such a sacrifice of their interests and rights, as guaranteed by the Constitution under which you officially act, they would prefer to remain inhabitants of Arizona, under their present Territorial form of government, rather than to be subjects of such an unholy alliance and citizens of such an unwieldy, cumbersome, and expensive State as this contemplated action would force upon them. That such sentiment is unanimous against that form of government and an outrage on their patriotism, loyalty, and love for the chief authorities of our nation we do most confidently believe.

The customs, laws, and methods of the two Territories are at such variance that it would be impossible to reconcile the differences which would continually arise. In so far as a Territory may legislate, our system of law and procedure, which we infinitely prefer to that prevailing in New Mexico, and to which we would tenaciously cling, while the people of New Mexico would undoubtedly be as unyielding in their preferences, would bring upon us an irreconcilable conflict, which would create dissensions, turmoil, and difficulties to the destruction of that peace, harmony, and good will which should prevail in every Commenwealth, and the same would be true of our church, fraternal, social, and political organizations holding a Territorial form of government.

Our public buildings, in every way competent for the administration of the affairs of a State, would be rendered useless and a great burden upon our people to meet the demands due and maturing against them, while the expense of government would be multiplied indefinitely, on account of the vast area and almost impracticable distances of the majority of the people from their seat of government, for which reason Congress nearly one-half century ago segregated Arizona from New Mexico, and which we now urge as a good and sufficient reason why these Territories should not be reunited as a sovereign State.

For deliverance from this outrage upon our God-given rights to self-government, upon our liberties as free and independent citizens of our great Republic, upon the freedom that has been granted to other Territories to select their own form of government under the Constitution of these United States, we shall ever pray.

L. E. DIVELBESS, Chairman.

To the Senate and House of Representatives
of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the people of Flagstaff and vicinity, in mass meeting assembled at the call of the board of supervisors of Coconino County, Ariz., respectfully represent and show unto your most honorable bodies:

Whereas the people of Arizona have long been desirous of admission to the Union as a sovereign State and have persistently urged their claims for such admission; and

Whereas it has come to our notice that it is contemplated by your honorable bodies to join in single statehood the present Territories of Arizona and New Mexico;

Now, therefore, we do respectfully represent that, without a dissenting voice, we know it to be the sentiment of our people that, if statehood be not accorded their Territory separate and apart from New Mexico, they prefer to remain inhabitants of Arizona as a Territory during the remainder of their lives rather than be citizens of a State composed of the two Territories above named; that we are conversant with the sentiment of the people of this Territory in this regard, and that such sentiment is unanimous to the effect that admission in such form would be most obnoxious to their feelings and injurious to their best interests.

Among our objections to admission in such form are the following:

That the customs, laws, and methods of legal procedure which obtain in New Mexico are radically different from and foreign to ours.

That, in so far as a Territory may legislate, we have a system of law and procedure which we infinitely prefer to that prevailing in the Territory of New Mexico. The people of New Mexico, on the other hand, are no doubt as strongly attached to their system and methods. It would, therefore, unquestionably result that in the formation of the legal system and enactment of statutes for the proposed State by its first legislature, through the numerical superiority which they would have over us, the people of Arizona would be compelled to accept a system which they would regard as inferior and undesirable.

That we now possess all the public buildings and institutions demanded by our present population either as a Territory or a State.

That, owing to the immense area and almost impracticable distances by usually traveled routes, the expenses of government would be multiplied for the present population of Arizona; and the reasons of convenient and economical administration which originally induced Congress to segregate Arizona from New Mexico should prevail with multiplied force against their union under conditions where the expense of government would fall entirely upon the people within the limits of the two Territories.

Chairman of Mass Meeting.
H. C. HIBBEN,

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY RECORDER OF GILA COUNTY, Globe, Ariz., January 21, 1904.

Hon. J. F. WILSON,
Delegate to Congress for Arizona, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This indenture is to show you that the people of Gila County, Ariz., as a whole, are united against the passage of any bill in Congress uniting the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico as one State, and that we, the people of Gila County, Arizona Territory, would prefer Arizona to remain as a Territory rather than to consent to any merger of the two Territories mentioned.

Very respectfully,

THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF GILA COUNTY,
By LYMAN C. WOODS, Chairman.

Resolutions protesting against the joint admission to statehood of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, unanimously adopted at a mass meeting of the citizens of Bisbee, Ariz., called by the mayor and which convened in the Bisbee Opera House on Saturday evening, January 23, 1904.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas it has come to our notice that there is a likelihood of the passage by Congress at this session of a bill having for its purpose the joining of Arizona with New Mexico and their admission to the Union as one State; and

Whereas Arizona, as shown by the last census, possesses the required amount of population and taxable wealth which entitles her to single statehood and, according to statistics, possesses even more population and taxable wealth than thirteen States of the Union at the time they were admitted to the Union; and

Whereas for the past eight years the national conventions of both parties have declared in favor of single statehood for the remaining Territories; and

Whereas the people of this Territory of Arizona are unalterably opposed to the proposed consolidation of Arizona and New Mexico, and would rather remain in Territorial bondage indefinitely rather than accept statehood at such a sacrifice: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the citizens of Bisbee, in regular mass meeting assembled, do hereby most earnestly protest against the proposed bill having for its object the admission of Arizona to statehood linked with New Mexico, and recite the following reasons in support of our protest:

First. That nowhere in the glorious history of these United States is there a precedent for any such action.

Second. That such proposed jointure would be in direct opposition to the wishes of 150,000 free American citizens.

Third. The creation of a State composed of Arizona and New Mexico would be unwieldy and expensive in administering the government, owing to the long distances to be traveled and the immense area of territory to be covered.

Fourth. That although Arizona and New Mexico geographically are situated side by side, the customs, language, habits, and ambitions of a vast majority of the inhabitants of New Mexico are entirely different from those of Arizona, and such a jointure would result in endless strife and unnecessary burdens in the administration of State affairs.

Respectfully submitted for your consideration.

At a mass meeting held at the city of Tucson, Ariz., on the 21st day of January, 1904, pursuant to a call issued by the chairman of the board of supervisors of Pima County and the mayor of said city, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted after a full and free discussion:

Whereas it appears from press reports and other information that certain Members of Congress will make a determined effort to enact a law whereby the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona will be admitted to the Union as a single State; and

Whereas in our opinion the union of these two Territories as a single State would be one of the greatest calamities that could happen to the people of this Territory, for the following reasons, among others:

First. That each of the Territories already contains an area more than sufficient for a single State, and their combined area would be too great for convenient and economical government and administration.

Second. The inhabitants of this Territory differ from those of New Mexico in race, political habits, and otherwise to such an extent that it would be impossible for them to join in the harmonious conduct of a State government.

Third. That each Territory has already acquired, by great sacrifices and expenditure, a capitol building, university, normal schools, penitentiary, insane asylum, and reform school, and the joining of the two Territories in a single State would render many of these buildings and institutions useless; that a contest would inevitably take place between the people of New Mexico and of this Territory over the future location of such institutions, resulting in bitterness, strife, and hatred; and owing to the greater population of New Mexico the people of this Territory would in all probability lose all of said institutions, the appropriations for their support would cease, and they would be dismantled and abandoned.

Fourth. Each of said Territories has incurred a large bonded debt from which the other has received no benefit, and which it would be unjust to require the other to assist in paying: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the people of Pima County, Territory of Arizona, in a mass meeting assembled, That while we are in favor of statehood for Arizona, and believe that we are entitled to separate statehood, yet, rather than to incur the disaster of joint statehood with New Mexico, we prefer that Arizona should remain a Territory indefinitely.

Resolved, That we appeal to every friend of Arizona in Congress, or elsewhere, to resist to the uttermost any attempt to force such joint statehood upon this Territory; and

Resolved, That, as the Democratic and Republican national platforms pledge their respective parties to the admission of the Territories to statehood and not to the merger of two or more Territories into one State, we appeal to the Members of Congress of both parties to adhere to the pledges of their respective national conventions and oppose the bill to merge New Mexico and Arizona into one State, and to the President of the United States, should the bill pass Congress, to stand by the platform upon which he was elected and veto the bill; and

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the chairman of this meeting to our Delegate in Congress, with the request that he bring it to the attention of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Resolutions of citizens of Tombstone, Ariz.

Whereas it appears from certain press reports and from other reliable sources that there is a strong probability that an effort will be made at the present session of Congress to unite the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico and admit them into the Union as one State; and

Whereas in our opinion the admission of these two Territories as one State would be one of the greatest calamities that could befall the people of Arizona, for the following reasons:

1. That each of the Territories contains an area far more than sufficient for one State.

2. That each of the Territories contains a population more than sufficient for one State.

3. That the distance between the principal cities of the two Territories would be too great to admit of an economical administration of the public affairs of one State should they be united.

4. That the difference between the customs of the people and their habits, and the settled laws, and the manner of their adminstration is so great that it would be almost impossible to harmonize the several interests and adopt a uniform constitution for the just government of both.

5. That each of the Territories has already established, at a very large expense to its taxpayers, capitol buildings, universities, normal schools, penetentiaries, industrial schools, and asylums, and the uniting of these Territories would inevitably result in confusion, political strife, and the ultimate abandonment of such institutions in one of the Territories.

6. That each of the Territories has incurred a large bonded indebtedness for which the other has received no benefit, and which it would be unjust to require the other to assist in paying: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the people of the city of Tombstone, Territory of Arizona, in mass meeting assembled, That while we are in favor of statehood for Arizona, we believe we are entitled to a separate State;

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that Arizona is entitled to separate statehood, and looks to her friends to do her citizens the justice of granting them their rights in their struggle for admission into the Union as a separate State;

Resolved, That we earnestly appeal to every friend of Arizona, in Congress or elsewhere, to resist any attempt to enforce joint statehood upon us;

Resolved, That should such a bill pass Congress we make a personal appeal to the President of the United States to stand by the platform upon which he was elected and veto the bill; and

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the chairman of this meeting to our Delegate in Congress, with the request that he bring it to the attention of the Senate and House of Representatives.

S. B. HINDS,
Chairman Board of Supervisors.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, citizens of Harrisburg, Ariz., wish to record our protest against the uniting of New Mexico and Arizona for the purpose of having them admitted into the Union as a single State, thinking that such an alliance would be inimical to the best interests of Arizona.

B. J. Quinn, Albert C. Scales, John B. Martin, Joseph Raobe, Chas. H. Bond, John Rarick, W. C. Beckman, H. B. Hanna, R. W. Kimball, Thos. Blair, Richard Shea, B. L. Quinn, Frank Van Nerr, P. Fitzsimmons, J. A. Reid, John Cuff, Albert Algier, William Bear, O. E. Rumer, H. S. Griffin, W. T. Griffin.

Resolution against merger adopted at the town of Metcalf, Ariz., at a general mass meeting of citizens, held January 29, 1904.

Whereas information has come to us from numerous reliable sources that an intention exists upon the part of various Senators and Members of the House of Representatives in Congress to urge strenuously the merging of the Territory of Arizona and the Territory of New Mexico as one in the enabling act providing for their admission into the Union as a single State; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance that the great mass of people who make up the citizenship of Arizona should have a hearing upon said proposition while the statehood measure is still pending before Congress, and that their emphatic protest thereof should be recorded; and

Whereas each of said Territories, separate and alone, as constituted by act of Congress forty-one years ago under the Administration of Abraham Lincoln, and as they now exist, have an area exceeding that of all the six New England States and the Empire State of New York combined, which seven States have their area now divided into 127 counties for the proper, convenient, and economical administration of their public affairs, as illustrative of the wisdom of our protest herein expressed; and

Whereas the merging of the vast area of said Territories of Arizona and New Mexico into one State would render such State much too unwieldy for the convenience of government and prove an insurmountable obstacle to the economical administration of its affairs as a Commonwealth; and

Whereas the population of Arizona is made up of the good citizenship of other States who have come from populous localities attracted by the varied inducements offered by her boundless resources, and by the untiring application of energy, toil, and capital have made her proudly worthy of the boon of statehood, singly and alone, the voice of her people is the voice of American manhood and womanhood, urging the unwavering demand of right before the tribune of justice: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the people of the progressive town of Metcalf, Ariz., urge hereby the early admission of Arizona as a State of the Union, and that we do hereby protest with a united voice against our admission as a State jointly as one with the Territory of New Mexico.

Resolved further, That we prefer to remain in our present condition as a Territory, rather than be admitted as a joint State with New Mexico and thereby encounter the intolerable conditions rendered inevitable by our admission under such circumstances. The platforms of both the great political parties have solemnly pledged the American people to bestow upon us that which we herein demand. Under that pledge and under our inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, our motto is and must be: Give to Arizona and her people, for themselves, statehood and a shining star in the Union, or permit her to continue her travels indefinitely in the paths of a Territory.

Resolved, That a transcript of these resolutions be transmitted to our Delegate in Congress, with the request that he place them before both Houses of Congress.

CHAIRMAN SENATE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: At a mass meeting of the citizens of the town of Winslow, Navajo County, Ariz., held in the opera house in said town this date, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted, after the unanimous sentiment of the town had been expressed in a number of short talks by the leading business men and residents of the town, in which the sentiment was in favor of statehood for Arizona alone or to remain a Territory indefinitely rather than a union with New Mexico, it being the sentiment of the meeting that both Territories were entitled to separate admission as States.

The following were the resolutions adopted without a dissenting vote:

Whereas it has been reported to the citizens of the town of Winslow, Navajo County, Ariz., that a bill has been or is about to be submitted to Congress whereby the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico are to be joined and admitted into the Union as one State; and

Whereas the people of the town of Winslow are unalterably opposed to statehood under such conditions; and

Whereas in such opposition the people of the town of Winslow voice the sentiment of Navajo County, and, as they believe, the sentiment of the people of the entire Territory of Arizona; and

Whereas, although we are in favor of statehood, we prefer to remain a Territory indefinitely rather than to become a State under such conditions: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Delegate in Congress and all other friends of this Territory be hereby requested to use their utmost efforts to defeat the abovementioned bill, should such a bill be introduced in Congress, and that they work solely for the admission of Arizona as a separate State; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our Delegate in Congress, a copy sent to the chairman of the House Committee on Territories, a copy to the chairman of the same committee of the Senate, one to the governor of Arizona, and that a copy be published in the Winslow Mail.

To the Congress of the United States, Washington. D. C.:

We, the citizens of Naco, Cochise County, Ariz., in mass meeting assembled, view with solicitude the illogical purpose of combining the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico for admission into the Union as one State.

We believe that the Territory of Arizona is far ahead of her sister Territory in all save physical size, and that a combination would serve to lower the standard of her government by injecting into it a greater average of other than English-speaking people.

We believe that Arizona, in point of population, wealth, and learning, should be eligible for admission alone, and until such time as Congress may see fit to grant that request we prefer the Territorial government.

We believe that a combination of the two Territories would form a State too unwieldy for proper government.

We believe, with the past as a criterion of the future, that Arizona will make such strides in the next ten years as to place her far ahead of many of the present States in population and material progress.

We submit that Arizona compares favorably with many of the old States from every constitutional view point; that to longer deny her self-government is an abridgment of her constitutional rights, and we earnestly petition the Congress of the United States to lay aside all political prejudices and pass the bill to create a State out of the present Territory of Arizona, and, furthermore, we most earnestly protest against the proposed attempt to create a State of the two Territories and thus retard the progress of both.

DEAR SIR: In view of the proposed joint statehood bill, whereby Arizona and New Mexico are to be admitted as one State, we the undersigned bankers, comprising the Arizona Bankers' Association, hereby protest against any and all Congressional legislation having as its aim the joining of Arizona and New Mexico as one State.

We request that you submit this protest to the Senate and House Committees on Territories.

Be it remembered that at a mass meeting of the citizens of Phoenix and vicinity, held in the city of Phoenix on the 30th day of January, 1904, for the purpose of giving expression to the views of citizens upon the proposition soon to be presented to the Congress of the United States to unite the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and admit these two Territories as one State, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas grave dangers exist that the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled will enact a law uniting the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico and admit the two Territories into the Union as one State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the citizens of the city of Phoenix, county of Maricopa, Territory of Arizona, in mass convention assembled, do hereby earnestly protest against any forced political union of the two Territories as the greatest calamity that could befall either Territory, for the following reasons:

1. For forty years each one of the Territories has dealt with the particular conditions existing within its limits, resulting in the adoption and growth of different local customs, separate codes of law, different methods of taxation of property, and separate political subdivisions, and during this time the people of the two Territories have at great expense and sacrifice established and maintained appropriate educational, penal, charitable, and other public institutions. Under these conditions, to unite these Territories in one State will produce the greatest confusion and expense in local government and will result in retarding and hampering the material advancement and progress of each one of the Territories.

2. The population of the two Territories is unequal in numbers, that of New Mexico being the greater, and a union of the two Territories in one State with this numerically unequal population would place this Territory at a great disadvantage in protecting its rights and compelling the performance of duties owed by the majority population to it.

3. The union of the two Territories into one State would make local government unwieldy and exceedingly expensive on account of the great area covered.

4. That the people of this Territory are homogeneous, withsimilar ideals and ambitions; they have already laid here, broad and deep, the foundations of a truly American commonwealth; and they earnestly desire the opportunity to develop their own material and intellectual resources and to work out their own destiny in accordance with their own ideas of local government; and that the proposed political union of the two Territories, with different laws and traditions (and even language in part), would be disastrous to our material advancement, contrary to our earnest desires, and against the united voice and wishes of the people of this Territory.

5. That the reasons which caused Congress to separate Arizona from New Mexico in 1863, when the territory embraced within her boundaries was sparsely settled and wholly undeveloped, apply with manifold cogency against any enforced reunion of the two Territories in 1904, when for forty years last past their interests have more widely diverged with each year.

Finally, the citizens of Arizona have been and now are a unit in their desire for statehood and in the belief that they are entitled to it as a matter of right and justice; and they look with the greatest confidence to the American Congress to relieve them from a state of Territorial vassalage and give them a place in the sisterhood of States under the name of "Arizona." But rather than incur the impending disaster of joint statehood with New Mexico we request Congress to allow us to remain as a Territory of the United States.

Be it further resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Committee on Territories of the Senate, to the Committee on Territories of the House of Representatives, and to Hon. J. F. WILSON, our Delegate to Congress.

Petition from the people of the Gila Valley, Graham County, Ariz., against the consolidation of New Mexico and Arizona.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

At a mass meeting of the citizens of the Gila Valley, in Graham County, Ariz., held at Safford, representing the business, commercial, and agricultural interests of one of the most populous and progressive counties within the Territory, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted, emphatically remonstrating against the consolidation of New Mexico and Arizona and their admission into the Union as one State for the following convincing reasons:

First. The people of Arizona have the same love and veneration for their beautiful land as did the founders of our older Commonwealths, and the obliteration of her name from the glorious constellation comprising the American Union would be nothing short of sacrilege.

The Anglo-Saxon devotion to free, local self-government prompted the pathfinders and pioneers of our western country, many of whom yet dwell among us, respected for their courage and industry and venerated as the founders of a State, to reclaim our land from savagery and unproductiveness and transmit it as a heritage to us, their sons and daughters, that we might preserve, improve, and in turn bequeath it unimpaired to our children. Against the possibility of her name passing into oblivion and our fair land becoming an appendage to another State, we most earnestly protest.

Second. The proposed union, if effected, would result in the formation of a State too large and unwieldy for economical local government.

Third. For more than forty years the two peoples have traveled separate roads toward the same goal—statehood. The reasons which in wisdom separated them are not less cogent on the eve of their admission to the sisterhood of States. During this time each Territory has dealt with the particular conditions existing within its borders, resulting in the growth of separate local customs, separate codes of laws, separate political subdivisions, separate methods of taxation, etc. The equitable adjustment of the debts of the respective Territories is likely to present a problem difficult of amicable solution.

Fourth. Each Territory conducts its educational and other public enterprises and institutions, none of which are in excess of what our people require; should the proposed consolidation be effected, some of them would be abolished upon a false theory of economy.

Fifth. In numbers the population of the two Territories is unequal, that of Arizona being the smaller. In a union of States thus unequal the minority can not protect its rights or compel the performance of duties owed by the majority. From the evils of such an enforced partnership we look with confidence to the American Congress for protection.

Sixth. The idea of the union of these Territories, we are convinced, did not originate within our boundaries, but came from persons outside who desire to use us for their advantage. This statement, we think, is borne out by the fact that the Congress has received many petitions opposing the union: but, so far as we are aware, not a single petition favoring the proposed consolidation has come from our people. The idea originated, grew, and has its entire support from without.

For the foregoing and other reasons, all of which have been ably urged, we respectfully petition that no bill having for its object the consolidation of these Territories be passed by the Congress.

The people of Arizona are entitled to statehood in their own right; they are members of the same great race that governs our common country. For more than forty years they have waited and looked forward to the day when their great Territory shall take her rightful place as a member of our Union; no greater injustice could be done our people than to compel her to enter as a nameless fraction. To the Congress we look with abiding confidence for the early recognition of her right to statehood.

Resolved, That the secretary of this mass meeting transmit a copy of this petition to the President of the United States; to the President of the Senate, requesting him to refer it to the Senate Committee on Territories; and a copy to Hon. J. F. WILSON, our Delegate in Congress, with a like request that he move its reference to the House Committee on Territories, and that he use his utmost endeavors to divert this threatened disaster from our Territory; also, a copy to the governor of Arizona.

Whereas it appears from press reports and other information that certain Members of Congress will make a determined effort to enact a law whereby the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona will be admitted to the Union as a single State; and

Whereas, in our opinion, the union of these two Territories as a single State would be one of the greatest calamities that could happen to the people of this Territory, for the following reasons, among others:

First. That each of the Territories already contains an area more than sufficient for a single State, and their combined area would be too great for convenient and economical government and administration.

Second. The inhabitants of this Territory differ from those of New Mexico in race, political habits, and otherwise, to such an extent that it would be impossible for them to join in the harmonious conduct of a State government.

Third. That each Territory has already acquired, by great sacrifices and expenditure, a capitol building, university, normal schools, penitentiary, insane asylum, and reform school; and the joining of the two Territories in a single State would render many of these buildings and institutions useless; that a contest would inevitably take place between the people of New Mexico and of this Territory over the future location of such institutions, resulting in bitterness, strife, and hatred; and, owing to the greater population of New Mexico, the people of this Territory would, in all probability, lose all of said institutions, the appropriations for their support would cease and they would be dismantled and abandoned.

Fourth. Each of said Territories has incurred a large bonded debt from which the other has received no benefit and which it would be unjust to require the other to assist in paying: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the people of Pima County, Territory of Arizona, in a mass meeting assembled, That while we are in favor of statehood for Arizona, and believe that we are entitled to separate statehood, yet rather than to incur the disaster of joint statehood with New Mexico, we prefer that Arizona should remain a Territory indefinitely;

Resolved, That we appeal to every friend of Arizona, in Congress or elsewhere, to resist to the uttermost any attempt to force such joint statehood upon this Territory;

Resolved, That as the Democratic and Republican national platforms pledge their respective parties to the admission of the Territories to statehood, and not to the merger of two or more Territories into one State, we appeal to the Members of Congress of both parties to adhere to the pledges of their respective national conventions and oppose the bill to merge New Mexico and Arizona into one State, and to the President of the United States, should the bill pass Congress, to stand by the platform upon which he was elected and veto the bill; and

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the chairman of this meeting to our Delegate in Congress, with the request that he bring it to the attention of the Senate and House of Representatives.

INDIVIDUAL PETITIONS FROM ARIZONA.

ASH FORK, February 15, 1904.

To the honorable board of supervisors of Yavapai County.

GENTLEMEN: Responding to your request for an expression of the sentiment of the people of this precinct respecting the proposed admission to statehood of Arizona and New Mexico jointly, we, the undersigned residents and taxpayers of Ash Fork precinct, Arizona, hereby assert that we are unqualifiedly and unalterably opposed to the union of New Mexico and Arizona as one State, believing that such a measure would result disastrously to the interest of both Territories, and especially to Arizona.

Any action that may be taken by your honorable body in opposition to the proposed measure will meet our hearty approval, and we urge that through you our representative in Congress be instructed to use all honorable means to defeat any statehood measure for Arizona excepting one admitting this Territory as a separate State.

HOOPER, ARIZ., February 15, 1904.

Pursuant to a request of the Hon. A. O. Brodie, governor of the Territory, and a notification of the same by the board of supervisors of Yavapai County, Ariz., the citizens of Hooper precinct, Yavapai County, Ariz., in mass meeting assembled, after electing Edwin T. Leigh as president and James Roach secretary, unanimously passed the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas certain people in authority wish to force on us, against our will and consent, joint statehood with the Territory of New Mexico:

"Resolved, That we, as citizens of Arizona and the United States, ask as our right statehood for Arizona, and we repudiate joint statehood with New Mexico, it being unjust, unfair (and to us) disreputable to the citizens of Arizona.

"Resolved, That rather than joint statehood with New Mexico we remain as we are, a Territory, indefinitely."

EDWIN T. LEIGH, President.
JAMES ROACH, Secretary.

To the honorable board of supervisors, Yavapai County.

GENTLEMEN: Complying with your request for the citizens of the various precincts to meet on February 15, 1904, for the purpose of expressing their feeling in regard to the disposition of the present Congress of the United States of merging this Territory with New Mexico and admitting the same into the Federal Union as one State, the citizens of Bumble Bee precinct, irrespective of political affiliations, beg to state that they are as a unit opposed to be admitted as a State jointly with New Mexico.

Believing that the Territory of Arizona, by her population, taxable property, her unsurpassed school system, and civilization, is justly entitled to single statehood, without being merged or joined to New Mexico, any measure coming before us having for its object joint statehood will meet our entire and emphatic disapprobation.

A. J. MCPHEE, President.

Resolutions passed by Humbug voting precinct.

COLUMBIA, ARIZ., February 15, 1904.

Pursuant to public announcement, a mass meeting of the citizens of Humbug voting precinct, Yavapai County, Ariz., was held at Columbia on the 15th day of February, 1904, to express the wishes of the citizens on the question of the admission of Arizona to statehood. A. H. Hibbard was chosen chairman and M. J. Nolan secretary.

The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas public attention has been called to a movement in the Congress of the United States to make of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico a single State, and whereas Governor A. O. Brodie, of Arizona, has called upon the board of supervisors of the various counties in the Territory to request the citizens of their respective voting precincts to assemble in mass meetings and express their opinions on the said proposed admission of the two Territories as one State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Humbug voting precinct, of all political parties, are unalterably opposed to the joint admission of Arizona and New Mexico as one State.

That we consider such a measure would be foolish, unjust, and the source of unnecessary expense, unavoidable hardships, and endless contentions between the diverse interests of the two Territories.

That while we earnestly desire statehood, we would immeasurably prefer our Territorial conditicn continued indefinitely than to become a part of an unwieldy and discordant Commonwealth.

We solemnly protest against this Territory being used as a picturesque puppet of political expediency, implied probation, or fantastic folly. We do not wish to be united to New Mexico for State purposes, nor to Alaska for judicial purposes, nor to Porto Rico for educational purposes, nor to any other community or section for any purpose except to be admitted to our rightful place—into the Union as a single promising State. We seek this not as a favor, but as a right. We not only believe, but we know, that we are big enough, old enough, strong enough, and enlightened enough to assume the responsibilities, fulfill the duties, and work out the destinies of a progressive State to the mutual advantage of Arizona and of the American Union.

A. H. HIBBARD, Chairman.
M. J. NOLAN, Secretary.

FEBRUARY 15, 1904.

We feel that if the Territory of Arizona is not entitled to admission without the sisterhood of some other Territory, then we do sincerely wish to remain a Territory. And we hereby affix our signatures to this our unanimous decision.

MCCABE, YAVAPAI COUNTY, ARIZ.,
February 14, 1904.

Hon. JOHN F. WILSON:

We, the citizens of McCabe, at a mass meeting, do wish to enter a protest against the joint statehood of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico for the following reasons, viz: We wish to draw special attention to a careful comparison of our public schools and school system with those of the States; And we further wish to draw attention to a careful analysis of what the personnel of our citizens is composed, and further of our public spirit.

Therefore we, the representatives of all parties, are further resolved to rather remain as a Territory in preference to joint statehood with our sister Territory, New Mexico.

T. J. ARNOLD, Chairman,
And 168 others.

We, the undersigned voters of Placereta precinct, in response as to how we stand on Arizona and New Mexico being admitted together as one State, are strictly against it first, last, and always. We think that Arizona is large enough and has population enough and wealth enough to be entitled to be admitted alone, and we prefer remaining a Territory than to be admitted with New Mexico as one State.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman tell us something about the future of that Territory?

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. I can not say anything further about the national policy. I take it that all of you know it. So far as the revolution is concerned I take that as a conclusion, a deduction from which you can not escape. If you establish a policy and carry it on for a hundred years without a break, and now propose to turn around and overthrow it, that is revolution, is it not?

This bill does it in two different ways. It changes the policy of admission. It changes the policy of making States upon fair bases. I can not go any further on that line.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been said that we all live in two or three valleys. The man who said that never saw that country, and he has not read much about it. It has been said that there are millions and millions of acres in that Territory which can be converted to no use on earth. The man who said that does not know what he is talking about. He never saw that country. He never studied it. If he had done these things he would never have said that. Some of it is high, rocky land, of course, as much so as any in Maine—land that will never be tilled except in what we call "the parks," which are tilled; but it is the finest range and grazing land in the world. On these lands, upon which the gentleman says a home can never be made, millions of dollars are being made every year from the grass that grows upon the soil. On the high ranges, where they say a home can never be made, we are taking out of the bowels of the earth, from a few mines, more than $43,000,000 every year. This is a mining country, but its resources are scarcely scratch.

Now, if you believe statistics, I will give you the statistics here that you may draw your own conclusions. Without comment I am going to call your attention to the reported official statistics of the Territory.

Arizona has an area of 113,939 square miles, or 72,792,500 acres.

Its vast area is distributed as follows: Forty-two million acres grazing land; 30,000,000 acres mineral land, the grazing and mineral lands blending; 10,000,000 acres agricultural land. One million acres of this agricultural land has already been reclaimed, and 9,000,000 acres more may be.

The grazing belt extends from the line of New Mexico on the east to the timber belt 140 miles west. The timber belt is a vast area of great pine forests, containing nearly 10,000 square miles of as fine timber as there is in the world.

MINERAL LANDS.

The mineral belt of this Territory is one of the largest in the world. It reaches from Nevada and Utah in the northwest, passing diagonally through the Territory into the State of Sonora, Mexico, in the southeast, a distance in length of 437 miles by about 100 miles in width. There are now 1,840 patented mines in operation in said Territory, and thousands of mining claims are being operated and developed which are not patented. Out of these mines is taken annually, in round numbers, $43,000,000, and the development of this great mineral belt is very fast growing. The output of these mines consists of the precious metals—gold and silver—and copper, and the testimony is that this great mineral belt is scarcely yet prospected, notwithstanding that it takes out $43,000,000 per year.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS.

The great portion of the agricultural lands lie south of the mineral belt just referred to, and are known as the Salt, Gila, and Colorado river valleys. Agriculture there is maintained by irrigation, and they have, all told, over 800 miles of irrigating canals and laterals for that use. In the Salt River Valley alone there are 152,000 acres in cultivation by means of irrigation. The receipts for the products sold last year are given below:

Hay	$1,200,000
Fruits	80,000
Stock fattened and sold from pastures and hay not otherwise sold.	1,500,000
Honey	80,000
Butter and cheese	76,000
Poultry and eggs	50,000
Total	2,906,000

In the Graham Valley on the upper Gila about 40 per cent of that amount was produced. The agricultural products of the balance of the agricultural portion of the Territory are not known, but they are vast.

PRODUCTIVE POWER OF THE SOIL.

The soil of this agricultural country is very deep and has wonderful productive power. They produce here all the tropical fruits, as well as cereals, cantaloupes, alfalfa, hay, etc. It has been shown that the soil yields an annual return per acre as follows: Almonds, $75 to $150 net; cantaloupes, from $75 to $110 net; alfalfa, from $36 to $56 net, and so on, showing the productive power of the soil to be wonderfully great.

The Salt River and Gila valleys converge and come together and have a length of about 368 miles in extent, making an area of country susceptible of reclamation and cultivation greater than the valley of the Nile.

PRODUCTION OF LUMBER.

This is a great industry in Arizona. There are three great lumber companies there whose plants will each cut 200,000 feet of lumber per day. Their returns are about 200,000,000 feet annually.

RAILROAD FACILITIES.

There are over 1,400 miles of railroad in the Territory and others fast building.

There are two great trunk lines passing through Arizona from east to west—the Santa Fe Pacific through the northern portion and the Southern Pacific through the southern part. The Santa Fe, Prescott and Phoenix runs north and south, connecting with the Maricopa and Phoenix Railroad, which connects with the Southern Pacific. There are feeder lines of railroad branching out in all directions and aiding in the development of the mineral section.

The El Paso and Southwestern, owned by Phelps, Dodge & Co., is built in the southeastern part of the Territory, reaching from the grazing land in the south to the great mines at Bisbee and other places. The Arizona and New Mexico is another eastern railroad, built by a Scotch corporation for the purpose of handling the copper in the Clifton and Morenci country and the interstate commerce passing into Mexico from that line. The United Verde and Pacific in the north, connecting the Black Hills mineral section with the Santa Fe, Prescott and Phoenix, is another system for developing the heavy mineral country. All of these railroads are in a prosperous condition and their business is increasing about 33 per cent annually, and that is about the per cent of their annual increase for the last five years.

TAXABLE PROPERTY.

The railroad property costs not less than $60,000,000, and its assessed valuation is $6,000,000.

Mines and realty, value more than $200,000,000; taxed, improvements and all, $2,724,238. So the taxable property is assessed at $43,880,041 when it is really worth $400,000,000.

POPULATION.

The census gives Arizona 122,921. As given by counties last fall it was 178,600, and the immense increase to-day has no doubt reached the 200,000 limit. The population is almost entirely American, not 700 of it having been born in Mexico, and only about 4,400, all told, of the population were born in foreign countries. It is an intelligent population. Outside of 27,500 Indians, not taxed, who belong to the illiterate class, there is not 1 per cent of the population illiterate. All do their own reading and writing in the transaction of their affairs.

LAW AND SCHOOL.

Law.—The Territory of Arizona has as fine a code of laws as any of the older sections of the Union, and they are as well enforced as anywhere in the land. Therefore life and property rights are as well protected there as anywhere from the Atlantic coast to the Rocky Mountains. She has her own capitol and other public buildings—up-to-date and new, paid for by herself—and is thus ready prepared for housekeeping as a State as well as any State in the Union.

School facilities.—Arizona has its own university, with mining and agricultural schools connected therewith. Two normal schools, 10 high schools, 278 common schools.

The number of pupils from 6 to 21 years attending public schools are 25,951; from 8 to 14 years in other schools, 13,311.

SCHOOL PROPERTY AND VALUE.

Common school buildings and furniture	$727,182
Value of apparatus	21,802
Value of school libraries	9,144

Number of male teachers, 115; female, 359.

Average wages paid males, $80.33 per month; females, $67.53 per month.

The school fund collected for 1903	$515,633.49
Amount expended, 1903	415,243.15
Balance cash on hand for the present year	100,390.04

POSTAL RECEIPTS.

The postal receipts from the first and second class offices alone, 1903, were $138,302—16 per cent more than in any previous year.

The great proportion of the agricultural lands lie south of the mineral belt just referred to, and are known as the Salt River, Gila, and Colorado River valleys, but outside of these there are about twenty-three smaller river valleys—and also draws, etc., which are not termed streams at all—all well populated; large voting precincts, and all read and register their own ballots without either advice or direction. The gentleman from North Dakota never heard this.

Mr. SPALDING. I have been hearing that all winter.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. The gentleman has heard it from Tom Dick Story. I have seen it. I did not get it from the "Arizona Kicker" on the outside or from the "red-blanket man" from the mountains.

Now, there is another thing I desire to call your attention to, something that is certainly not without merit, and that is the productive power of the soil. I want to tell you gentlemen that you do not have to put the seed in the ground with a hypodermic syringe and bring them up with a mustard plaster, as is almost necessary on the sterile hills of New England. There is nothing that can be grown on the Nile as strong or stronger than it can be grown there.

LITERACY.

Now, I want to say to you further, my friends, we have been represented heretofore as standing 29 in percentage to illiteracy. I want to show to you gentlemen how unfair that statement was. We have 27,500 blanket Indians in that country that are not educated. They are illiterate, and they made about 29 per cent of the country at the time the census was taken in 1900. This is charged to us as illiteracy, and the man that had it done did not have the fairness to say to the country where he got it. I want to say to you now not a single adult in that Territory can you find, and you may search for a year, that will not sign his own contract, do his own dealings, read his own agreements, conclude for himself his own business. There is not 1 per cent, not three-fourths of 1 per cent, of the population of that Territory that would stand upon the illiterate side.

I was over East the other day in a great city and I did not find one man in twenty who could tell me who his Congressman was. You can not find it so with us. We have more graduates of universities and first-class colleges in that Territory per capita than any State in this Union. We have greater school facilities per capita than any State of the Union. There is no question at all about that, and anyone that inspects it will see. That statement, therefore, has been made without any justification.

Now, I have given these facts to you, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in order to show our ability to take care of ourselves. [Loud applause.]

LOYALTY.

Now, our people are as loyal as your people or anybody else. They answer to the long roll as quickly as any people on earth. When the declaration of war was made against Spain for inhumanity and for sinking the Maine, our people were the first to enlist. They were first to fill their quota of troops, and demanded to enter more. They were first upon the field. They were first on foreign soil. They were first to face death, and to face it with a smile. They were first to bleed for national honor and the glory of the flag. They were first to lay down their lives for these, and they were first to show you how well they remembered the Maine.

I now notice an error in the majority report and an objection or two to our admission as reasons for these hard, heartless, revolutionary proceedings, and shall conclude.

The majority states that the admission has been on the unit of representation in Congress. This is a radical error, for such has never been the case. That has never been considered and urged as a basis for action at any time in the admission of any State, except in the Arkansas case, and that was finally waived and surrendered. Take, for instance, the admission of Oregon, against which there was a great cry that it was sterile, that it was barren, that it was valueless, that it was too far away, that its domain was too great, and that therefore it could never be or become a valuable State in the Commonwealth.

It was urged that the very name condemned it—"oregona," the name of a stinking weed on the seashore. It was said that it could never be applied to a State. But after the basis had been gone over, the rule of action and the conduct of a government on it through the course of almost a century thoroughly understood, that State was admitted with a population of 52,466 people, when the basis of representation at that time was 93,423. It was not considered in that case, and that is a part of the country obtained by treaty.

Take, for instance, the State of Nevada, when it was admitted with 42,491 inhabitants. At that time the basis of representation was over 107,000. It certainly was not urged, and if urged, it was not followed out then. As a matter of fact, it was not urged.

Take the State of Idaho. It was admitted with a population of 82,585. The ratio at that time was 173,901. It was not urged or considered then. Idaho was admitted with less population, and has less now than we have, and no one can deny that it is a growing Commonwealth. It is a prosperous country. It is a valuable State; and no one would now say for a minute that it was not admitted properly.

Take Wyoming, with 60,705 people, admitted at a time when the ratio was 173,901. It was not urged then. The admission of Kansas was brought about in the same way. When Kansas was admitted the ratio was 93,422. She had at that time less than 77,000 people, according to her census. At the census following her admission she had 107,000. All of these new States have been admitted without reference to the unit of representation or the ratio; and if the point was ever raised it was brushed aside by the policy of the country.

Every one of these States having been admitted without reference to this question, and nearly every one of them with less population and less taxable property than we, they were all admitted upon the theory that they were able to take care of themselves then, and that they would subsequently grow up to be powerful and prosperous States, which they have done.

So I say that for all these years—for the century and a quarter behind us—it has never been urged against the admission of a Territory that it did not contain more people or as many as the ratio or unit of representation in the House of Representatives.

THE MORMON QUESTION.

It has been stated as an objection that the Mormon people live there and that the practice of polygamy is rife. To this I must on this occasion, as I have on others, enter an emphatic denial.

So far as the practice of polygamy is concerned, I can say that it is not practiced there, because when practices of that kind are carried on evidence will necessarily exist—just as that when you travel through sand you make tracks—but you see no signs of it there. For eighteen years I have been in every settlement among them, and have yet to see any signs of polygamy, and I looked for it with a good deal of interest when I first went there. But when I learned those people, I learned them to be as true Americans as live under the sun. I know that is a fact. When the time came that tried men's nerves and their hearts, when the long roll was sounded and the battle flag was raised in 1898, they rushed to the country's aid as quickly as the nerviest of men.

They are people who attend strictly to their own business; they stay at home, they till the soil, they worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, they pay their debts, and they tell the truth. They do not practice polygamy. Among other things they figure in politics. They send legislators to our legislature, and never have I yet seen, nay, for the first time I have to see, a time come when there was legislation pending for the elevation of the moral mind, that was for the education of the young, the promotion of the morals of the country, but what they were for it to a man, and I have for the first time to see an effort to enact a law that might reflect against the morals of the country or against the elevation of the young mind but what they were opposed to it to a man. These things, gentlemen, I know to be true. They have their schools, more numerous than any other people in the Territory, and they have children and they send them to school, and they adopt rules of school government that are models for the most fastidious.

I say that I have reached my conclusion about the Mormon people because I could not help myself. I did not want to. I believed the other way. I was as thin skinned as some of these people who are here in the East howling against them. But since I have known the reverse of what I first thought about them to be true, I must admit it. I have found in favor of those people the facts I have stated, and these are the reasons I have for defending them here and elsewhere, and I shall do it though the sun shall cease to shine.

PLATFORM PLEDGES.

I say now, in conclusion, that these revolutionary proceedings, harsh and compassionless as they are, are not without political significance and perhaps forebodings. The great Republican party in its last convention in Philadelphia, in 1900, the party whose commission you of the majority hold and whose pledges you should carry out, solemnly declared in its platform, in the form of a pledge to the Territories and a promise to the country, that the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma should be admitted into the sisterhood of States. The language of that pledge and promise is short, concise, and strong. It is in the following language:

> We favor home rule for and the early admission to statehood of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

This pledge was made to the country and declared as a principle, and because of it appeals were made for the suffrage of the country.

You of the majority, by your actions in this proceeding, revolutionary as it is, are writing across the face of that platform pledge insincerity, broken pledge, violated promise, and bad faith to the country who believed the great party who made the pledge. We have witnessed with astonishment the manner in which you have done these things—seeing in the beginning that you, the leaders of that side, were not able to control the rank and file of the majority in this House by persuasion and argument, therefore by degrees you gathered enough force to drive the whole representation of the Republican party, except two brave and noble souls, into line by forced party caucus. I say "drive," because that is the plain English of it—for this you have done by forced party caucus. And then, in order to prevent its disclosure and free discussion of the merits of the measure, you have brought in a gag rule limiting the time of debate to such a minimum that complete exposure of your revolutionary policies can not be made upon this floor, all in order to carry out this policy of bad faith and broken pledges.

I know it has been said by some of you, "Darn the platform; it amounts to nothing but to get in on." That may be so as to you, but of these things the country has a right to be informed, in order that the country may make up its mind on the question as to whether or not when you have violated your pledges in one respect and on one great question, and overturned and destroyed a nation's policy, a policy over one hundred years old, that you will not, when it may suit your convenience, do the same thing on other great questions. The maxim "Falsum in uno, falsum in omnibus," may in the minds of the country apply. True, the Democratic party made the same sort of a pledge, and the Democracy is here attempting with all its power to execute it. Not because of being forced by a forced party caucus or a gag rule, but because of the good faith they owe to the country, which can only be demonstrated by the execution of that promise. We are here in line, without a nay on this side, in obedience to a party pledge, and not in obedience to the forced party caucus or a gag rule, attempting to carry out the pledges of the party to the Territories and the promises made to the country.

We have made these statements because we feel that our duty would not be fully done unless notes of warning should be sounded calling the attention of the country to the danger that confronts it when the great interests of the country are placed in the hands of the party which violates its pledges and by revolutionary proceedings destroys the policy of the nation.

In order that these revolutionary proceedings shall not be carried into final effect, whatever may happen here, we appeal to the great honest American heart and American manhood, both in power and out, to intervene and prevent it. Shall it be done? We wait with solicitude, and look for the final end.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, is not there a mistake in the time? Did the gentleman not begin at 3.10?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman was recognized for one hour.

Mr. LLOYD. And he has spoken for fifty-two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRUMPACKER). Sixty minutes.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks further in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry it is impossible for me to agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] in reference to the present condition of the Indian tribes in the Indian Territory. I can not agree with him that in passing this measure we are violating existing treaties or agreements with them. It is true, as he said, that in the former treaties it was understood and agreed between this Government and the Indian tribes that their lands should not be included within the bounds of any State or Territory without their consent, but the gentleman must remember there were certain other conditions in those treaties. The Government of the United States promised certain protection and granted certain rights, and the tribes agreed to do certain things, but if the gentleman has read the history of the Indian Territory he can come to but one conclusion, and that is that the Government of the United States failed to keep its promises to those Indians, and the Indians failed to keep their part of the contract with the Government of the United States.

Both parties agreed to keep the white man out of the Territory, and yet the Indians, having governments of their own, enacted laws and invited white people to the Indian Territory. The Indians also agreed that each Indian member of the tribe should have an equal right with every other Indian in each and every portion of the Territory.

By reason of the laws enacted by the tribes the conditions became so bad that it was necessary to adopt a new policy in regard to the Five Tribes, and a few years ago there was a change of policy. There was great necessity for that change, but you must remember that the change was not made without the consent of the tribes. People have been attracted there—some by the allurements of the soil, some by the spirit of speculation, and some by the desire for adventure.

In 1893 a commission was appointed to negotiate with the Indians of the Territory for a change. The chairman was the late Senator Dawes, than whom the Indian never had a better friend. [Applause.]

The Dawes Commission reported in 1894 as follows:

These treaties, however, embraced stipulations equally clear, that these tribes were to hold this Territory for the use and enjoyment of all Indians belonging to their respective tribes, so that every Indian, as is expressed in some of the treaties, "shall have an equal right with every other Indian in each and every portion of the Territory," and the further stipulation that their laws should not conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

* * * * * * *

The executory conditions contained in the treaties have become impossible of execution. It is no longer possible for the Indians to secure to each individual Indian his full enjoyment, in common with other Indians, of the common property of the Territory.

* * * * * * *

It has been made clear that under its operations, imperfectly as it has been carried out, its effect has been to retard rather than to promote civilization, to impair rather than strengthen the observance of law and order and regard for human life and human rights or the protection or promotion of a virtuous life. To such a degree has this sad deterioration become evident that today a most deplorable and dangerous condition of affairs exist in the Territory, causing widespread alarm and demanding most serious consideration.

* * * * * * *

In every respect the present condition of affairs demonstrates that the permission to govern themselves under the Constitution of the United States, which was originally embraced in the treaty, has proved a failure.

* * * * * * *

Besides these, they have, by their laws, invited men from the border States to become their employees in the Territory, receiving into their treasuries a monthly tax for the privilege of such employment. They have also provided by law for the intermarriage of white persons with their citizens and adopted them into their tribes. By operation of these laws large numbers of white people have become adopted citizens, participating in the benefits of citizenship. A single instance of such marriage has enabled one white man under the laws to appropriate to his exclusive use 50,000 acres of valuable land.

* * * * * * *

Corruption of the grossest kind, openly and unblushingly practiced, has found its way into every branch of the service of the tribal governments. All branches of the governments are reeking with it, and so common has it become that no attempt at concealment is thought necessary. The governments have fallen into the hands of a few able and energetic Indian citizens, nearly all mixed blood, and adopted whites, who have so administered their affairs and have enacted such laws that they are enabled to appropriate to their own exclusive use almost the entire property of the Territory of any kind that can be rendered profitable and available.

* * * * * * *

The original idea of a community of property has been entirely lost sight of and disregarded in every branch of the administration of their affairs by the governments which have been permitted to control this Territory under the treaty stipulations, which are now being invoked by those who are in this manner administering them, as a protection for their personal holdings and enterprises.

* * * * * * *

Justice has been utterly perverted in the hands of those who have thus laid hold of the forms of its administration in this Territory, and who have inflicted irreparable wrongs and outrages upon a helpless people for their own gain. The United States put the title to a domain of countless wealth and unmeasured resources in these several tribes or nationalities, but it was a conveyance in trust for specific uses, clearly indicated in the treaties themselves, and for no other purpose. It was for the use and enjoyment in common by each and every citizen of this tribe of each and every part of the Territory, thus tersely expressed in one of the treaties: "To be held in common, so that each and every member of either tribe shall have an equal undivided interest in the whole." The tribes can make no other use of it. They have no power to grant it to anyone, or to grant to anyone exclusively any portion of it. These tribal governments have wholly perverted their high trusts, and it is the plain duty of the United States to enforce the trust it has so created and recover for its original uses the domain and all the gains derived from the perversions of the trust or discharge the trustee.

The United States also granted to these tribes the power of self-government, not to conflict with the Constitution. They have demonstrated their incapacity to so govern themselves, and no higher duty can rest upon the Government that granted this authority than to revoke it when it has so lamentably failed.

This report was signed by Henry L. Dawes, a Republican, and Meredith H. Kidd and Archibald S. McKennon, both Democrats.

In the report for 1895 the commission says:

More than a third of the whole territory of one of the nations is exclusively appropriated and fenced in by barbed wire to the sole use of a few citizens for pasturage. In other of these nations, under similar legislation, vast and rich deposits of coal of incalculable value have been appropriated by a few to the exclusion of the rest of the tribe and to the great profit of those who operate them and appropriate their products to their individual use. Similar legislation has enabled private individuals to appropriate the timber of vast pine forests and denude the public domain of this essential element of future development and growth. In short, almost everything of tribal property in which every citizen Indian has of right an equal share has, if of any value, been appropriated to the use and gain of the few, while the real full blood has been left destitute and crowded out upon the mountains and unproductive land to take care of himself as best he can.

* * * * * * *

If the end of government and the administration of justice is the protection of the life and liberty and property of the citizen, then the governments and courts of these nations are a failure, for they afford that protection to neither. They are powerless to these ends, and the victims of this misrule are helpless sufferers at the mercy of the malign influences which dominate every department and branch of the governments as administered here. It matters little, except as to the character of the remedy, whether this failure and misrule arises from the impotence or willful and corrupt purpose, the evil consequences are incalculable and its continuance unjustifiable. It is no less true now than when the commission reported last year that "all of the functions of the so-called governments of these five tribes have become utterly unable to protect the life or property rights of the citizen. Their courts of justice have become powerless and paralyzed. Violence, robbery, and murder have become almost of daily occurrence, and no effective measures of restraint or punishment are put forth by these governments and courts to suppress crime. Railroad trains continue to be stopped and their passengers robbed in the very presence of those in authority. A reign of terror exists, and barbarous outrages almost impossible of belief are enacted, and the perpetrators hardly find it necessary to shun daily intercourse with their victims."

This report was signed by Henry L. Dawes, Republican, and Frank C. Armstrong, Archibald S. McKennon, Thomas B. Cabaniss, and Alexander B. Montgomery, all Democrats. These reports show the great necessity for the enactment, of the legislation which has been passed in recent years. Members of the commission appeared before the Committee on Indian Affairs and really recommended, as every member of the Indian Committee will tell you, the abolishment of the tribal government and that no attention whatever be paid to the treaties; and I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the very bill I introduced in 1898 was introduced to prevent the passage of the bill that had been recommended by the Dawes Commission, and that bill would have wiped the Five Civilized Tribes off the face of the earth without their consent.

I introduced what was known as an "Act to protect the people of the Indian Territory" in 1898, which became a law and was voted for by every member of the committee, Democrats and Republicans alike. That measure was passed. After it became a law the various tribes entered into agreements with this Government. What were the agreements? The first was made with the Chickasaws and Choctaws, in which they stated that it was agreed that the tribal government should continue for eight years from March 4, 1898, and contained the following:

This stipulation is made in the belief that a tribal government so modified will prove so satisfactory that there will be no need or desire for further changes until the lands now occupied by the Five Tribes shall, in the opinion of Congress, be prepared for admission as a State to the Union.

There is nothing said in that about the consent of the Indians, and when they voted and adopted that treaty a majority of the tribes virtually said to this Government, "We will be ready for statehood in 1906." More than that, there was a provision in that treaty in which they agreed that their tribal government should expire in 1906.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HAMILTON. How much more time would the gentleman desire?

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to have about five minutes more.

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. CURTIS. I see, gentlemen, it will be impossible to go into detail in reference to these treaties, but I want to say the same kind of agreement was made with the Cherokees, Creeks, and Seminoles, and in those agreements a provision was contained, and a majority of the members of each tribe consented to it, that their tribal government should expire in 1906.

And so each tribe has virtually said: "We propose to be ready for statehood in 1906."

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There is nothing in that, however, that suggested that they would be ready in conjunction with Oklahoma.

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, no; but I will touch on that a little later. In 1901, to show you that these Indians were preparing themselves for statehood, upon their request, every member of the Five Civilized Tribes was made a citizen of the United States. Why? Because they wanted to prepare for statehood. I believe I know the people of the Indian Territory as well as does any man upon this floor, and I say that 90 per cent of the people of the Indian Territory—Indians, I mean—are in favor of single statehood and not double statehood, and I believe that 90 per cent of the people of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory are in favor of single statehood and not double statehood. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman if he does not know that the chairman of this committee received a protest from one of the chiefs of the Indian tribes?

Mr. CURTIS. I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, that he received it from some of the chiefs and leading members of some of the tribes, and I want to tell you the kind of men in the Territory that are anxious for double statehood are some of the chiefs, the leading men who have been controlling the affairs of those people and living fat off them for the last fifty years, men who hope, if double statehood is given, that they may secure some office at the hands of the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman believes that he is correct in respect to that and that our impression is wrong, is it not just and proper to submit to the people of the Indian Territory the question as to whether they shall be forced into a union with Oklahoma or not?

Mr. CURTIS. They shall have the right to vote on this proposition. It is to be submitted to them.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. But if every one of them were to vote against it and Oklahoma were to vote for it, the latter is so strong numerically that the propostion would be carried.

Mr. CURTIS. But the gentleman assumes that Oklahoma will vote solidly for it. I believe that 90 per cent of both Oklahoma and the Indian Territory will vote for it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Then submit it to them separately and let us see what they will do.

Mr. CURTIS. As I say, in 1901 they were all made citizens of the United States at their request, and by passing this bill we are not violating a single treaty with the Indian tribes, not one. The tribal governments expire in 1906.

There will be no tribes after 1906, and to-day they are citizens of the United States. There are between five and six hundred thousand white people in the Indian Territory. I am in favor of the passage of this bill because I believe that the Indian Territory and Oklahoma will make one of the grandest States of this Union. [Applause on the Republican side.] I believe that they are ready for statehood now, and I hope the gentlemen on the other side will vote for this measure. I can not agree with gentlemen that any man on this side of the Chamber is advocating this measure because he believes that it will give us a Republican State.

I say now to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber that if they are laboring under the impression that we are going to get a Republican State down there they are mistaken, for Oklahoma and the Indian Territory together will be Democratic: New Mexico and Arizona will be Democratic. But I believe those people are ready for statehood, and I am ready to vote for it, whether they are Democrats or Republicans. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some extracts from the report of the Dawes Commission, which I did not have time to read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, during the few minutes allotted to me I shall address my remarks to that part of this bill which provides statehood for what are at this time Oklahoma and the Indian Territory. There will be, as I take it, no contention as to whether the people of these Territories are entitled to statehood. There would be no question as to their being ready at this time if it were not for the landed conditions existing in the Indian Territory. Those twin Territories at this time have, in my judgment, about a million and a half of people, a greater population by four times than any other Territory has ever had at the time of its admission into the Union. It has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] that the people of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory ought to say whether or not they are to be united into one State.

I desire to make the observation here and now that there is not to-day a political organization in those Territories which has not declared for the union of those two Territories into one State. [Applause on the Republican side.] This bill does not exactly conform to my idea of what we wanted at the time of the convening of this body. I at that time introduced a bill providing for the admission of Oklahoma, with the further provision that if in the wisdom of Congress the Indian Territory should come later, let it come, and that has always been the position of the people of Oklahoma, not only of the Republican party but of the Democratic party; and I undertake to say here and now that if this bill passes the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States there will not be one single vote against it in Oklahoma or the Indian Territory. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I think I know the position of my people upon this proposition. I know the record of the political organizations of that country. I know the desires of the people of those two Territories. I have lived in Oklahoma ten years and in the adjacent country about twenty-two years.

What is the history of the Democratic party in Oklahoma upon this proposition? Two years ago that organization declared for the union of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory—exactly the opposite of the position of the gentleman on the other side of the House at this time. They made the campaign upon the proposition that Oklahoma should wait for statehood until the landed conditions in the Indian Territory were such as to justify the admission of that Territory. That was the position of the Democratic party in the Indian Territory at that time, and it is the position of that party at this time upon the question of statehood.

Not only that. While the declaration of the Republican party was slightly different, declaring in favor of the bill which passed this body during the Fifty-seventh Congress, that declaration provided that if, in the wisdom of this body, the Indian Territory should subsequently be attached to Oklahoma, let it come. That is the position of the Republican party in Oklahoma. And within the last two weeks the Republican party of my Territory has indorsed the Hamilton bill, as has the Republican party of the Indian Territory. So there is no division of sentiment in those Territories as to whether we should have statehood according to the provisions of the bill now before us.

The argument of the gentleman on the other side, that the people of these two Territories should have the right to express themselves upon the question of this union, need not worry any Member of this House for a single moment, because when those people have an opportunity to vote they will unanimously stand shoulder to shoulder, both the Republicans and the Democrats, for every provision of this bill. [Applause.]

One other observation with reference to the minority report on this bill. In that report I find the following language:

Another objection to the bill as it is framed is in the election management provided for Indian Territory. Authority is given to Federal officials to fix the various districts which are to select delegates to the constitutional convention and then to define the election precincts and appoint the judges who are to hold the elections. Returns are made to these Federal officials to be canvassed, and their action is final. There is nowhere any provision for any minority representation, excepting only that one of the judges at each election precinct must belong to a different political party to the others. In our judgment, nonpartisan commissions should have charge of the elections, and the districts should be proportioned among the various recording districts as nearly according to the population as may be.

Mr. Speaker, in this case we found that they had no machinery for elections in the Indian Territory. The machinery had to be builded by the provisions of this bill. It seems to me that those provisions are absolutely fair. They provide that each political organization may have representation upon the election board. I can not for the life of me see why this provision should be assailed or called "partisan." I could not understand by what method it could be made any fairer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I should like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma whether it is not the fact that these Federal judges are Republicans and have in their charge the formation of all the Congressional districts in both the Indian Territory and Oklahoma?

Mr. McGUIRE. That is not a fact.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then does not the gentleman think that that is partisanship and would result in gerrymandering that Territory in order to get control of the representation on this floor? And does not the gentleman think it would have been fairer that both parties should have been represented in laying out these districts?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Allow me to say that it is only in the Indian Territory where the elections are to be conducted under the management of the judges. In Oklahoma the elections will be conducted according to the laws prevailing there.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But you would have no trouble in the Indian Territory in finding some rock-ribbed Democrats.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Yes; we shall find some there; and not only that, but we shall find a majority of Democrats in the convention that is to be held.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then why not give us a fair deal?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. We have done so.

Mr. McGUIRE. It seems to me it is to be presumed that the judges of the Indian Territory will do their duty. It seems to me it is to be presumed that they are going to provide districts in that Territory which are fair to all alike. I suppose it might be possible, if those gentlemen were not honest, if they were not fair, if they wanted to take advantage, they could do so; but I can not understand how we could provide for a condition here that would make it different. Those gentlemen are Federal judges, and it is presumed they will do their duty. I presume it was the understanding and the purpose of this committee that those people should have this Territory districted as fairly as possible, fair to all alike without regard to political organization.

Mr. LLOYD. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is any minority representation anywhere, except in the appointment of one judge in each precinct, in the holding of the election?

Mr. McGUIRE. No, sir; at least I did not intend to make any other statement.

Mr. LLOYD. Then it is true that the whole election machinery, as stated in the views of the minority, is in the hands of the dominant party, excepting only one judge in each election precinct.

Mr. McGUIRE. Yes; and that is true to-day in Oklahoma Territory and true in every State in the Union where they have general elections, excepting some sections I might mention, where there is no minority representation at all. In my own Territory there are some counties where one political organization has a majority upon the election board. In another county where there is a majority of the other political organization, that organization has a majority upon the election board. The condition will exist in the Indian Territory, and I can not understand how it could be avoided.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman could appoint an election commission composed of reputable members of the respective political parties. That is the way it could be avoided.

Mr. McGUIRE. I suppose it might be done by appointing an even number, but that is not usually done in the different States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. You would have a majority representation all right, but that would give us some minority representation, which is not now given by this bill.

Mr. McGUIRE. There is now a minority representation under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I should like to ask the gentleman one question just upon that point.

Mr. McGUIRE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. How are these commissioners of election selected?

Mr. McGUIRE. I will read the provision of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I will not ask you to do that, but are they to be nominated by the chairmen of their respective committees in the counties? If not, why not?

Mr. McGUIRE. It is left for the Federal judges to provide the machinery, and it provides for one election judge different in politics or political convictions from the other members of the board.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It looks to me as though it would be fairer to let each party select its own representatives.

Mr. McGUIRE. I presume that may be done. There is nothing in this bill to prevent that.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. We do that in Kentucky. It has been the law there now for several years.

Mr. LACEY. I call attention to the fact that this is only for this one election, and it is a nonpartisan election.

Mr. McGUIRE. Why, certainly, it is presumed, I should think, to be a nonpartisan election. This is only for the purpose of electing delegates to the constitutional convention. And inasmuch as the election machinery had to be made by the parties preparing this bill, I do not see where any improvement could be made upon this provision.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How can the gentleman say it is a nonpartisan measure for election when the bill is pressed through the House without sufficient discussion or any opportunity for amendment, and when the enabling act goes there and clothes the Federal authorities with the precincting, the districting, and the canvassing of the returns—the Federal officers now there clothed with all these powers in Indian Territory?

Mr. McGUIRE. I will ask the gentleman whether he did not at this session of Congress himself introduce into this body a bill for the union of the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory into one State?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes, a fair bill; and after the majority members upon the Committee on Territories had brought to the committee this partisan measure I managed to get a few words of the Robinson bill into it, providing for one judge upon the election boards, the only nonpartisan feature in the whole election and convention features.

Mr. McGUIRE. I submit that a number of the provisions of the bill were taken from the bill introduced by the gentleman at this session of Congress. The provision of the bill referred to is as follows:

That the judges of the United States courts in Indian Territory shall, for the purpose of said election, establish and define the necessary election precincts and appoint three judges of election for each precinct, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, which judges may appoint the necessary clerk or clerks; that the said judges of election so appointed shall supervise the election in their respective precincts and canvass and make due return of the vote cast to the judges of the United States courts in said Indian Territory, who shall constitute the ultimate and final canvassing board of said election and whose certificates of election shall be prima facie evidence as to the election of delegates, and the election for delegates in the Territory of Oklahoma shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates of all persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said Territory regulating elections for Delegates to Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are some conditions in the Indian Territory to which I desire to invite the attention of this body. There are at this time about 200,000 school children in the rural districts in the Indian Territory that are absolutely without any school privileges. They have no schoolhouses; they have no school-district organizations; they can vote no bonds for school purposes; they can do nothing toward the organization of school districts, and they have no opportunity for school advantages.

I want to make an observation here which will indicate to you the result of a condition of this kind. The census of 1900 shows about 5 per cent of illiteracy in Oklahoma Territory. Just over the line, in the Indian Territory, with the same kind and character of people, people coming from the same States which had populated Oklahoma, we find that there was about 16 per cent of illiteracy. In Oklahoma we had district schools. In Oklahoma we had had school-district organization from the first settlement of that Territory. In the Indian Territory they had none.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that we can improve, and that we ought to improve, this condition; we ought to do something for those people; we ought to give them statehood; and I say without fear of contradiction that at this time the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory are praying that this bill will pass this body. We are unanimous upon the proposition. There is no dissension at home. There is no negative voice in the Indian Territory. There is no one in Oklahoma who would defeat this bill; and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is the duty of the American Congress to see that this bill is passed and that a million and a half of people in that Territory get statehood. We are better entitled to statehood than the people of any other Territory ever admitted at the time of its admission into the Union. I desire to call your attention to some of the conditions that exist in those Territories and some of the natural conditions at this time.

There are in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory 1,500 churches; 3,000 Sunday schools, with 18,000 officers and teachers and 150,000 pupils. There are 50 daily newspapers, nearly 500 weekly papers, besides many quarterly, monthly, and semiweekly publications. In Oklahoma there are 2,200 district schoolhouses, worth a million and a half of dollars. There are but few of this class of buildings in the Indian Territory outside of the cities, for the reason that there is no organized government in that Territory. The total amount of land reserved for common schools, universities, and public buildings for the future State of Oklahoma is 2,052,000 acres, a large part of which is leased and at the present time brings an income to the educational interests of the Territory of $1,000 per day. Within the next year and before Oklahoma can be admitted as a State this enormous sum will be increased to more than half a million dollars per annum.

The $5,000,000 appropriated in this bill to offset the school lands in Oklahoma at 3 per cent interest would produce $150,000 annually. This added to the sum provided in Oklahoma would amount to about three-quarters of a million dollars per year, a sum sufficient to maintain our educational institutions, and equal, if not greater, than the income of any State in the Union for a similar purpose.

Every city and town of these twin Territories has its women's clubs, and musical, social, literary, and Chautauqua societies. This is the meeting ground of many progressive and intelligent people from every State in the Union. It is there that the civilization of the North, the South, the East, and the West are blending and uniting to form the most progressive and most enterprising people in the world. We are fast becoming an ideal Commonwealth. Our climatic conditions are superb, and we are one of the most healthful countries to be found anywhere. The average annual temperature for the last ten years range from 52.2° in the north to 62 in the south. We escape the rigors of the northern winters and the extreme sultriness and heat of the Southern States.

Not only is our climate unsurpassed for heathfulness, but we have soil which produces more abundantly than is found in the latitude of North Carolina and Tennessee, and yet the maximum temperature is seldom greater than that in Nebraska, Iowa, and the Dakotas, due presumably to our altitude. These Territories produce nearly every article produced by the people of every other State in the Union. Of the three great staples—cotton, wheat, and corn—we are unexcelled both in quantity and quality in proportion to the number of acres planted. We are developing into one of the richest oil and gas fields in the world, covering an area in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory of a hundred miles in length and from 40 to 60 miles in width. Coal is found in great abundance in almost every part of Indian Territory, as well as in eastern Oklahoma, and the output of coal of those Territories at this time is greater than any of the Mississippi States. We produced during the year 1902 in Oklahoma alone 36,000,000 bushels of wheat, 65,000,000 bushels of corn, 10,000,000 bushels of oats, 3,000,000 bushels of Kaffir corn, 7,000,000 pounds of broom corn, and 220,000 bales of cotton. For the same year the Indian Territory produced greater quantities of cotton and corn than Oklahoma.

The quantity has been greatly multiplied in both the Territories; and since that date and for the year 1904 it has been estimated that the two Territories will produce 60,000,000 bushels of wheat, 100,000,000 bushels of corn, 20,000,000 bushels of oats, 5,000,000 bushels of Kaffir corn, 10,000,000 pounds of broom corn, and 500,000 bales of cotton. In no State in the Union is such a variety of products produced in such enormous quantities. Corn, oats, and wheat are the staples in the northern portion and cotton and corn in the southern half of these Territories. Stock of all kinds, including cattle and horses, are raised at perhaps half the expense that it costs in the Northern and Eastern States. The census for 1903 showed for Oklahoma 400,000 horses, 100,000 mules, 50,000 sheep, 250,000 swine, and 1,500,000 cattle, the cattle alone of Oklahoma being worth $30,000,000. It is safe to say that the Indian Territory will average an equal number, and these figures will indicate the possibilities of this future State as a stock-raising country. Fruit flourishes in almost every section, almost every kind and quality growing in great abundance.

There were more than 1,000 miles of railroad completed in Oklahoma in 1903, twice as much as was built in any State in the Union, and one-sixth as much as was built in the United States for the same period. For the same year the Indian Territory ranked second for railroad building, and it will be seen that these twin Territories for the year 1903 built about one-fourth of all the railroads built in the United States. The two Territories at this time have more than 7,000 miles of railroad in operation, with no abatement in railroad construction from what it was in 1902 and 1903.

There are in these Territories more than 500 Territorial and national banks, with a combined capital of nearly $10,000,000 and a deposit of nearly fifty millions.

In Oklahoma there was no white settlement prior to April 22, 1889. The only inhabitant of that country up to that date was the Indian and the cowboy. April 22, 1889, 3,000,000 acres of land, known as original Oklahoma, were thrown open to settlement. The Sac and Fox and Pottawatomie reservations, in the eastern part of the Territory, were opened to settlement September, 1891. These reservations contained 1,282,434 acres. The Cheyenne and Arapaho reservations, embracing 4,297,771 acres, were opened in April, 1892. The Cherokee Strip, containing 6,014,239 acres, was opened on September 16, 1893.

The Kickapoo Reservation was opened in 1895, and contained 206,662 acres. The Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, and Wichita reservations, comprising some 4,000,000 acres of land, were opened to settlement in August, 1901. In 1890 No Man's Land, now known as Beaver County, containing 3,681,000 acres, was attached to the Territory. Greer County, formerly a part of the State of Texas, was also attached to the Territory.

The above-described sections, with the Osage, Ponca, and Otoe Indian reservations, comprise what is now the Territory of Oklahoma—38,830 square miles. This, added to the Indian Territory, will make a State of about 70,000 square miles.

Outside of the coal mines in the Indian Territory the mineral resources of this country are comparatively undeveloped. The Wichita Mountains, in southwestern Oklahoma, are rich in iron ore, and various other minerals have been discovered in paying quantities. This mineral district has recently been added to Oklahoma, being comprised in what was known as the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, and opened to settlement in 1901. The late date of its opening accounts for the undeveloped natural resources of that mineral section.

Large quantities of oil and gas have also been discovered in that part of the Territory, and from present indications it is destined to be one of the richest mineral-producing countries in the United States. The mineral-bearing mountains have been divided into five mining districts. It is reported at this time that about 3,000 people have recorded claims in the various districts. From this mining section there are no shipping mines yet, though single carloads have been recently sent to the smelters to ascertain the value of the ore. The oil, gas, coal, and other mineral fields of Oklahoma comprise a section of country estimated at about 7,500,000 acres. And there is, perhaps, no State in the Union which excels those Territories in natural resources, and for the length of time which that country has been settled the development of those resources has been remarkable.

Manufacturing is among the various industries which engage our population, and has made great advancement in the past few years. While we are not so fortunate as other localities in our supply of cheap fuel or water power, the former owing to a lack of railroad facilities, yet those who have been the pioneers in this enterprise have prospered. With several new lines of railroad coming direct through the coal fields on the east and with the discovery of oil and gas in Oklahoma Territory as well as the Indian Territory, the prospect is much brighter for a cheaper fuel and the consequent success of other institutions now in contemplation.

The raw material is at hand on every side, and the increasing number of flouring mills, cotton seed-oil mills, plaster and cement mills, broom factories, shoe factories, foundries, gas plants, cracker and candy manufactories, etc., all of which are in a flourishing condition, indicate that the State of Oklahoma in the near future may be classed among the manufacturing States of this country.

The immense amount of wheat straw that is burned, or allowed to waste, would seem to make this an inviting place for paper mills. The vast quantity of farm machinery shipped into these Territories would suggest a possible lucrative industry in its manufacture. Ice factories, creameries, cheese factories, canning factories, brick plants, and many other manufacturing industries have found an excellent field here in which to locate.

At the present time there are about 100 flouring mills in operation in Oklahoma alone and one-half that number in the Indian Territory, owned and controlled by our own people, with a total capitalization of 3,000,000. These corporations represent the investments of from fifty thousand to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars each. The output of the flouring mills in these Territories during the past few years has been enormous, and the products are distributed from the British Provinces on the north to the Gulf States on the south, and the vast amount of the Oklahoma and Indian Territory flour has been going into the export trade, and is no small factor in the ports of Galveston, New York, and other cities. Yet it is a fact that the milling business of these Territories is yet in its infancy.

A large number of mills were erected during the last year, and the capacity of nearly all was increased, so that the increase in per cent during the past year amounts to about one-fourth of their original capacity. The flour manufacturing in Oklahoma and Indian Territory has proven very successful, and but few lines of enterprise offer a better profit. It is said there never has been a failure in the flouring business in these Territories, and of the 150 mills now in operation there is probably not one which is not paying a fair dividend.

According to the 1900 census there were 15,774 illiterate persons in Oklahoma. In Georgia there were 480,420; in Arkansas, 190,655; in Illinois, 158,000; Kentucky has 262,000. Louisiana has 381,000, Mississippi has 352,000. North Carolina has 386,000, and Tennessee has 306,930 illiterates. These figures comprise persons of all nationalities. The illiterate white population of Oklahoma according to the census of 1900 was 6,279. In Alabama the illiterate white population was 104,507; of Georgia, 100,431; of North Carolina, 175,645; of Tennessee, 157,396. Some of the States mentioned have scarcely a greater population than the Territory of Oklahoma.

Oklahoma and the Indian Territory have enough salt to supply the markets of the world. The great salt reserve in the western part of Oklahoma Territory contains approximately 400 square miles. This great bed of solid rock salt is of illimitable depth and inexhaustible supply. Saline deposits are found in various parts of western Oklahoma, and the manufacture of salt is destined to be one of the great industries of that State.

The union of Oklahoma and Indian Territory would make a State larger in area than more than half of the States of the Union. Oklahoma alone is larger than either of the States of Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, West Virginia, and the union of these two Territories would be very much larger in area than either Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, or Virginia, being more than 20,000 square miles larger than either of the last-mentioned States. In point of population and wealth either of these two Territories is far better prepared for statehood than any Territory which heretofore has been admitted to the Union. The following States when admitted had the following population:

State.	Population when admitted.	State.	Population when admitted.
Vermont	85,425	Florida	64,000
Kentucky	73,077	Texas	143,000
Tennessee	67,000	Iowa	78,819
Ohio	45,365	Wisconsin	180,000
Louisiana	76,556	California	92,597
Indiana	63,897	Minnesota	120,000
Mississippi	75,512	Oregon	50,000
Alabama		Kansas	107,206
Illinois	34,620	West Virginia	350,000
Maine	298,269	Nevada	40,000
Missouri	66,557	Nebraska	100,000
Arkansas	52,240	Colorado	100,000
Michigan	65,000

These Territories combined have at this time a population of about one million and one-half of people. We have as much push and energy and perseverance as are found anywhere in the land. In these Territories are represented, and creditably represented, every State and Territory in the Union. It is there that the vigor of the North has met the love of ease and hospitality of the South. Whatever of excellence was possessed by those who came from the East has been absorbed and appropriated by the energy of the West. While it is perhaps true that no prerequisite has been established for admission of States to the Union, is it not enough when we come with from five to seven times the population other Territories have had when they were admitted? In all of the history of the American Republic no Territory has had one-fourth the population which these Territories have to-day, and the great majority have been admitted with less than one-tenth of our present population.

But you tell us we are well governed. You say, "Are your officers not proficient and honest?" Such interrogatories are only propounded by those who, as a last extremity, can offer nothing better. It is not sufficient to say we are well governed. It is not enough to say our officers are honest and capable. It is unnecessary for me to spend time in a feeble effort to portray the kind of government we have in these Territories. All these interrogatories are abundantly answered when I say to you that Oklahoma and the Indian Territory are the dwelling places of patriotic and liberty-loving American citizens. The history of our American Republic since its earliest infancy has been written by acts of loyalty of the American people wherever they are found, and I am constrained to observe that if you will tell me where the Stars and Stripes are found I will tell you the kind of government the people have. No people in the world have been more inspired to American sentiment and patriotic impulses than those whom I have the honor to feebly represent. We are not complaining of our laws nor the manner in which those laws have been administered by our public officers. We are not complaining of our government, neither local nor national. We are of the kind who believe we have the best government ever devised by the wit of man.

We are persistently but respectfully demanding admission to the Union, because it is our sacred right, guaranteed by the Constitution, the fundamental law of the land. In this we are asking nothing except that to which we are equitably and lawfully entitled. The American Republic has expanded by the acquisition of territory and the admission of States to the Union, and at no time has that policy been more in favor with the American people than now.

It is a remarkable coincidence that during the prolonged debate in the United States Senate, at the last session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, when that body was considering the proposed admission of Territories into the Union, not one word was spoken in derogation of Oklahoma or her claims to statehood. We are entitled to admission and entitled to it now.

To bring us into the Union is the natural and instinctive thing for the American Congress to do. To reject us is the unnatural and almost vicious thing to do. Fourteen years ago Oklahoma, the favorite child of the Republic, was born, and its growth has been unparalleled at any epoch of our national history, but commensurate with that growth has been her benign influence for good.

Commercially, educationally, and morally she is in the front of the procession of the States and Territories of the Union. We ask admission for the reason and upon the ground which has always met with popular response from the American people, and that is because we merit it. We have met every requirement in heaped and rounded measure, and when you accord statehood to Oklahoma and the Indian Territory you have given us no greater prize than we bring to you. With the natural and acquired resources of that country within our borders, and peopled by persons of our own blood, no more meritorious measure will be checked upon the records of the Fifty-eighth Congress than the admission of these Territories to the Union, and it is the desire of fifteen hundred thousand liberty-loving people, whose hearts beat with patriotic impulses, that Oklahoma and the Indian Territory be permitted to add another star to the azure of Old Glory. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and also ask leave to print the majority report of the committee in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report of the committee is as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred H. R. 14749, to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, report same back to the House of Representatives, and recommend that it do pass.

ANALYSIS OF BILL.

This bill, under a single title and enacting clause, enables two States to be admitted into the Union.

It consists of thirty-seven sections, the first eighteen of which relate to the proposed State of Oklahoma, the area of which is to comprise the present Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory; and the remaining nineteen sections relate to the proposed State of Arizona, the area of which is to comprise the present Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

The whole bill is drawn to conform as nearly as may be to the language of previous enabling acts, and contains such provisions as may in their nature be common to all, besides such additional provisions as are made necessary by existing laws, Indian treaties, and local conditions.

The sections framed to provide similar objects for each of the proposed new States are made to conform as nearly as may be to each other.

Under the terms of the bill the State of Oklahoma can be admitted into the Union not earlier than March 4, 1905. This date of admission is thus postponed nearly two years to avoid interfering with any rights of the Indians in the Indian Territory under existing laws or agreements, all of which have been preserved.

The State of Arizona can be admitted into the Union not earlier than about seven and a half months and not later than about eleven months after the approval of this act.

Each State is to be admitted into the Union by a proclamation of the President of the United States, in the usual manner, after compliance with certain requirements.

An election which is equitably and properly safeguarded is provided for delegates to a constitutional convention for each proposed State. Each convention is to consist of 110 delegates.

The constitution framed must in each case conform to the usual requirements and be submitted to the people of each proposed State, respectively, for ratification at an election to be held for that purpose.

Each State is divided into two judicial districts, and the proper officials are provided therefor. The Federal courts of the proposed State of Oklahoma are attached to the eighth judicial circuit, and the Federal courts of the proposed State of Arizona are attached to the ninth judicial circuit.

Proper provision is made in the usual way for pending causes in the Territorial courts during the transition.

Oklahoma is allowed five and Arizona two Members of the House of Representatives, representation being based on the last census, and each State is divided into Congressional districts.

Proper provision is made in each State for nonsectarian common schools and the teaching of English therein.

Suffrage is well guarded, and strong antipolygamy clauses are in the bill.

The new States are to assume and pay the debts of the Territories, respectively.

The capital of Oklahoma is fixed at Guthrie until 1910 and that of Arizona at Santa Fe until the same year, at which time it is expected that conditions will have so shaped themselves that State capitals may be established by elections provided for that purpose, with entire fairness to all parts of the States concerned.

Oklahoma is given two sections of nonmineral land in each township within the present Territory of Oklahoma for the support and maintenance of a system of public nonsectarian common schools, besides certain specific donations of land for its educational and other institutions. Oklahoma is also given the sum of $5,000,000 in lieu of lands which can not be set apart for school purposes within the present limits of Indian Territory, because such lands are owned by the Indians and because of the great expense to which the new State will be put in establishing a system of common schools where none now exist.

The State of Arizona, as in the case of Utah, because of the arid character of the land, is given four sections of nonmineral land in each township for the support of common schools. It is also given, as is usual, certain specific donations of land for its educational and other institutions.

Each State, as is usual, after admission is to receive 5 per cent of the cash realized from the sale of public lands within the State, to form a permanent fund, the interest of which only can be used for the maintenance of its common schools, and the usual restrictions, requirements, and safeguards are thrown around all of these donations to each of the States.

An appropriation of $75,000 for the State of Oklahoma and of $100,000 for the State of Arizona, or so much thereof in each case as may be necessary, is made for defraying the expenses of the conventions provided for in the bill, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

It is provided that until the admission of the proposed States, the Territorial officers shall continue to perform their duties as at present in the respective Territories.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR STATEHOOD.

Article IV, section 3, of the Constitution of the United States provides that "new States may be admitted by Congress into the Union," but the Constitution nowhere defines the qualifications of Territories for statehood. Congress therefore has discretion as to what conditions shall be required of Territories seeking admission as States.

When the Constitution was adopted this Republic had a population of less than 4,000,000 and comprehended the thirteen original States as then bounded, together with the Northwest Territory.

The ordinance of 1787 provided for the temporary government and future division of the Northwest Territory into States, to be admitted "whenever any of said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein."

This rule of 60,000 population for Territories seeking admission as States was for some time observed more or less closely.

Subsequently, in the case of Kansas, another rule was adopted requiring a population equal to the unit of representation in the House of Representatives, which was not thereafter adhered to.

Nevada, which was admitted with an area of 109,901 square miles and a population of 42,491 in 1864, by the census of 1900 had a population of 42,335, about one-fifth of the population of a Congressional district under the last apportionment.

Of course area alone can not be considered as a controlling qualification. A vast area might never be capable of sustaining a sufficient population.

This nation now has a population of 80,000,000, and undoubtedly, without attempting to make any hard and fast rule as to population of Territories seeking admission as States, the population of such Territories should bear some reasonable relation in number and character to the great body of the population of the Republic.

ARIZONA.

Arizona was a part of the territory acquired from the Republic of Mexico by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, February 2, 1848, and by the Gadsden purchase of December 30, 1853, and was a part of the original Territory of New Mexico, from which it was separated and organized into a Territory in 1863.

It is 378 miles long by 339 miles wide and contains 113,929 square miles, or 73,000,000 acres. By the census of 1900 it has a population of 122,931, of whom 26,480 are Indians, being 1.1 persons to the square mile.

It is true that the census of 1900 is claimed to be inaccurate in that it does not give Arizona as many people as are claimed were there, and the Delegate from Arizona claims a population of not less than 175,000, but this committee does not feel warranted in adopting speculative estimates; besides, the highest estimates do not change the situation upon which the committee bases its decision.

Of the population other than Indians, about 80 per cent are estimated by Governor Brodie to be Americans, as contradistinguished from inhabitants of Mexican derivation; and of all the population, not counting Indians, Governor Brodie estimates only about 1 per cent of illiteracy. The character of the population is of such high order that it stands above detraction and needs no commendation.

The Territory has a university, two normal schools, and an excellent common school system.

Its newspapers are ably managed and edited.

It has a total assessed valuation of taxable property of $43,088,141, but it is probable that its property is returned for taxation at a comparatively small percentage of its market value.

Its lands are valuable for agriculture only as irrigated, and its irrigable lands are chiefly in the valleys of the Salt River, the Gila, the Colorado, the Little Colorado, and their tributaries. If irrigation, under the national irrigation law, shall prove successful, soil of wonderful fertility, otherwise of little value, will attract immigration, but irrigation under that law is in the experimental stage.

In arid regions the rainfall is torrential and runs rapidly off the baked surface of the earth into channels, through which it comes down in floods of no value unless impounded for irrigation purposes.

Months and sometimes years intervene between heavy rains, and it is the purpose of the Government to impound the water from rainfall and from snow on the mountains and distribute it systematically.

The average annual rainfall in Arizona varies from 5.86 inches at Gila Bend to 22.24 inches at Flagstaff, the increased precipitation at Flagstaff being due to the proximity of the mountains.

Stock raising is at present a more important industry in Arizona than agriculture.

The forest area in Arizona is the largest in the United States and covers 6,400,000 acres.

Its chief industry is mining, and while great mineral wealth has already been developed, it is asserted that its mineral resources so far as developed are small as compared with its possibilities.

The Territory has within its limits about 1,400 miles of railroad.

NEW MEXICO.

New Mexico was acquired from the Republic of Mexico by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, February 2, 1848, and by the Gadsden purchase of December 30, 1853.

It is 360 miles north and south by 346 miles east and west and contains 122,580 square miles, or 78,451,200 acres, on which, by the census of 1900, live a population of 195,310, being 1.6 persons to the square mile.

As in the case of Arizona the census is claimed to be inaccurate, and the Delegate from New Mexico claims a population of not less than 350,000, but here again the committee does not feel warranted in accepting speculative estimates.

This committee consider the criticism as ill informed which finds fault with New Mexico because of its alleged foreign population.

Out of a population of 195,310 New Mexico has only 13,625 foreign-born inhabitants, a smaller foreign-born percentage than most of the States in the Union.

New Mexico was made a Territory in 1850, and ever since that time the people of that Territory have been electing their own legislatures, making their own laws, conducting their own local government, and contributing revenue to the Federal Treasury.

Were it not that the two-fifths of its population which are native born but of Spanish descent have been heretofore erroneously referred to as foreign, it would be an aspersion upon a patriotic people even to refer to their loyalty. The remaining three-fifths of its population are of the same character as the people of Arizona.

During the civil war out of a total population of 93,557 New Mexico sent 6,561 men to fight for the Union, and in our war with Spain 1,089 men enlisted, of whom 500 were "Rough Riders."

The assessed valuation of property within the Territory is $43,000,000, but it is asserted by the governor of New Mexico that for purposes of taxation property is not returned at much more than 20 per cent of its market value.

Its indebtedness is $1,098,300, and its cash on hand to meet its obligations is $282,517.86.

The Territory has a capitol building erected at a cost of $200,000, a penitentiary valued at $500,000, a college of agricultural and mechanical arts valued at $150,000, an asylum for the insane valued at $180,000, a school of mines valued at $65,000, a university valued at $60,000; two normal schools, each valued at $60,000; a military institute valued at $50,000, and other institutions for which large appropriations have been made.

It has an excellent common school system, the buildings alone being worth $2,000,000, and the enrollment of pupils being 72,000; and besides its common schools and Territorial institutions it has over fifty sectarian schools, conducted by various religious denominations, with an enrollment of over 4,000 pupils.

All these institutions and the public school system of New Mexico have been built and sustained by the Territory without the aid of the Federal Government, except by the usual grant of sections 16 and 36 for school purposes, made in 1898, from which rentals have only recently commenced to be received.

New Mexico has seventy-five weekly newspapers and six dailies.

Agriculture in New Mexico is conducted by irrigation along the river valleys of the San Juan, Rio Grande, the Mimbres, the Canadian, the Cimarron, the Gila, the Pecos, their tributaries, and some smaller valleys.

Stock raising is the principal industry.

What has been said of the rainfall of Arizona applies to New Mexico, except that the average annual rainfall of New Mexico is a trifle more than that of Arizona.

The mining industry of New Mexico is said to be rapidly developing, and it has about 2,600 miles of railroad.

After giving full consideration to conditions in both Territories, this committee recommends the admission of Arizona and New Mexico joined in a single State to be known as "Arizona."

The name "Arizona" is retained as the better name in the choice between the names of the two Territories, one of which the committee feels ought to be given to the proposed State.

The area of the proposed State, though vast, will be about 30,000 square miles less than that of Texas.

If national irrigation shall succeed and mining industry shall fulfill its flattering promise, the proposed State may become great in population, wealth, and resources; but at present the population on the vast area proposed to be admitted as a State is only a little more than one person to the square mile, and is settled in river valleys, with mountains and vast arid wastes between which can never support a population.

The population of the proposed State, in the opinion of this committee, has the educational, moral, and other elements to entitle it to citizenship of a State and of the United States.

The people of Arizona and New Mexico have developed the resources of their Territories to the best of their ability under present conditions, and as a State, with the aid of Federal irrigation, they will undoubtedly develop to the utmost the latent resources of their vast domain.

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

As to Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, this committee favor their joinder in one State.

Oklahoma has an area of 38,830 square miles, or 24,979,200 acres, and by the census of 1900 a population of 398,331.

Indian Territory, which for convenience we shall refer to as a Territory, although it has no Territorial organization, has an area of 31,000 square miles, or 19,840,000 acres, and by the census of 1900 a population of 392,060.

It is conceded by everyone who has had opportunity for observation that since the census of 1900 the population of both Oklahoma and the Indian Territory has increased with amazing rapidity, until their aggregate population is probably far beyond a million.

There are probably no better farming lands in the United States than those in these Territories, and vast areas which were unoccupied in 1900 have been rapidly settled upon since that time.

Under the so-called "Curtis Act" provision was made for the organization of towns in the Indian Territory, and towns have been organized all over the Territory having populations which are increasing with astonishing rapidity.

The arbitrary and irregular boundary line between Oklahoma and the Indian Territory is in itself an argument in favor of their joinder in one State, and indicates the progress made up to date in the gradual addition of Indian reservations to original Oklahoma, which, at the outset, constituted only about one-eighth of the present Territory of Oklahoma.

Indian Territory, as originally set apart in 1834, practically comprehended what are now known as Oklahoma and Indian Territory, except that Beaver County, formerly known as "No Man's Land," was added to Oklahoma by act of Congress, May 2, 1890.

Original Oklahoma, containing about 3,000,000 acres in the heart of what now constitutes Oklahoma, was opened to settlement April 2, 1889, but no form of government was provided for the country so opened to settlement until May 2, 1890, when the organic act of the Territory of Oklahoma was approved.

By that organic act it is provided "that all that portion of the United States now known as Indian Territory, except so much as is actually occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes and the Indian tribes within the Quapaw Indian Agency, and except the unoccupied part of the Cherokee Outlet, together with that part of the United States known as the 'Public Land Strip,' is hereby erected into a temporary government by the name of the 'Territory of Oklahoma.' * * * Whenever the interests of the Cherokee Indians in the land known as the 'Cherokee Outlet' shall have been extinguished and the President shall make proclamation thereof, said Outlet shall thereupon, and without further legislation, become a part of the Territory of Oklahoma. Any other lands within the Indian Territory not embraced within these boundaries shall hereafter become a part of the Territory of Oklahoma whenever the Indian nation or a tribe owning such lands shall signify to the President of the United States in legal manner its assent that such lands shall so become a part of the Territory of Oklahoma, and the President shall thereupon make proclamation of the same."

By this organic act it is apparent that it was not intended to draw any line of division between Oklahoma and Indian Territory, but that Oklahoma should increase in geographical scope from time to time within the limits of the original Indian Territory, by the addition of "any other lands within the Indian Territory * * * whenever the Indian nation or a tribe owning such lands shall signify to the President of the United States in legal manner its assent."

It is therefore apparent from this organic act that it was the intention of Congress that the original Indian Territory, together with the strip of land running westward to the east line of New Mexico, and formerly known as "No Man's Land," should eventually become one State.

Original Oklahoma has been increased and opened to settlement as follows:

1. In 1890, by the addition of the Sauk and Fox, Iowa, and Potawatomi Indian reservations, containing 1,283,434 acres, in the eastern part of what is now Oklahoma Territory, and the addition of the Cheyenne and Arapaho reservations, containing 4,297,771 acres, in the western part of what is now Oklahoma Territory.

2. In 1893, by the addition of the Cherokee Strip, containing 6,014,239 acres;

3. In 1895, by the addition of the Kickapoo Reservation, containing 206,662 acres;

4. In 1896, by the addition of Greer County by decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; and

5. In 1901, by the addition of the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, and Wichita reservations.

Within the present limits of Oklahoma there are still reserved from settlement the Osage, Ponca, and Oto reservations, and the Kiowa and Comanche pasture reservations, in all amounting to about 2,000,000 acres.

Oklahoma Territory, so formed, is now divided into twenty-six counties, traversed by not less than 3,000 miles of railroad.

In 1903 the wheat crop of Oklahoma was over 36,000,000 bushels; the corn crop 65,000,000 bushels; the cotton crop over 200,000 bales; and 1,036,662 cattle, 304,713 horses, 234,218 sheep, and 63,452 mules were scheduled for taxation.

It has 280 grain elevators, 66 flouring mills, and 232 cotton gins.

It has 79 national banks and 247 Territorial banks, the aggregate deposits in which on January 1, 1904, amounted to $22,456,510.

It has 250 weekly newspapers, 28 daily newspapers, besides monthly and semimonthly publications.

It has 191,433 children of school age and 2,192 district schoolhouses.

It has a university, an agricultural and mechanical college, normal schools, a university preparatory school, and a colored agricultural and normal university, besides denominational and private educational institutions.

By the provisions of the organic act and by various acts of Congress opening Indian reservations to settlement, 2,055,500 acres of land have been reserved for the benefit of common schools, colleges, normal schools, public buildings, and for charitable and penal institutions.

Mineral deposits are said to have been found in the Wichita Mountains; oil, coal, and gas have been discovered in various parts of the Territory, and salt and gypsum beds cover thousands of acres.

Construing the organic act of Oklahoma according to its obvious intent, that all the lands within the original limits of the Indian Territory should eventually be merged into the Territory of Oklahoma and thereafter into a State, the question to be determined is whether the so-called "Indian Territory" is ready to be joined with Oklahoma in a State, and whether it may be so joined equitably so far as the Indians of Indian Territory are concerned.

The Indian Territory is not an organized Territory, but is an area of land occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes—viz, the Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Cherokees, and Seminoles, and certain small tribes in the northeast corner of the Indian Territory who hold their lands by patent.

These Five Civilized Tribes moved westward from certain of the Southern States with their slaves and settled upon the lands comprehended within the original limits of the Indian Territory, under various treaties with the Federal Government.

These treaties provided in effect, among other things, that the Five Tribes should have tribal governments of their own.

Having come from the South, their sympathies were naturally with the South in the civil war, although many of the Indians in the northern part of the Territory kept faith with the Federal Government.

In 1865 and 1866 treaties of peace were made with the Indians whereby they acknowledged the sovereignty of the United States and agreed to abide by the Federal laws.

In 1866 certain of the Indians ceded the use of their lands west of the present line of the Indian Territory to the Government for the occupancy of certain tribes of friendly Indians, and in 1889 the Creek and Seminole sold their interest in these lands outright to the United States. Thereupon followed the organization of original Oklahoma and the addition thereto of territory as hereinbefore described.

Meanwhile white people have been emigrating to the Indian Territory in constantly increasing numbers until now, when the Dawes Commission estimates the number of people in the Indian Territory at about 700,000, of whom only about 70,000 are estimated to be Indians.

In 1893 the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, commonly called the "Dawes Commission," was created. For the first five years of its existence, down to the passage of the so-called "Curtis law," the commission was given only the power of negotiation, except that under the law of June 10, 1896, they were given limited authority in relation to citizenship rights.

By the Curtis Act, however, its authority was extended so that the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes now has authority for the "extinguishment of the national or tribal title to any lands within that Territory (the Indian Territory) now held by any or all of such nations or tribes, either by cession of the same, or some part thereof, to the United States, or by the allotment and division of the same in severalty among the Indians of such nations or tribes."

The act of June 10, 1896, empowered the commission to determine applications for citizenship presented within ninety days from the date of the act, and even under that law "applications embracing approximately 75,000 claimants were judicially determined."

The business of the Dawes Commission, as finally defined by various statutes and Indian agreements supplemental thereto, was "to administer upon five great estates," composed of about $10,000,000 of trust funds and 19,511,889.39 acres of land, as follows:

Choctaw Nation	6,950,043.60
Chickasaw Nation	4,703,108.05
Cherokee Nation	4,420,070.13
Creek Nation	3,072,813.16
Seminole Nation	365,854.39

This business did not relate to the disposition of wild lands or lands of uniform value. "It related to vast tracts, covered by the houses and other improvements of a great population, threaded in every direction with railroads, filled with villages and large towns of the most modern character," and without a wigwam or blanket Indian within the limits of the Territory.

It became the duty of the commission to determine—

First. Who were the bona fide citizens entitled to possess these properties; and Second. To take an inventory of the properties to be divided, and to apportion them equitably in severalty.

THE PEOPLE AND THEIR CONDITION.

Aside from the population which has been attracted to the Territory, there are five distinct classes of people having common property and citizenship rights, but differing widely in racial characteristics, viz:

1. The so-called "full-blood Indians."

2. People of mixed blood, ranging from an almost infinitesimal infusion of Indian blood to nearly full-blood Indians.

3. Intermarried whites.

4. Negroes, called freedmen, who were slaves or are the descendants of former slaves of Indians.

5. Adopted citizens.

According to the recent Bonaparte report, these five classes constitute about one-fifth of the inhabitants of the Territory, and of them "at least three-fourths are Indians in little more than name, with from 75 to 99 per cent of white blood, and in great majority altogether indistinguishable in appearance, language, and manners from white people."

These people of mixed blood are, as a rule, intelligent, educated, and competent to manage their own affairs.

The remaining four-fifths of the inhabitants of the Territory have no connection whatever with the tribes and are white people, with a small percentage of negroes, attracted from the various States of the Union, whose citizenship in the States from which they came has qualified them for statehood.

It therefore appears that of the whole population of the Indian Territory scarcely one-twentieth are full-blood Indians.

By the Curtis Act and various agreements with the Five Nations, tribal courts were abolished July 1, 1898, and all tribal relations and governments of the Five Nations are to cease March 4, 1906.

The government of Indian Territory at present is a government by the Secretary of the Interior, by four Federal judges having jurisdiction in four several districts, and by various commissioners, which courts and commissioners administer the Federal law together with an extension of a part of the Arkansas code. This government is known in Indian Territory as "court government."

Indian Territory is without adequate schools, so far as white people are concerned, and is without asylums for the deaf, dumb, blind, and insane.

The only provision for free schools in the Territory is in the Curtis Act, which provides for free schools in the incorporated towns.

Outside the incorporated towns the various Indian governments maintain schools, but it is asserted that at least 100,000 white children outside incorporated towns are without free educational opportunities and that a large white population is growing up in ignorance.

ALLOTMENT.

As to the inventory of "properties to be divided" by the Dawes Commission. Nothing is owned in common in the Indian Territory except the lands and tribal funds. The act of June 28, 1898, known as the "Curtis Act," provided for "the making of rolls of citizens and the allotment of lands in the five nations in the Indian Territory;" and pursuant to the provisions of that law various agreements and supplemental agreements have been made with the Five Civilized Tribes providing for the allotment of lands, the division of tribal funds, and the abolishment of tribal governments after March 4, 1906.

Under this law "and the agreements with the tribes, and acts of Congress amendatory and supplementary thereof, the commission has proceeded to make rolls of citizens of each of the tribes, appraise the land preparatory to allotment, estimate timber, set apart land for town sites over a large part of the Territory, subdivide the United States Geological Survey sectional survey into quarter sections and in some places quarter-quarter sections, make improvement plats of the land surveyed, and to allot the land to the individual members of the tribes." The commission was also authorized to segregate coal lands in the Choctaw and Cherokee country.

According to the Tenth Annual Report of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, "the survey and appraisement work of the commission is finished."

As to coal and asphalt lands, the Dawes Commission reports that the lands segregated under the provisions of the act approved July 1, 1902, cover an area of 444,863.03 acres. These lands are not subject to allotment.

As to the progress of the commission in the enrollment of citizens and the allotment of lands, the so-called "Bonaparte report," transmitted to Congress by the President March 7, 1904, is as follows:

"In the Seminole Nation the roll has been completed and finally approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

"In the Creek Nation the enrollment work is 97½ per cent completed.

"In the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee nations the enrollment work is between 90 and 95 per cent completed.

"All of the land in each nation has been appraised and valued in tracts of 40 acres, and where timber of commercial value was found on the land the timber on each 40 was estimated and valued.

"Approximately 12,000 sectional improvement plats have been made and are now used in the different land offices, and this work has been completed as far as it is deemed necessary to carry it.

"In the Seminole Nation all selections of allotments have been made, and the only work remaining to be done in that nation is the disposing of surplus lands, for which no provision of law exists, and the issuing of deeds.

"In the Creek Nation practically all allotments have been made, and more than 60 per cent of the allottees have received allotment and homestead deeds to their lands. These deeds are prepared by the commission, and, when executed, recorded by it.

"In the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations approximately 45 per cent of allotments have been made.

"In the Cherokee Nation approximately 25 per cent of allotments have been made. Under instructions from the Secretary of the Interior all proceedings looking to the allotment of land in the Cherokee Nation have been suspended since October 7, 1903, in accordance with the act of Congress relative to the segregations of lands, to await the decision of the then pending suit in the United States Supreme Court between the Delawares and Cherokees.

"Allotment-selection contests are being kept well up in the different nations. This involves in each case, of which there are already between 2,000 and 3,000, practically a court trial to determine title to improvements on land.

"No statement is attempted to be made of the incidental work that has arisen in the different nations from time to time, much of which has, however, been of considerable magnitude.

"It will be seen, therefore, at this time that the work for which the commission was created, and which has been its constant aim during its existence, namely, 'the extinguishment of the national or tribal title to any lands within that Territory,' is well advanced toward completion. The work in the Seminole Nation is complete as far as it is possible to complete it under existing legislation. The work in the Creek Nation is substantially finished. It is estimated that the work in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations will be ended by March 31, 1905, and in the Cherokee Nation by July 1, 1905. And when all tribal title to land in Indian Territory shall have been extinguished, and final disposition made of all of the affairs of the Five Tribes, the work will have cost the Government less than 10 cents per acre."

Memorandum showing condition of work of Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes on December 31, 1903.

"2. HOW LONG WILL IT TAKE TO FINISH THE ALLOTMENT?

"Seminole Nation.—Allotment is completed.

"Creek Nation.—Allotment is substantially completed.

"Choctaw and Chickasaw nations.—On December 31, 1903, allotment offices had been in operation seven and a half months, and at that time approximately one-third of the work of allotment had been completed. It is estimated that practically all allotments in those nations will have been made in fifteen months from December 31, 1903, or by March 31, 1905.

"Cherokee Nation.—Allotment office had been in operation approximately eight and one-fourth months, when work was suspended on October 7, 1903, under instructions from the Secretary of the Interior, pending an adjudication of the rights of Delaware members of the tribe. No allotments have been made since that date. During the time the office was in operation approximately one-fourth of the work of allotment was completed. It is estimated that with some increase in the allotting force of the office practically all allotment work in the Cherokee Nation can be completed in fifteen months from the date when the office shall be reopened."

CONCLUSION.

Inasmuch, then, as in the opinion of this committee, the Congress intended by the organic act of the Territory of Oklahoma that all of the original Indian Territory, together with what is now Beaver County, should become one State: and

Inasmuch as the present Territory of Oklahoma has for some time been qualified for statehood, which has been deferred until the Indian Territory should be ready to be joined therewith in statehood: and

Inasmuch as conditions in the Indian Territory imperatively demand some better form of government than now exists there; and

Inasmuch as Indian lands will be allotted in severalty before the time when statehood can go into effect as provided for in this bill, and for all the reasons set forth in this report, this committee report in favor of the joinder of the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory in one State, not, however, before March 4, 1906, such State to be known as the "State of Oklahoma."

To that end, and to the end that the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico may be joined in one State, to be known as the "State of Arizona," this committee recommend that the bill H. R. 14749 do pass.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee use some of his time now?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish you would inform me how much time we have on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty-seven minutes remaining.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. How much has the other side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-eight minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We have twenty-seven minutes and the other side have twenty-eight minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NEEDHAM].

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, after long, careful, and conscientious consideration of this measure, I find myself unable to support the bill in its present form. I have no serious objections to that portion of the bill which unites Oklahoma and Indian Territory and provides for their admission into the Union as one State, for the reason that such would make a State compact and regular in form and of medium size. My objection to the bill is confined particularly to that portion which provides for the union of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and their admission into the Union as one State.

Mr. Speaker, if two amendments to the bill could be presented and adopted, I am of the opinion that it would remove the objectionable portions which the bill now contains. But the rule under which we are considering the bill prevents the offering or consideration of amendments, except the one named in the rule itself, relating to the selling of liquor to Indians. Every Member of the House, therefore, is compelled to vote for the bill substantially as presented or else be recorded as against it, notwithstanding that the adoption of a few amendments would, in my judgment, remove from the bill its most objectionable features.

Mr. Speaker, since I have been a Member of this House there has been a great deal of criticism, some of it very violent in form, of the rules of the House. I desire to say that the longer I serve in this body the more I am convinced that the rules which have prevailed since I have been a Member seem to me to be essential in order that the majority—the majority charged with the responsibility of legislation—can do business. I believe that there are occasions when a special rule, drastic in its nature, is necessary and justifiable in order that the majority party—the party charged with responsibility—may proceed with its work so as to overcome and defeat the dilatory and oftentimes obstructive tactics of an active and alert minority. I believe that the political party having control of this House should adopt rules through which that party can do the business of the House. We are a government of parties, and I have very little sympathy with the indiscriminate and violent criticism of the House rules which is too often indulged in upon this floor.

I am satisfied in my own mind that much of it—in fact, almost all of it—has been voiced simply and solely for partisan purposes. Neither have I much regard for the charge which is frequently made in the House and elsewhere that this House is retrograding and deteriorating in the character and ability of its Members and in the relative influence of the House itself as a part of the legislative department of the Government. The present size of the House of Representatives, composed as it is of 386 Members, of necessity precludes that thoroughness of debate and consideration of each measure by the Members generally which formerly prevailed when this House was composed of a much smaller membership.

The same extensive debate by the individual Members of the House of Representatives upon various measures presented here as obtains in the Senate of the United States, a body composed of only ninety members, can not, in reason, prevail here. The element of time itself will prevent the same equality of individual discussion. The growth of this House in membership—and that growth will continue from decade to decade—means, whether for the weal or the woe of the Republic, that the committees of the House, and especially the leading committees, will have greater and greater power and influence in the legislation brought before this body. In other words, this body, by reason of its unwieldy membership, by reason of the fact that it is impossible for each and every Member to participate in discussion and debate upon most of the measures brought before it for consideration, must to a greater and greater extent rely upon the judgment of its committees.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the rules of the House are simply an evolution and recognize and typify the changed conditions in this body. I am not at all alarmed over the evolution and growth in the power as represented in the rules of the House. I have not that apprehension so frequently disclosed in the debates in this body, whenever a special rule is brought forward, that the pillars of the Republic are rocking upon their foundations.

But, Mr. Speaker, the power lodged in this House by reason of its rules is one thing, and the unnecessary exercise of that power is quite another thing. I would not, therefore—and in this matter I speak only for myself as one humble Representative upon this floor—bring in a rule providing for the consideration of a measure, cutting off the power of amendment, and limiting debate to an unreasonable degree unless such a rule was clearly necessary. Therefore I feel that the adoption of the rule under which we are now proceeding, and which provides that this measure, which consists of thirty-seven printed pages, shall be voted upon without the right to amend it, except in the one respect heretofore referred to, at half past 4 o'clock this day, and which thereby limits the debate upon the measure to a period of only three and one-half hours, is unnecessary and justly subject to criticism.

I can not believe that the consideration of the present bill creates the necessity or even suggests the advisability of cutting off the right of amendment or of limiting full and free discussion. Upon more than one occasion heretofore this House has considered and passed bills providing for the admission of the very Territories dealt with in the pending measure. So far as I now recall, no suggestion was then made that the right of debate should be curtailed or that the privilege of offering amendments should be prohibited. No greater question can engage the attention of Congress than the consideration of measures providing for the admission of Territories and their creation into sovereign States of the Union. Such a measure, if enacted into law, establishes practically for all time to come a new relationship between the Territory thus made a State and the Union itself, of which it is thereafter a unit. It greatly changes the relationship to the nation of the Territory thus transformed. It enlarges and augments the powers of the citizens residing within the Territory thus affected. What greater question could engage the attention of the Congress of the United States than the creation of a new State of the Federal Union?

But we are told, Mr. Speaker, that the creation of States and their admission into the Union has always been a party question; that the history of our country disclosed the fact that States have been created upon more than one occasion solely with a view to augmenting the strength of the party in power, and with the clearly disclosed purpose and object of furnishing electoral votes to lengthen the term of such party.

The admission of the State of Ohio may be cited as furnishing a typical example of this policy. That State was admitted into the Union without the formality of a ratification of the constitution and with great haste in order that it might furnish three electoral votes to the second election of Mr. Jefferson as President of the United States. A similar policy largely controlled in the admission of Nevada and Colorado.

But these incidents in our history ought not, in my judgment, to be followed as precedents at the present time. I regard these exigencies which lead to these extreme measures as a fact to be deplored in the history of our country rather than as examples to be cited as precedents to control our actions at this time. It is sufficient to say that no such present exigency exists. Neither is there any probability that any action which Congress may take in the near future as to the remaining Territories of the United States will be apt to change the political complexion of the Senate of the United States. However that may be, Mr. Speaker, I decline (and I speak for myself alone) to consider the question of the creation of sovereign States of the Union as a purely political and party question. I have conscientious convictions as to the conditions of admission of the remaining Territories into the Union, and I must respectfully insist upon the right to express such convictions both with voice and by my vote, which right I know will cheerfully be granted me by every Member of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I stated in the outset of my remarks that if two amendments could be presented and adopted to the bill in my judgment they would remove the serious objections to the bill as it now stands. If the rule under which we are now operating would permit, I would offer an amendment which would provide that there should not be a union of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico as one State, unless a majority of the legally qualified voters of each Territory voted for such jointure. Now, it seems to me that this is eminently a proper and fair amendment, and I believe if it could be presented it would be adopted.

As the bill now stands, if it becomes a law, even though every legally qualified voter within the present limits of the Territory of Arizona votes against the choosing of delegates to form a constitutional convention, as mentioned in the bill, and that vote should be exceeded by a majority of even one, cast by the legally qualified voters within the present limits of the Territory of New Mexico, the jointure of these two Territories would be accomplished. In other words, the unanimous voice of the people of the present Territory of Arizona, expressed through the ballot box, would be powerless, should this bill pass, to prevent her extinction. I contend that there is no such contingency as makes necessary legislation so radical as this. This is the first time in the history of our country that Congress, after having created two Territories, subsequently attempted to join them and admit them as one State.

Indian Territory, which by the provisions of this bill is to be united with Oklahoma, has never been an organized Territory. Her union with Oklahoma is not open to the objections as a matter of principle which obtain against the union of Arizona and New Mexico. This is the first time in the history of our country where a Territory created by the solemn act of Congress has subsequently been denied consideration of her claims for admission into the Union as a separate State. This is the first time in the history of our country where Territories have been given the choice of statehood upon terms which compel the practical extinction of their boundaries, to the great humiliation of their inhabitants, boundaries which have existed for nearly half a century and which the inhabitants that they surround had a right to regard as permanent.

Mr. Speaker, the present Territory of Arizona was separated from the Territory of New Mexico by an act of Congress passed in 1863. It was passed because of the persistent demands of the people then living within the present limits of Arizona, because the then Territory of New Mexico was so large and unwieldy. It is interesting to examine the debates that took place upon this measure when it was before Congress. Let me call your attention to the proceedings of Congress had at that time, and I quote extracts from some of the remarks made by some of the Members of Congress which disclose the reasons why the Territory of Arizona was created.

The bill creating the Territory of Arizona was known as H. R. 357, and was reported on March 24, 1862, by Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, from the Committee on Territories. The bill, after establishing the boundaries of the Territories, provided—

> And that said government shall be maintained and continued until such time as the people residing in said Territory shall, with the consent of Congress, form a State government, republican in form, as prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, and apply for and obtain admission into the Union as a State on an equal footing with the original States. (37th Cong., 2d sess., p. 134.)

Debate was had on the bill May 8, 1862. It was opposed, among others, by Mr. Wheeler, of New York, on the ground of too few population, inadequate resources, transitory population, and the same reasons generally as are now urged against the admission of Arizona alone to statehood.

The Delegate from New Mexico, Mr. Watts, replied to the effect that he had introduced the bill at the earnest request of the people of Arizona; that the creation of the new Territory had been recommended by President Lincoln, and then he continued, and referring to the proposed division of the Territory said:

> But I know and feel that it will not be left undivided. It is a Territory large enough to make four States of the size of New York or Pennsylvania, and I know and feel that it will not be allowed to remain undivided. I know it will be considered too large for one Territory. (37th Cong., 2d sess., p. 2025.)

The bill passed the House May 18, 1862, and was sent to the Senate, where it came up on July 3. It was supported by Senator Wade, of Ohio, who said:

> The organization of the Territory of Arizona has been a matter of constant importunity upon this Government for more than seven years to my certain knowledge, and there has always been an uneasiness among that people about their being attached to New Mexico. When you look at the map you find that this Territory is of vast extent and the settlements wide apart. The principal settlement in Arizona, as I understand it, is 700 miles from Santa Fe, the capital of New Mexico. It is found exceedingly inconvenient for the officers of New Mexico to do business there. (37th Cong., 2d sess., p. 3094.)

Senator McDougal, of California, contributed to the debate, from which I take the following:

> It is perhaps my duty to say something on this question, as I think I am the only Senator who knows anything personally of the country proposed to be organized into a Territory. I have traveled all over that country, and I understand its necessities. The Rio Grande goes down to the Gulf of Mexico; the Gila goes to the Colorado and down to the Gulf of California. They drain different sections of the country.
> They are distinct portions of the country. Arizona should be organized; and I say this not by way of argument, but by way of expressing an opinion, an informed opinion, having been all through that country, that it is due to that country and the people who have gone to inhabit it and who have millions invested there that they should have a form of government, and I trust the Senate will concur in passing the bill.

The bill passed the Senate February 20, 1863. Senator Wade again spoke and said:

> The Territory of New Mexico, including Arizona, is an exceedingly large one, altogether too extensive for any municipal business to be transacted in its extreme portions. * * * The principal point of population in Arizona is 700 miles from the seat of justice in New Mexico. (37th Cong., 3d sess., p. 1126.)

The vote in the Senate was as follows:

> Yeas, 25—Anthony, Arnold, Chandler, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Foote, Foster, Harlan, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Latham, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilmot, and Wilson of Massachusetts.
> Nays, 12—Carlile, Clark, Collamer, Davis, Fessenden, Grimes, Kennedy, Powell, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Turpie, and Wilson of Missouri.

It is pertinent here to quote from the act creating this Territory. The organic act states that it—

Shall be maintained and continued until such time as the people residing in said Territory shall, with the consent of Congress, form a State government, republican in form as prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, and apply for and obtain admission into the Union as a State.

Mr. Speaker, when a Territory is created there is an implied obligation created at the same time that that Territory, when it reaches a certain population and is otherwise qualified, may be admitted into the Union as a State. [Applause.]

Every pioneer who journeyed to this far-off land and made his home within the confines of the present Territory of Arizona had the right to expect that in due time the Territory of Arizona would be admitted into the Union and form a new star upon the flag of our country. Every pioneer who during the last forty years has made his home in this Territory labored under the impression that he was engaged in the glorious work of State building; not the State building obtained by the addition of the Territory in which he was living to another Territory, but the same State building which has at all times been followed in the history of our country up to the present hour. This contemplated union of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico is opposed by practically the unanimous voice of Arizona and by a large portion, if not a majority, of the people of New Mexico. Those of New Mexico who favor it do so because they fear that they will not obtain statehood within the near future except by the jointure with Arizona.

I have in my desk hundreds of editorial clippings upon this subject taken from the press of Arizona, and almost without exception these editorials are bitter in their denunciation of the present measure. The public sentiment of Arizona is against this bill. This sentiment is shared by the people of both political parties of that Territory. I append to my remarks a few extracts from newspapers which justify my statement upon this phase of the question. I therefore reiterate and declare my firm belief that the passage of this bill without an opportunity to amend, which would make the bill inoperative unless it is indorsed at the polls by a majority vote of the voters of each Territory, is unjust, un-American, and an unnecessary denial of those fundamental rights which should be cheerfully accorded to all citizens of our common country.

The second amendment which I would present, if amendments were allowed, would provide that the State of Arizona, created by this bill by the jointure of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, should have the privilege of separating into two States when the population of each Territory as now constituted should reach a certain population—say, 300,000; or, I would be willing to place it even as high as 500,000 each. In view of the tremendous size of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, it seems to me that such a provision is in every sense reasonable. The Territories of Arizona and New Mexico comprise an area 10,000 square miles greater than that of the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, the District of Columbia, and Virginia, and the latter area is now represented at the other end of the Capitol by twenty-two Senators.

It seems to me only fair and right to the western section of our country, if our population and wealth shall continue to grow at the same rate that it has for the last fifty years, that we should have at least the hope held out to us of greater representation in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the States of Nevada, Utah, and Colorado will be adjoining the State of Arizona, and will they not be the same size as the State of Arizona?

Mr. NEEDHAM. I think that is true.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, is it fair that Arizona should have only two Senators and be represented in the other body by two men when these other States of equal size have six, when they have the same amount of territory, the same kind of people, and the same kind of conditions?

Mr. NEEDHAM. As I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, I think there should be in this bill a provision by which the people of this State to be created should have the right in the event of reaching a certain population to separate. If they should not make use of this privilege, that is a matter primarily to be considered by the people within the newly created State.

The State of Texas has the right to separate into five States. Some of the Members of the House have stated that Texas will never take advantage of that privilege. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the history of Texas in this particular furnishes sufficient reason why there is no danger to be apprehended and why the immense territory of the new State of Arizona, if this bill passes, should have the right to separate into two States.

In 1850 the immense territory of the United States west of the Mississippi River, comprising as it does approximately two-thirds of the area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska and our island possessions, had a population of less than 2,000,000 people, or about 8½ per cent of the then total population of the Union, while in 1900 this same territory had grown to a population of approximately 21,000,000, or about 27 per cent of our total population. And yet, Mr. Speaker, if this bill passes, this immense territory of our country, practically two-thirds of it, no matter what its population may in time reach, must forever be content with wielding a little over one-third of the power of the Union in the United States Senate. The States west of the Mississippi River are practically three times as large in area as the States east of the Mississippi River. I will append to my remarks a letter and some tables furnished me by the Director of the Census which bear upon this question.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the two changes which I have suggested in the pending bill should be accepted. But under the rule which provides for the consideration of this measure this can not be done. I feel compelled, from a sense of duty and conviction, to vote against the bill the same as I did against the rule providing for its consideration. Upon two former occasions I have voted for bills providing for the admission of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico into the Union as separate States. I realize that many Members, both of this body and of the Senate of the United States, conscientiously believe that neither of these Territories is now qualified for statehood. Of those holding such an opinion I have no criticism to offer. I am ready to vote for the admission of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico into the Union as separate States, firmly believing that even conceding their unpreparedness, it would be infinitely less injurious to all sections of our country, in its ultimate effect, than the enactment of the present bill into law providing for the jointure of these Territories and the creation of another immense State in the western section of our country.

Mr. Speaker, my opposition to the present bill is fundamental. I am opposed to the creation of any more large States without some saving clause similar to that contained in the act providing for the admission of the State of Texas. The ideal division of our country would be into States approximately equal in size, in wealth, and in population. A State too large is as objectionable as a State too small. A small State with a comparatively small population is subject to corruption, and the same is true of a large State, because the poor citizen is debarred from that active participation in its political affairs on account of the expense which such participation necessitates.

I believe in the West. I have confidence and faith in her growth and development. I have no patience with the charge, too often indulged in, that certain sections of our country are incapable of sustaining large populations. The same charge was brought against the Northwest Territory at the very beginning of our nation's history, by James Monroe, then a Member of Congress, and subsequently President of the United States. Daniel Webster indulged in the same prophecy and applied it to the State of California. And the same doleful opinion has been expressed here this day in regard to the future of Arizona and New Mexico. Who can foretell the beneficent results which can be obtained under the operation of our national irrigation law? The possibilities capable of attainment under this act in this section of our country, I firmly believe, are beyond calculation. I believe that in the economy of nature all portions of our common country will in time be utilized, their resources developed, and all contain and support reasonably large populations.

Mr. Speaker, I plead for justice to the West. Let no man say that such a plea is the cry of sectionalism. A just repository of political power in all sections of the country is essential to that harmony and contentment so necessary to national greatness. No man should be jealous of the power of the States of New England and of the eastern part of our country. Neither should New England and the East, with its glorious history, which is the heritage of us all, be willing to deny to the western section of our country all hope of an approach to an attainment toward equality of political power. Mr. Speaker, firmly believing that the present bill, if enacted into law, will be unprecedented and unjust, I shall vote against it. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington, April 7, 1904.

Hon. J. C. NEEDHAM,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to the request made in your favor of April 1, I inclose you herewith two tables, one giving the area in square miles of the States and Territories, arranged in order of size, Arizona and New Mexico being grouped as one; the other showing the square miles and acres in each State and Territory west of the Mississippi River and east of the Mississippi River, as well as the total area of each division. Minnesota and Louisiana have been added with the States west of the Mississippi, as the greater part of their area lies west of the river.

The average size of the States and Territories west of the Mississippi River is 93,181 square miles, or 59,635,840 acres. The average size of a State east of the Mississippi, including the District of Columbia, is 32,656 square miles, or 20,899,840 acres. The average of the Western States is nearly three times as large as the average of the Eastern States.

Arizona and New Mexico combined would be larger in area by 10,000 square miles than the New England States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, the District of Columbia, and Virginia, their area being 225,445 square miles, as against 235,600 square miles for New Mexico and Arizona.

The combined area of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Kentucky is less by 2,225 square miles than the territory of New Mexico and Arizona.

The combined area of Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, and Connecticut is less by 590 square miles than that of Arizona and New Mexico.

Excluding Alaska and Hawaii, Arizona and New Mexico combined, comprize 7.8 per cent of the total area of the United States.

Trusting that this information is what you desire, I am,

Very respectfully,

S. N. D. NORTH, Director.

[The Arizona Republican, April 16, 1904.]

QUESTION PROPERLY ANSWERED—MR. FOWLER REFLECTS ARIZONA SENTIMENT VERY ACCURATELY.

Hon. JAMES C. NEEDHAM, a Member of Congress from California, is a warm personal friend of B. A. Fowler, of this city, and on more than one occasion has proved himself a friend of all Arizona by casting his influence in favor of this Territory when vital legislation was pending. He has placed himself on record respecting the statehood question as against the jointure enterprise, unless that measure be the expressed wish of Arizona people, recognizing it himself as a movement designed for no good purpose. Just before Mr. Fowler left Washington, in a private conversation Mr. NEEDHAM told him that he was still firm in his convictions and was anxious at any and all times to further the interests of Arizona, which in many ways are mutual with the interests of California.

This introduction makes clear the following letter, which Mr. Fowler wrote to Congressman NEEDHAM yesterday, and a copy of which the Republican is permitted to publish. It also demonstrates where Arizona is the gainer by having men like Mr. Fowler, who are true to local interests and at the same time hold the confidence of influential legislators, at the capital:

APRIL 15, 1904.

Hon. J. C. NEEDHAM, M. C., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your telegram of this date before me as follows: "Are people of Arizona still opposed to joint statehood with New Mexico? Is there any change of sentiment since you were here?"

I make immediate reply as follows:

Arizona people were never more determined in opposition to joint statehood. Absolutely no change in sentiment since you saw me, except it is more outspoken. Such atrocious jointure will yet be defeated.

I can not picture to you the intensity of bitter opposition on the part of our people and the united press of Arizona to the atrocious proposition of tying us up with New Mexico as one State. In my judgment the Territory of Arizona will cast an overwhelming vote against such a union, and from the best information at my command New Mexico will cast a large if not a majority vote against it.

Wild statements were made in Washington on this subject by men ignorant of the facts, as well as by men who ought to have known better, especially my friend RODEY. The people who are pushing this proposition do not understand existing conditions here. They are trying to unite and amalgamate two heterogeneous elements. The population is radically different, the customs are different, the laws have grown up from different foundations, and there are so many intricate and complex problems arising therefrom in the way of vested rights, water rights, etc., that it will be almost impossible to bring about a union that shall be just and equitable and proper.

The opinion is freely expressed here that if Congress forces us into a constitutional convention wholly and completely against our will, which would be most unfortunate, we will fight it out on the floor of the convention.

Why not let us remain a Territory until the next census, giving us an opportunity to develop our agricultural resources under the magnificent irrigation systems that have already been begun or projected along the Colorado, Salt, and Gila rivers, and giving us more time for the development of our almost limitless mineral resources, which have as yet scarcely been touched? The tide of immigration from the North, East, and South is now full and strong; a few years more and we can point to a civilization, population, wealth, and resources of which any State in the Union may well be proud.

And if in 1912, after the census has been taken and published, and we have had eight years to grow, then if in the wisdom of Congress it is not advisable to adopt us into the sisterhood of States, after having waited patiently fifty years from the Territorial organization, we will wait still longer and go on demonstrating our fitness for association with our brothers and sisters from the Atlantic to the Pacific, whom we have left to come into this section to build up a new empire.

If there is anything further that I can do to assist you in fighting this joint statehood proposition, pray let me know what it is, and give me an opportunity to join you.

I think perhaps it may be of assistance to you for me to send you a few copies of recent issues of our local papers, containing editorials on this subject, which I will attend to at once. Meanwhile hoping to hear from you on the subject.

ON THE WRONG TRACK.

The Denver Republican seems to be carrying on a campaign for the proposed bill to join the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as one State, with the hope, perhaps, of influencing some of the New Mexico Republicans, who have declared their opposition to such a measure. The Republican admits that the bill will pass the House, but is rather dubious as to what the Senate will do, believing that rather than put it to a test the bill will be allowed to die. Continuing, the Republican says:

"Although there is considerable opposition in both New Mexico and Arizona to this measure, it would seem good policy to accept it rather than wait for, it might be, many years before statehood could be secured on other terms. There is so little disposition in Congress to admit Arizona and New Mexico as separate States that if they reject joint statehood they will practically vote to remain Territories for probably a decade, or, it may be, two decades longer."

Rather than be tied to New Mexico, Arizona would remain a Territory indefinitely. These are the sentiments expressed at nonpartisan mass meetings throughout the Territory, and when the people go that far they certainly are in earnest. But the Republican can not see the point, and appeals to the pride of the westerners by saying:

"The interests of the far West call for the admission of the new States as soon as possible, not so much because of their influence in Congress as because of their more rapid development under a State rather than under a Territorial government. The sooner New Mexico and Arizona come in the better it will be for them and for the remainder of the West, regardless of whether they enter as one or as two States."

Perhaps no other section of the West and no other section of the world is more interested in this than Arizona, and no other section will be affected so greatly by such an action by Congress as Arizona. The Republican makes a mistake when it says the proposed new State will develop more rapidly than under Territorial form of government. Arizona and New Mexico are so radically different in their pursuits, development, and progress, and their interests so divergent, that an attempt might as well be made to join Hawaii and Cuba, making the same laws apply to both countries, as to force the people into a union that is utterly abhorrent to them.

Arizona does not owe the West such a sacrifice, and she has no intention of making it.

[The Arizona Gazette, March 9, 1904.]

THE INSTRUCTED AND THE INSTRUCTIONS.

The six delegates and six alternates selected by the Republican convention at Tucson to attend the national Republican convention at Chicago in June are men such as any Arizonan might feel proud to honor with such a mission. They are men whose public and private records are such no word of discredit can be said against them. They have proven themselves men that can be trusted to carry out the wishes of the people.

The convention has seen fit to instruct these delegates on certain points that are considered necessary to the welfare of the people. The support of the Republican party of Arizona is pledged to the present Administration, headed by Theodore Roosevelt.

The administration of President Roosevelt's friend and appointee, Governor Brodie, is indorsed as one worthy the admiration and support of the general public. The delegates are instructed further to secure, if possible, a plank in the national platform pledging single and separate statehood to Arizona at an early date. It is the desire of the Republican party of Arizona that Congress right the wrong that has been done Pima County in foisting upon the people of that county nearly half a million dollars worth of bonds, which were pronounced valueless by the Supreme Court of the United States.

These are instructions that the six delegates are expected to obey in so far as it is possible, and that they are willing and anxious to carry out the will of the people has been shown by their attitudes regarding these questions. It is well understood that every Republican in Arizona is unalterably opposed to the joining of New Mexico and Arizona as one State under whatsoever name, and that they will fight such a proposition to the bitter end.

[San Francisco Chronicle, April 4, 1904.]

THE STATEHOOD BILL.

It is plain that the appeals of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma for separate admission to statehood will be denied by the present Congress, as they were by the last one. The programme is to pass a bill which will not be acceptable to either of the applicants for statehood. At the last session of Congress it was proposed to exclude Arizona and New Mexico and create a new State out of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. The proposition was opposed by the friends of Arizona and New Mexico because of the unfair discrimination, and Oklahoma revolted against being united with Indian Territory. At this session the proposition is to create two new States—one out of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, as was suggested last year, and another out of Arizona and New Mexico combined. The House Committee on Territories has prepared a report favoring this course.

It is not at all probable that the people of Oklahoma are any more willing now than they were last year to be annexed to Indian Territory, and thus be forced to carry its burdens. Arizona and New Mexico can be safely relied upon to indignantly resent the proposition. Each demands separate statehood or nothing at all. The union of the two Territories would make a State as large as and more cumbersome in many respects than Texas. Besides, there are local political differences in the two Territories which it is hopeless to expect to harmonize. Each one is fully qualified to assume separate statehood, and should the bill pass creating one State out of the two, neither will accept a privilege of such doubtful value.

[The Arizona Republican, Phoenix, Ariz., March 27, 1904.]

FORBIDDING THE CEREMONY.

The cartoon which we reproduce this morning from the Denver Republican hits off quite correctly the statehood situation. Congress is determined to join the two Territories in a union which is unwelcome to both bride and groom. Usually, at least one of the parties to a wedding ceremony is anxious to go ahead with the proceedings; hence the situation presented now is unique. The magistrate alone is proposing that there shall be a marriage.

Perhaps, however, the families of the high contracting parties will be able to prevent the union. Certainly the objections are numerous and clamorous. Our latest advices from New Mexico are that joint statehood is quite as unwelcome over there as it is here.

Let us hope that Congress will realize before it is too late that the good of the public morals does not require Arizona and New Mexico to be joined together.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, nothing contributes more to a satisfactory discussion of any subject than a clear understanding of its terms. I therefore will begin my remarks by stating as frankly and as succinctly as I can the differences which exist between the Democratic and Republican members of the Committee on the Territories, and shall then make use of such portion of the time as has been assigned to me to state the reasons which impel me to oppose the bill offered by the Republican majority and to support the bill which has been prepared as a substitute by the Democratic minority.

At the beginning of this Congress a number of bills conferring the right of statehood upon the four remaining continental Territories were introduced. These bills were referred to the Committee on the Territories, and elaborate hearings were had before that committee.

At the conclusion of those hearings the committee formulated its judgment. The majority have presented a bill creating two States out of the four Territories—the State of Arizona, composed of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, with a capital located at Santa Fe, in the now Territory of New Mexico, and the State of Oklahoma, composed of the Territory of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, with a capital located at Guthrie, in the now Territory of Oklahoma.

The minority have prepared, and if permitted to do so will submit it to a vote of this House, a bill creating four States, one out of each of the four Territories as they now geographically exist.

There are many things connected with the bill offered by the majority which are objectionable. For instance, in the constitutional convention provided for in Oklahoma that Territory is allowed sixty delegates and Indian Territory is allowed only fifty delegates. By the census of 1900 the population of Oklahoma was, in round numbers, 398,000, and of Indian Territory 392,000. Both Territories have increased wonderfully since 1900, but it is altogether probable that the population of Indian Territory is now in excess of that of Oklahoma. But, taking the census of 1900 as a basis, there is no justification in allowing Oklahoma the great preponderance in the constitutional convention provided for in this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I would state to the gentleman that since that time the Kiowa and Comanche Reservation has been open to settlement.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand so, and I understand further that the majority of the Committee on Territories, in fixing this division for the delegates in the constitutional convention, proceeded upon the theory that they would eliminate from the population of Indian Territory the Indians in that Territory, and yet you have just declared that they have been made citizens of the United States and should have——

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. The committee did not proceed upon that theory, but they proceeded upon the theory that they would eliminate the Indians not taxed in both Territories.

Mr. RUSSELL. This injustice is accentuated when we come to the case of Arizona. There the Territory of New Mexico is allowed seventy delegates in the constitutional convention, while Arizona is allowed only forty. Again, in forming the Congressional districts in the proposed new State of Oklahoma the majority have seized without remorse and worn without shame the diadem of Elbridge Gerry. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But I do not propose to spend time in discussing the details of this bill. That may be done by some other gentleman. The line of cleavage between us is: "Shall there be two States made from those four great Territories, or shall there be four States?" And it is to this simple proposition that I shall direct my argument.

Sir, prior to the war between the States there was no subject of national legislation which was more fruitful of acrimonious debate than the admission of new States into this Union. The admission of Louisiana, the admission of Texas, the admission of Missouri, the admission of Kansas, were the storm centers around which raged the tumultuous passions of those days. The whole subject of statehood seems to have been considered with reference to preserving the balance of power between the slave States and the free States, as they were then called. It may serve a useful purpose to digress here for a short while to recall an exciting incident that occurred in the House of Representatives ninety-three years ago.

On the 14th day of January, 1811, the House of Representatives was considering the question of admitting the Territory of Orleans into the Union under the name of the State of Louisiana. Mr. Josiah Quincy, of the State of Massachusetts, took the floor in opposition to the pending bill. He insisted with all the strength of his great intellect that Congress had no power under the Constitution to admit as States into the Union Territories lying outside of the original limits of the United States, and he vehemently asserted that an attempt to exercise such a power gave just cause for dissolving the Union. Upon the utterance of these dis-Union sentiments Mr. Quincy, of Massachusetts, was called to order by Mr. Poindexter, of Mississippi, and thereupon the record proceeds as follows:

Mr. Quincy repeated and justified the remark he had made, which, to save all misrepresentation, he committed to writing in the following words: "If this bill passes, it is my deliberate opinion that it is virtually a dissolution of this Union; that it will free the States from their moral obligation, and, as it will be the right of all, so it will be the duty of some definitely to prepare for a separation—amicably if they can, violently if they must." (Annals of Congress, vol. 22, p. 525.)

After some discussion, the Speaker held that the language uttered by Mr. Quincy was out of order, and Mr. Quincy appealed to the House from the decision of the Chair, and the House overruled the Speaker by a vote of 56 to 53, and thereupon Mr. Quincy proceeded with his argument.

Among other things, he said:

This Constitution never was and never can be strained to lap over all the wilderness of the West without essentially affecting both the rights and convenience of its real proprietors. It was never constructed to form a covering for the inhabitants of the Missouri and the Red River country. And whenever it is attempted to stretch it over them, it will rend assunder. * * *

The very extravagance of the intended use is a conclusive evidence against the possibility of the grant of such a power as is here proposed. Why, sir, I have already heard of six States, and some say that there will be at no great distance of time, more. I have also heard that the mouth of the Ohio will be far to the east of the center of the contemplated empire. If this bill is passed, the principle is recognized. All the rest are mere questions of expediency. It is impossible such a power could be granted. It was not for these men that our fathers fought. It was not for them this Constitution was adopted. You have no authority to throw the rights and liberties and property of this people into a "hotch pot" with the wild men on the Missouri, nor with the mixed though more respectable race of Anglo-Hispano-Gallo-Americans, who bask on the sands in the mouth of the Mississippi. (Annals of Congress, vol. 22, pp. 537, 538.)

This shortsighted view of treating the West has found utterance more times than in the remarks of Mr. Quincy, and how gloriously have all of them been refuted. More than six States were admitted to the Union out of the Louisiana purchase. Already twelve splendid States carved out of that Territory are in the Union to-day, splendid monuments of the wisdom of Thomas Jefferson. And these States, which so excited the fears of Mr. Quincy in 1811, saved the Union in 1861. Instead of being a savor of death unto death they were a savor of life unto life. It was the courage and valor and determination of the men from Iowa and Nebraska and Wisconsin and Michigan and the States from the great Middle West which crushed and overpowered the ragged battalions in gray. It was to the West that the country looked for the great Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the sinews of war and preserve the credit of the country in the perilous times from 1861 to 1865.

It was from the West came the great President to guide the ship of state amid the most portentous storm that ever threatened to engulf it. And from the West came that great commander who, aided by western soldiers, was finally able to receive the surrender of him whom the President of the United States says was the greatest captain ever produced by the English-speaking people. I congratulate the House, sir, that the questions arising on this bill can be considered in the light of undisturbed reason and disposed of without passion. I make this statement advisedly. Both the great political parties in the last covenants which they made with the people of the United States were in accord with this one question. In the year 1900 the representatives of the Democratic party met in Kansas City and the representatives of the Republican party met at Philadelphia.

Those great conventions announced to the people of the United States the things they stood for and made certain promises which they solemnly agreed to perform if they were intrusted with power. Among those promises was to give statehood to Oklahoma and to New Mexico and to Arizona. The people of the country took you Republicans at your word, and the time is at hand for you to fulfill your promise. This bill is not a compliance of your platform pledge. It is a violation of it.

In the year 1900 the Republican national convention passed this resolution:

We favor home rule for and the early admission to statehood of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

It is an insult to the intelligence of the people of the United States to pretend that you are complying with your promise to them by combining New Mexico and Arizona in one State. It is an outrageous betrayal of public confidence to pass this measure—a bill which not only robs the Territory of Arizona of her separate organic existence, but robs her of her very name. For the sake of public decency, if this outrage is to be perpetrated, let it not be done in the name of keeping faith with the people. The only way to comply with that promise contained in the last platform on which the Republican party elected its candidate for the Presidency is to make one State of New Mexico and another State of Arizona and another State of Oklahoma. Let us see if there is authority for this contention. On the 10th day of December, 1902, House bill No. 12543 was pending in the Senate. That bill was to enable the people of each of the three Territories of Arizona, Oklahoma, and New Mexico to form State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States. Senator M. S. QUAY, a member of the Senate Committee on Territories, filed a report in favor of that bill. After alluding to the promise made in the Republican platform of 1900, he concludes with these words:

For the reason, therefore, that the Republican party in 1900 promised statehood to the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, while no such pledge was made or promised in the national convention for the Indian Territory, which is not now fit for statehood, and that these Territories compare favorably in number and character of population, as well as in resources and territorial extent, with nearly all of the States admitted to the Union for many years past and in accordance with the precedents of our history, I recommend that House bill No. 12543 be passed without amendment.

No one will question the stalwart Republicanism of Senator FORAKER. On the 19th day of January, 1903, in an argument delivered on the floor of the Senate in favor of the bill just mentioned, to admit Arizona and New Mexico and Oklahoma to statehood, he appealed to this promise made by the Republican party. Let me read you a portion of what he said:

It was my fortune to be not only a member of the committee on resolutions in the national Republican convention of 1896, but to be also chairman of that committee, and I was a member of the subcommittee and chairman of the subcommittee that drafted that platform. I knew then exactly what we were putting in that platform. We put it in (speaking of the statehood plank) after giving a hearing to everybody who wanted to be heard; we put it in there, thinking it would strengthen the cause of Republicanism throughout the West. It was not an idle thing; it was not an ill-considered thing on the part of those who did it; it was carefully considered, and it was done after it had been thoroughly discussed. When we came to Philadelphia I was not chairman of the committee, nor the chairman of the subcommittee, but I was a member of the committe and a member of the subcommittee that drafted that platform.

Then, after quoting the statehood plank in the Republican platform of 1896, the Senator proceeds:

In 1900 we dispensed with all qualifications and boldly and unqualifiedly declared as follows:

"We favor home rule for and the early admission to statehood of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma."

Now, Mr. President, if we are to be told that is not binding because it was not under oath, or if we are to be told for any reason whatever we are now to disregard it; if, in other words, insincerity is to be written across that declaration of the Republican national platform, it shall not be written by my hand. * * * That declaration was not put in there to help the opposition; it was put in there to help the Republican party; and we put it there because we thought it was right. I feel to-day just as I did then, and I intend to vote now, when it is not a mere platform proposition, as I voted then, because I am in earnest now, as I was then.

The Democratic party favored statehood for the Territory of Arizona in the platform of 1900, and we are ready to vote for statehood for her now. We favored statehood for New Mexico, and we are ready now to comply with that promise. We pledged statehood to Oklahoma and we stand ready to now redeem that pledge. If you gentlemen of the majority will join with us in an honest effort to carry out in good faith that one proposition upon which both of the great parties agreed in 1900 we will welcome into this "indestructible union of indestructible States" those great Territories. You will then stand acquitted of having written insincerity across the platform of your party.

But I turn to another phase of this great question. I maintain that the passage of this bill of the majority will not only be a violation of party covenants but a violation of national faith.

The bill proposes to join Arizona and New Mexico in one State, to call that State Arizona, and to locate the capital of the new State at Santa Fe. Everyone knows that the people of Arizona are opposed to this union with New Mexico. Everyone knows that its consummation will result in the people of Arizona being completely dominated by New Mexico. Everyone knows that the two Territories have little in common, either in religion, customs, or laws. It is hoped to mollify opposition in Arizona by retaining that name for the new State, but this piece of political legerdemain will deceive no one. There is not an intelligent schoolboy in Arizona who does not thoroughly understand that it will be a case where Arizona will have the pedigree and New Mexico will have the horse. Arizona was organized as a Territory in 1863. Prior to that time this great region had been a county of New Mexico, which was organized as a Territory in 1851. For many years the people of Arizona had been seeking a separate Territorial existence. It was then claimed by them that on account of the vast extent of the country, and on account of geographical conformations, union with New Mexico was inconvenient and undesirable. Many bills had been introduced in Congress looking to their separation. In 1862 President Lincoln recommended the organization of the Territory of Arizona, and in that year the Delegate from New Mexico offered a bill for that purpose, which became a law in 1863.

Now, I assert this proposition of law, that the act of 1863 organizing the Territory of Arizona was tantamount to an obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to grant statehood to the people within the limits of that Territory whenever they were able to meet the requirements in point of population, wealth, and intelligence.

From what clause in the Constitution is derived the power to create and organize Territories and Territorial governments?

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, but nothing in the Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

No power to organize a Territorial government can be fairly traceable to this clause. Such power is not expressed here, nor is it to be derived by "necessary implication." The Constitution speaks of territory here in the sense of property and not in the sense of governmental entities. The language is:

> To dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

Under this clause the Government may survey its public lands and may fix the terms upon which it will dispose of its property. These public lands or property may exist within the limits of a State, yet it will not be contended that by virtue of this clause the General Government was vested with the power to exercise any control or regulation over any of the domestic affairs of people residing within the limits of such States, even though they may reside upon territory within such States belonging to the Government of the United States. This view is fortified by an examination of the proceedings of the convention which framed the Constitution. I read from Debates in the Federal Convention:

> Mr. Carroll withdrew his motion and moved the following:
> "Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to alter the claims of the United States or of any of the individual States to the western territory; but all such claims shall be examined into and decided upon by the Supreme Court of the United States."
> Mr. Gouverneur Morris moved to postpone this, in order to take up the following:
> "The legislature shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution contained shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims either of the United States or of any particular State."
> The postponement was agreed to nem. con.
> Mr. L. Martin moved to amend the proposition of Mr. Gouverneur Morris by adding: "But all such claims may be examined into and decided upon by the Supreme Court of the United States."
> Mr. GOUVERNEUR MORRIS. This is unnecessary, as all suits to which the United States are parties are all ready to be decided by the Supreme Court.
> Mr. L. MARTIN. It is proper, in order to remove all doubts on this point. * * *
> The motion of Mr. Gouverneur Morris was agreed to, Maryland alone dissenting. (The Madison Papers, vol. 3, p. 1466.)

The organization of a Territorial government, like that accomplished for Arizona in 1863, is a political act, and no circumstances can be imagined under which it could be made the subject of litigation in the Federal courts. So I take it that it is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the clause of the Constitution which I have read does not confer on Congress the right to organize Territories as political subdivisions, and that the word "Territory," as found in that clause, is used as descriptive of property rather than as descriptive of political entities.

From what source, then, does Congress derive the power to create Territories and to organize them? Certainly it must exist somewhere in the Constitution if such power can be lawfully exercised.

Section 3 of Article IV provides:

> New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new States shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

Section 8 of Article I provides:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

Upon these two provisions of the Federal Constitution "hang all the law and the prophets," in so far as the right of Congress to organize Territorial government is concerned. Let me examine this position. The old Articles of Confederation were silent upon the subject of admitting new States. Prepared during the blood and carnage of the Revolutionary war, when the issue of the conflict trembled in doubtful balances, it is not surprising that the statesmen of that day were content to provide for the saving the States that did exist and took no thought for the admission of new ones. But the achievement of independence in 1782 pressed other questions to the front. The extensive territory lying along the then western border gave rise to conflicting claims and mutual jealousies between the States; but better counsel prevailed, and beginning with Virginia in 1784, and followed by the other States, that great body of land known as the "Northwest Territory" was ceded to the General Government. In 1787 Congress adopted the celebrated ordinance known as the "Ordinance of 1787," for the government of that Territory. That ordinance provided that in that great section of this Union there should be created not less than three nor more than five States; that whenever as many as 5,000 inhabitants were found in the district a Territorial form of government should be created; and then article 5 declares:

> When any of the said States have 60,000 free inhabitants therein such State shall be admitted, by its Delegates, into the Congress of the United States, on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government: Provided, The constitution and government so to be formed shall be republican and in conformity to the principles contained in these articles, and so far as it can be consistent with the general interests of the confederacy, such admission shall be allowed at an earlier time, and when there may be a less number of free inhabitants in the State than 60,000.

When this ordinance was passed by the Congress then sitting in New York, the great convention which framed the Constitution was in session in Philadelphia. Many distinguished men were members of both bodies, and the conclusion is irresistible that each body was thoroughly advised as to what was occurring in the other.

So, when the Constitutional Convention declared that "new States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union," that body knew that the vast expanse of country north of the Ohio River would be carved into not less than three nor more than five States, and knew also that the organization of Territorial governments might in every instance be the prelude to the organization of State governments. The fact, therefore, that the Constitution does not specifically grant to Congress the right to create Territories can be accounted for upon no other ground than that the framers of the Constitution were clearly of the opinion that the right to organize Territorial governments was a necessary incident to and plainly implied from the power to admit new States.

Authority for this contention is abundant. In a very elaborate report made to the Senate by Senator Douglas on the 12th day of March, 1856, on Kansas, he said:

> Is not the organization of a Territory eminently necessary and proper as a means of enabling the people thereof to form and mold their local and domestic institutions and establish a State government under the authority of the Constitution preparatory to its admission into the Union? If so, the right of Congress to pass the organic act for the temporary government is clearly included in the provision which authorizes the admission of new States.

In a very exhaustive report made to the Senate on the admission of Dakota, on the 11th of January, 1886, Senator Benjamin Harrison said:

> Territorial governments were always regarded as formative and temporary, to be superseded by State governments as soon as the necessary conditions existed.

I invite the attention of the Republican side of the House to this additional authority. In the Republican platform of 1888 you made this declaration:

> The Government by Congress of the Territories is based upon necessity only to the end that they may become States in the Union.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I therefore contend that when Congress separated Arizona from New Mexico in 1863 and organized it into the Territory of Arizona, it was done in the exercise of that power granted in the Constitution to "admit new States." It was the temporary and formative step to precede statehood for Arizona, and Congress no longer has the right to annihilate the political entity which it thus created by constitutional methods.

When you made Arizona a Territory, you made a political subdivision which you have no right to obliterate. The act of of 1863 organizing the Territory was the creation of a "power coupled with an interest" which you can not in good conscience revoke or reverse.

The Constitution forbids you to form any State "by the junction of two or more States or parts of States without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned." When you created these Territories you were only authorized to do so because the Constitution gave you the lawful power to endow them with the Promethean fire of immortal statehood, and you have no right now to destroy the life which you have thus created, nor to form one State by the junction of two inchoate States without the consent of the legislatures of the inchoate States concerned.

Let me invite the House, while on this subject, to some of the proceedings which occurred in this body when the Territory of Arizona was created.

On March 24, 1862, Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, from the Committee on Territories, reported House bill No. 357, to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Arizona. The bill established the boundaries of the Territory of Arizona, defined the methods by which it should be governed, and then declared:

> And that said government shall be maintained and continued until such time as the people residing in said Territory shall, with the consent of Congress, form a State government republican in form, as prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, and apply for and obtain admission into the Union as a State on an equal footing with the original States. (37th Cong., 2d sess., p. 134.)

On May 8, 1862, debate was had on the bill. Its passage was resisted by Mr. Wheeler, of New York, on the ground of too few population, too little resources to bear tax burdens, mining population, and transitory and other stereotyped arguments, such as the ones now made against the admission of Arizona to statehood.

Mr. Watts, Delegate from New Mexico, replied. He stated that he had introduced the bill at the earnest and persistent requests of people of Arizona; that the President had recommended it; and, continuing, speaking of the proposed division of the Territory of New Mexico, he said:

But I know and feel that it will not be left undivided. It is a Territory large enough to make four States of the size of New York or Pennsylvania, and I know and feel that it will not be allowed to remain undivided. I know it will be considered too large for one Territory. (37th Cong., 2d sess., p. 2025.)

Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, spoke in favor of the bill, showing that New Mexico was too large and ought to be divided; that Arizona had more population than most of the Territories when organized; that its natural advantages and wealth, when developed, would make it one of the greatest of our Territories.

The bill passed the House May 8, 1862.

The bill was debated in the Senate July 3, 1862. Senator Wade supported the bill and argued the justice and necessity of organizing the Territory. He said:

The organization of the Territory of Arizona has been a matter of constant importunity upon this Government for more than seven years to my certain knowledge, and there has always been an uneasiness among that people about their being attached to New Mexico. When you look at the map, you find that this Territory is of vast extent and the settlements wide apart. The principal settlement in Arizona, as I understand it, is 700 miles from Santa Fe, the capital of New Mexico. It is found exceedingly inconvenient for the officers of New Mexico to do business there. (37th Cong., 2d sess., p. 3094.)

Senator McDougal, of California, said:

It is perhaps my duty to say something on this question, as I think I am the only Senator who knows anything personally of the country proposed to be organized into a Territory. I have traveled all over that country, and I understand its necessities. The Rio Grande goes down to the Gulf of Mexico; the Gila goes to the Colorado and down the Gulf of California. They drain different sections of the country.

They—

are distinct portions of the country. Arizona should be organized; and I say this not by way of argument, but by way of expressing an opinion, an informed opinion, having been all through that country, that it is due to that country and the people who have gone to inhabit it and who have millions invested there that they should have a form of government, and I trust the Senate will concur in passing the bill.

Senator Lane, of Kansas, favored the bill and said in part:

You will never settle up a Territory if you wait to get population. Government should go before. If you expect to settle up these new countries, you must send government as the frontiersman. When we get 100,000 population, we establish a State government. In Kansas, I believe, the population was less than that. The argument with me has no force. I am one of the men who believe that the question of population should not be asked at all, even as to a State government. The only question we should ask is, Are the people of the Territory willing to take upon themselves the burdens of a State government? (37th Cong., 2d sess., p. 3095.)

On February 20, 1863, Senator Wade again urged the passage of the bill and said:

The Territory of New Mexico, including Arizona, is an exceedingly large one, altogether too extensive for any municipal business to be transacted in its extreme portions. * * * The principal point of population in Arizona is 700 miles from the seat of justice in New Mexico. (37th Cong., 3d sess., p. 1126.)

The bill passed February 20, 1863, by the following vote:

Yeas, 25—Anthony, Arnold, Chandler, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Foote, Foster, Harlan, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Latham, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wilkinson, Wilmot, and Wilson of Massachusetts.

Nays, 12—Carlile, Clark, Collamer, Davis, Fessenden, Grimes, Kennedy, Powell, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Turpie, and Wilson of Missouri.

You will observe that the act declared that the government of Arizona Territory—

Shall be maintained and continued until such time as the people residing in said Territory shall, with the consent of Congress, form a State government, republican in form as prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, and apply for and obtain admission into the Union as a State.

This was the legal equivalent of a solemn promise made to the people of that Territory. You were never to destroy that Territorial government. You were to maintain it until statehood should be given that Territory. The people of Arizona took you at your word. They accepted the Territorial organization you thus created. They have expended thousands of dollars in doing their part toward maintaining this Territorial government which Congress had also agreed to maintain. They built a statehouse which cost them $130,000. They erected penitentiaries and universities and schools and asylums, and now you propose in this bill to destroy it all.

I tell you that if the same state of facts could be shown in a case between individuals there is not a court of equity in all the land that would not stop the perpetration of the outrage by the granting of an injunction. I assert that if similar powers to those conferred by the act organizing the Territory of Arizona had been conferred upon a corporation by a State legislature, that the Federal courts have held ever since the Dartmouth College decision, that the State legislative assembly would have no authority to impair these powers, much less to destroy them. I concede that as to this particular case of Arizona this is a political question as distinguished from a judicial one, and that no court can restrain the despoiling hand of this House. But I appeal to that high court of public morals and public faith not to do that which is repugnant to every sentiment of equity and every inspiration of right. In the hearings before the committee each of the Delegates appeared and resisted the making of two States out of these four Territories.

Mr. MACON. How about the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE]?

Mr. RUSSELL. It was resisted by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE], and by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. WILSON], and by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY], every one of them, and the hearings will show it. All of them contended that the bringing in of a bill like this was a grave injustice to the people in each Territory.

Mr. Speaker, if this bill passes and New Mexico and Arizona are joined in one State, it will be over the protest of nearly every citizen of Arizona and against the wishes of a very large element of New Mexico. They were originally divided because the judgment of Congress was that united they were too large for one State and because the God of nature had divided them by a range of mountains. Both of them desire separate statehood and neither of them prefer joint statehood.

In the hearings before the Committee on Territories on this question, Hon. BERNARD S. RODEY, Delegate on this floor from New Mexico, said:

I might say this, that joint statehood for us, I am afraid, to-day is virtually a victory by the enemies of the Territories over us on this proposition. The result would probably be that a constitution would be defeated. I am satisfied of that. Whatever my personal feeling may be, I am satisfied that enough of the people of New Mexico would join Arizona in a negative vote to defeat a constitution. The class of people in Arizona are slightly different. They are a people from the extreme South and East and Northeast. In New Mexico two-fifths of the population are natives of Spanish descent, and, somehow or other, our brethren in Arizona do not particularly care to join us and we are not pining away with desire to join them. Quite a large per cent of the people of New Mexico, as a last resort, rather than remain in the humiliating position we are in any longer, would accept joint statehood, I am sure, but if such a proposition went to a vote in New Mexico to-day it would be overwhelmingly voted down.

I would like to state this: Arizona and New Mexico are virtually a blanket across the backbone of this continent, one on the right-hand side and the other on the left. One is east and the other is west.

The continental divide runs between us. The valleys of Arizona cluster the population largely in a bunch. The valleys of the Rio Grande and the Pecos cluster the population in a bunch east. If we have this joint statehood it will result in an interminable fight over the location of the capital. It would mix our Territorial, city, and county debts.

Recollect that the Territories now have institutions. Arizona has a penitentiary, has an insane asylum, has a fine university, has a capitol, and all the institutions that go to make up a magnificent State, all put there (as in New Mexico) by its own taxation and its own moneys. New Mexico has a capitol, a university, a science hall, two normal universities, an agricultural college, a military institute, a school of mines, a miners' hospital, a penitentiary, a deaf and dumb asylum, and I do not know how many other institutions, including as fine a system of public schools as you ever saw, all located within its own bounds, of course, up and down the Rio Grande Valley and elsewhere. Our laws and our customs are largely different from those of Arizona; and as a State, if we had the power, we would not have quite the same laws as Arizona. We have land grants galore in New Mexico, to which the civil law of Spain largely applies; and we have laws with reference to the distribution of waters that we may change to conform to the general western sentiment on the subject, but they are not changed yet. All those things would conflict, and the result would be, if we had a joint legislature with Arizona, that we might have interminable conflicts and fights.

In the same hearings Hon. JOHN F. WILSON, Delegate in Congress from the Territory of Arizona, addressed himself to the proposition to unite these two Territories in one State, and, stating the objections which the people of Arizona had to such a union, used this language:

Hence we object on another ground. New Mexico is on one side of the Continental Divide and we are on the other; the waters of New Mexico go to the Gulf and ours go to the Pacific. There is a large mountain range, impassable in many places, which lies between us, and that inconvenience makes it objectionable. New Mexico is a highland country, ours is both a highland and a lowland, and therefore our demands are different, our needs are different, and our dispositions are of course different. So far apart would they be, so far away, so adverse would they become to each other that they would become warring enemies, and we could not stand it. Their system of laws is different from ours. Our debts are different, and therefore there would be clash and friction. They have their public institutions that have cost them millions. So have we. One or the other must, in a measure, be abandoned. The power would then resolve itself into legislative power.

The strong arm, for the present, would prevail, and the weak one must necessarily fall. We can not conceive of any greater friction. Therefore I say we must resent it. We would rather remain a Territory until doomsday than to ever consent to any such unification.

The CHAIRMAN. Supposing that you were confronted with the question whether you could be admitted with New Mexico or not at all, would you rather wait or would you rather be joined?

Mr. WILSON. We would wait until the crack of doom before we would ever consent to it, and if stronger language is necessary I will use it.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is fair to have your statement fully before the committee.

Mr. WILSON. I tell you our people will not vote for it. They are opposed to being raped with a proposition which they do not want. The reasons I have stated to the committee are reasons fair and broad; and rather than have to undergo the hardships that jointure would impose, we will remain a Territory until Congress gets more Americanized than it is, if it refuses us now.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is that the sentiment of your people?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; absolutely.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will that sentiment change?

Mr. WILSON. It never will. It will only grow more violent. The more they are imposed upon the worse opposition they will make to it, because they believe it is wrong, infallibly wrong, and so do I. We believe it is wrong for Congress to reverse the national policy which is a hundred years old. We believe it is wrong for Congress to impose burdens upon an American people that are of their flesh and blood, and to give us something that we do not want, and we do not believe an American Congress is going to do it.

The statements made by these two Delegates have been abundantly corroborated by evidence of the most trustworthy character. In the face of these facts, why should the well-established policy of the Government be reversed in this case? The policy has heretofore been not to unite but to divide. Maine was divided from Massachusetts, Mississippi was divided from Alabama, Vermont was taken from New York, the Territory of Dakota was divided and two States made. But here we are asked to shut our eyes to all the lessons of the past, to disregard all the traditions of American policy, to abrogate the pledges made to these people of Arizona and New Mexico, and unite in one State both these Territories in order to gratify the selfish desire for party advantage. Such an act of gross injustice will recoil upon its authors. Such an act of party perfidy will not be forgotten by the American people. Such a shameless betrayal of public faith will meet with its fitting rebuke.

I turn now, Mr. Speaker, to the proposed union of Indian Territory and Oklahoma as one State to be called "Oklahoma," as provided for in this bill. I assert that this bill can not become a law without a willful and deliberate violation of solemn treaties made by the Government—treaties entered into on our part for valuable considerations received, and therefore the passage of the bill in its present form involves national dishonor. It will not be necessary to tax the patience of this House very long in order to establish the affirmative of this proposition. I first make this statement of facts: According to the census of 1900 there were then about 800,000 people within the limits of the proposed State. There are a great many more now. Of the population of the proposed State about 85,000 are Indians.

Your proposed enabling act provides that the election of delegates to the constitutional convention shall be accomplished by a vote of the people of the two Territories, white and Indian alike. It provides that the constitution when framed shall be submitted to a vote of the people of the two Territories, white and Indian alike. The votes of the white people of Oklahoma can ten times oversilence the voice and render of no force the wishes of the Indians. It can not be disputed that while the Indians are perfectly willing to accept statehood for the Indian Territory, they are unalterably opposed to the creation of the State of Oklahoma by combining the two Territories in one State. This proposition is so abundantly established in the hearings before the committee that I will not cite evidence here to sustain it unless it shall be now called in question.

Let me state the fact again. The evidence shows beyond question that the Indians will gladly welcome statehood for Indian Territory and that they are bitterly opposed to joining their Territory with Oklahoma in a State. Their opposition, I may say in passing, is placed upon grounds not alone of expediency but of morality. They claim that statehood with Oklahoma means that they will be embraced in a State where the alcoholic liquor traffic will be legalized, and that that means the immediate degredation and speedy extinction of the Indian.

The Indian nations who occupy the Indian Territory are the Cherokees, the Chickasaws, the Choctaws, the Creeks, and the Seminoles. Each of these nations or tribes before they were settled upon Indian Territory occupied and held lands east of the Mississippi River. They were in the way of the expanding greatness of the white man, and the Government of the United States negotiated and secured, through a series of treaties with these Indian nations, an exchange of their lands east of the Mississippi for certain defined boundaries within what was called "Indian Territory." There is an element of pathos in the preambles to some of these treaties.

For example, the treaty of 1835, made with the Cherokees, begins with this statement:

Whereas the Cherokees are anxious to make some arrangement with the Government of the United States whereby the difficulties they have experienced by a residence within the settled parts of the United States under the jurisdiction and laws of the State governments may be terminated and adjusted: and with a view of reuniting their people in one body and securing a permanent home for themselves and their posterity in a country selected by their forefathers, without the territorial limits of State sovereignties, and where they can establish and enjoy a government of their choice and perpetuate such a state of society as may be most consonant with their views, habits, and conditions, and as may tend to their individual comfort and their advancement in civilization, etc.

And thereupon follows the treaty which I shall presently allude to very briefly.

The Chickasaw treaty of 1832 begins with this statement:

The Chickasaw Nation find themselves oppressed in their present situation by being subject to the laws of the States in which they reside. Being ignorant of the language and laws of the white man they can not understand or obey them. Rather than submit to this great evil, they prefer to seek a home in the West where they may live and be governed by their own laws.

I might quote, sir, from the other treaties, but this is sufficient to show the reasons and causes which prompted and induced the making of those treaties which resulted in our Government acquiring from the Indians their lands east of the Mississippi.

I now invite the attention of the House to those articles in the treaties with the Indians which are pertinent to the proposition I am discussing. The treaty of New Echota, made with the Cherokees on the 29th day of December, 1835, in Article V contains this stipulation:

ART. 5. The United States hereby covenants and agrees that the lands ceded to the Cherokee Nation in the foregoing article shall in no future time, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory. (Rev. Ind. Treaties, p. 69.)

The treaty of 1856 made with the Creeks and Seminoles, in article 4, provides as follows:

ART. 4. The United States do hereby solemnly agree and bind themselves that no State or Territory should ever pass laws for the government of the Creek or Seminole tribes of Indians, and that no portion of either of the tracts of country defined in the first and second articles of this agreement shall ever be embraced or included within or annexed to any Territory or State, nor shall either or any part of either ever be erected into a Territory without the free and full consent of the legislative authority of the tribe owning the same. (Rev. Ind. Treaties, p. 111.)

Article 4 of the Chickasaw and Choctaw treaty contains this provision:

ART. 4. The Government and people of the United States are hereby obliged to secure to the said Choctaw Nation of red people the jurisdiction and government of all the persons and property that may be within their limits west, so that no Territory or State shall ever have a right to pass laws for the government of the Choctaw Nation of red people and their descendants, and that no part of the land granted them shall ever be embraced in any Territory or State. (7 U. S. Stats., 334.)

These stipulations were not abrogated, but were in effect affirmed in the Indian treaties of 1866.

In 1871 the Government of the United States changed its policy of dealing with the Indians by treaty, but in no respect was this change of policy to affect treaties already made. Upon the contrary, all lawful treaties were expressly declared to be entitled to sacred observance. The act of March 3, 1871, provides as follows:

No Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power, with whom the United States may contract by treaty; but no obligation of any treaty lawfully made and ratified with any such nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.

So that, Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the joining of Indian Territory with Oklahoma in one State, over the protest of the Five Tribes, can not be accomplished without a violation of the solemn treaty obligations of our Government.

Mr. Speaker, I am not without eminent authority for this view. On the 10th day of January, 1877, there was a report filed in this House by a minority of the Committee on Territories, protesting against the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma. That report was signed, among others, by Hon. David B. Culberson, of Texas. The older members of this body will bear cheerful testimony to the statement that Mr. Culberson was not only a man of marvelous clearness of intellectual vision, but he was preeminently great as a lawyer. In that report the whole subject of our treaty obligations with the Indians is reviewed and the conclusion is clearly and strongly stated that the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma without the consent of the Indian nations who might then be occupying it would be a violation of our solemn promises made to the Indians to induce them to surrender their lands east of the Mississippi.

On the 3d day of March, 1879, the same question of organizing Oklahoma was again before the House. A minority of the Committee on the Territories again reported adversely. In that report the Indian treaties which I have read were set out and given as a reason why the Indian country should not be embraced within the limits of any Territory without their consent. The report concludes as follows:

The conclusions arrived at by your committee are: First, that the bill under consideration conflicts with existing treaty stipulations. Second, that while the right to decide in a last resort that a treaty is no longer binding is undoubtedly lodged in Congress, the exercise of that right is a judicial act affecting the honor and dignity of the nation, requiring for its justification reasons which commend themselves to the principles of equity and good conscience, particularly where the parties to the compact with the United States are weak and powerless and depend solely on the good faith of the Government. Third, that no such reasons exist for violating the treaty stipulations which reserve the Indian Territory exclusively for the Indians, and which secures to the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminoles the right of self-government under the restrictions of the United States Constitution.

This report was signed, among others, by Hon. Thomas B. Reed, of Maine.

It is a matter of satisfaction to be able to sustain the views I have announced by the authority of two such eminent statemen and superb lawyers as Thomas B. Reed and David B. Culberson.

Mr. Speaker, the Democrats in this House are in favor of granting statehood to each of the four Territories. We do not believe that any great public interest would suffer by such a course or that the dignity of any department of the National Government would be impaired. Each of them is large enough to make a great State. New Mexico contains 122,469 square miles; Arizona, 113,929 square miles; Oklahoma, 39,030 square miles, and the Indian Territory, 31,000 square miles. The smallest of these Territories is twenty-nine times larger than Rhode Island, sixteen times larger than Delaware, three times larger than Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, or Maryland.

The Indian Territory is almost as large as Indiana, Ohio, or Kentucky, and is larger than West Virginia, Maine, or South Carolina.

Each of these Territories is possessed of abundant wealth to maintain State and local governments. Arizona has at least four hundred millions of taxable property; New Mexico has at least three hundred millions; Oklahoma, four hundred millions, while the property in the Indian Territory is equally as much. By the census of 1900 Oklahoma had a population of 398,000; Indian Territory, 392,000; New Mexico, 195,000, and Arizona only 122,000. This census was unquestionably incomplete and notably so in Arizona and New Mexico. It is safe to say that the population of New Mexico at the present is at least 250,000, while that of Arizona amounts to more than 178,000.

But two rules have been recognized by Congress in determining the sufficiency of population to authorize admission to statehood. One was that provided by the ordinance of 1787, which made it the duty of Congress to grant statehood to a Territory whenever it contained 60,000 free inhabitants. This ordinance was framed with reference to the territory north of the Ohio River, and by virtue of an act of Congress was extended to the territory south of the Ohio.

Under this ordinance Congress reserved the privilege of admitting a State before it had 60,000 free inhabitants, but it was the right of the State to demand admission when it had 60,000.

The other rule was the one applicable to States formed out of territory ceded to the United States by France, by Spain, and by Mexico. This rule was to grant statehood whenever the Territory had a population equal to the unit of representation, and that, while statehood might be granted sooner, it was considered that the Territory was entitled to admission as a matter of right whenever it had that amount of population.

The following States were admitted into the Union with less than 60,000 population, viz, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Arkansas, Oregon, and Nevada, while seventeen States have been admitted into the Union at a time when their respective populations were less than the unit of representation.

We acquired the territory from Mexico out of which was organized Arizona and New Mexico. This territory was acquired by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo. The ninth article of that treaty contains this provision:

> Mexicans who, in the Territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States according to the principles of the Constitution.

It has been contended that the clause embraced in parentheses, "to be judged of by the Congress of the United States," meant that a different rule with reference to admitting States carved out of the territory acquired by that treaty should prevail. But I submit to the House that a more reasonable construction is, not that the law as to the admission of States deducible from the precedents should be changed, but that this treaty simply intended to reserve to Congress the right to determine whether the facts existed which authorized the application of the law.

Arkansas, Michigan, and Tennessee had each adopted their respective constitutions and presented themselves for admission into the Union before any enabling acts in their behalf had been passed by Congress. In the case of Tennessee, that State took her own census, adopted her constitution, and presented herself to the Congress, demanding admission as a State under the 60,000 rule, and on the recommendation of the President was admitted. So, with these examples in mind, the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo declared that the Territories thus ceded should "be admitted at the proper time, to be judged by the Congress," thus reserving to Congress the right to determine the fact as to whether their populations were equal to the unit of representation, as well as reserving the right to admit them sooner if, in the judgment of Congress, it should be thought proper.

The unit of representation, as determined by the census of 1900, is 194,000. Three of these Territories already have populations in excess of the number required by the rule which has heretofore prevailed, and are therefore entitled to admission into the Union. If an exception to this rule was justified in any of the instances of the past, it is certainly to be justified in the case of Arizona. Her population is almost entirely American, and represents as fine an intelligence and as high a type of civic virtue as can be found on the continent. Only 1 per cent of illiteracy exists among her white population. They are a progressive, up-to-date people, and nothing is to be feared from placing the star of Arizona in the constellation of the Union.

But, Mr. Speaker, I bring these remarks to a close. I have attempted in homely phrase and considerate manner to prove that the passage of the bill of the majority means at once the ignoring of our treaty obligations and the violation of the rights of our own citizens. I have called attention to the fact that three of these Territories, in so far as numbers, wealth, and intelligence are concerned, are entitled, under all the precedents, to immediate admission into the Union, and that the third is a more inviting object of Congressional grace than the seventeen other instances where Territories were admitted before their populations equaled the ratio of representation.

What is the real objection to making four States out of these Territories?

Stripped of all disguises, it is because gentlemen wish to limit the extent of representation in the Senate of the United States. I can understand how this is desired by gentlemen from States bordering upon or close to the Atlantic coast, but how gentlemen from the great and growing West and Middle West can be brought to the support of such a policy is beyond my comprehension. If this bill shall become a law, I believe the day will surely come when western and middle western men who vote for it will marvel at the folly which possessed them. But a few years ago the center of population was at Baltimore. It is now at Columbus, Ind., and is rapidly tending westward and southward.

I believe that men now old enough to be inspired by the hope of it will live to see the day when 15,000,000 people will reside within the limits of Texas. The day will come when Chicago will be larger than New York and when the great bulk of the population of these United States will be found in the West. Great as it is in its past history, it will require some dreamer upon a political Patmos to measure the approaching glory and power of this great region.

Before the final die is cast on this bill glance, if you please, on the map of our country. The States lying north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi, with Virginia added, embrace about one-fifth as much territory as all that great country lying entirely west of the "father of waters." And yet the States of this eastern section possess more power in the Senate than the whole of that great western region. The Constitution of the United States has irrevocably fixed the equality of representation in the Senate.

The day will come when some great measure will be demanded by the people of the West, and you will find this eastern section able to clutch the country by the throat and hold it at bay.

This will lead to friction and bitterness and maybe to strife and bloodshed. I appeal to gentlemen North and South; I appeal in the name of the "indestructible Union of indestructible States," and without regard to whether you be Democrat or Republican, not to turn your backs upon the very last opportunity to secure for the people of the West that representation in the Senate of the United States to which they are justly entitled. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. REID].

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, I am perhaps as anxious as any Member of this House for the admission of the great western Territories into this Union at the very earliest possible date. Aside from the natural pride and pleasure which it seems to me every American should feel upon the advent of a new State into the Union, there are reasons that appeal strongly to me from a personal standpoint. Coming as I do from a State that is bounded on the west by the great Indian Territory, hundreds, even thousands, of my fellow-citizens, friends, and kinsmen have crossed the border line and staked their destiny with the people of that section.

They did not go into that country with rifle and blade to wrest the wilderness from bands of howling savages; they were invited there by a civilization and social conditions which were tolerable a quarter of a century ago. They did not go there to become assimilated to the manners, the laws, and the customs of aliens and foreigners, but they met there upon common ground with their fellow-Americans from every State in this Union. There was found the farmer and the artisan ready to fell the forest and till the soil and build homes for their children, along with the eastern capitalist seeking new fields of investment for his surplus millions; sons of New England homes, graduates of New England colleges and universities, with their technical learning and consummate skill in the arts and professions.

The Southerner, with his high ideas of individual and national honor and his love for local institutions; the westerner, with that bold energy and indomitable spirit that has always blazed out the path and made clear the way for States and empires—these people did not have to learn by slow and gradual process the arts of civil government. They were cradled and schooled in the heart of the greatest civilization and grandest Government the world has ever produced. They do not have to lie dormant in the lifeless and passive condition of a Territory for a decade to gather the wealth and intelligence that elevate to the dignity of a State. They carried with them the greatest patrimony in wealth and culture that any migrating people ever poured into the lap of a new and undeveloped country.

Born and reared in an environment that nurtures and develops the highest order of patriotism and self-reliance and having known and appreciated the inestimable blessings of local self-government, these people, proud of their American citizenship and the history of their country, keenly feel the humiliation involved in denying to them the right to govern themselves and to exercise an influence and voice their convictions in the deliberations of this body. It is not strange that they should feel thus. It was for these inalienable rights and principles that their forefathers took up arms against the British Crown, attained their independence, and established a government of their own.

In many respects they suffer the same ills that were imposed upon the American colonies. They are taxed, but without representation in the taxing power. They are governed by laws in which they were allowed no part in enacting. A horde of petit officers, not of their own choosing and in no way responsible to them, is sent hither to administer laws and execute judgments among them. Hampered upon every side in the development of their business enterprises, without proper facilities for the education of their children and the care of the insane, the blind, and the indigent, it is no wonder that to these high-spirited and self reliant Americans their condition is galling and humiliating in the extreme.

So far as the people in the Indian Territory are concerned, there are many of them who would perhaps be willing to accept statehood upon any terms to rid themselves of these embarrassing conditions, and out of consideration for them I might be brought to support a measure that would admit the Indian Territory and Oklahoma as one State, upon fair and equal terms to each section. But, sir, I am not permitted to do this. Under this bill, which by the rule adopted by this House can neither be amended nor modified, I must either oppose the measure altogether or submit to an unwilling and an unwise union of the four Territories into two States, organized not upon broad lines of national policy, but with an eye single to the political interest of the majority in this House.

A close examination of this bill makes manifest the fact that its whole purpose is not to admit these great Territories as States into the Union upon grounds of their fitness and qualifications for statehood, but to admit them, if at all, in such a way as to place the organizing conventions and early legislation absolutely in the control of the dominant political party and allow them the least possible influence in the Senate of the United States.

Sir, it seems to me that if ever there was a time when the interests of political parties should be discarded and the future safety and equilibrium of the Union alone kept in view, it is when we consider the admission of a new State into the sisterhood.

It is not the policy of the hour that should control and direct our deliberations. It is not the weal or woe of a political organization that should influence our action, but the interest of this broad land and the perpetuation of this Republic for all time to come. We should lay aside all partisan bias and determine in our own minds how we would decide this question, not only to-day, but ten, twenty, fifty years from now. Let us remember that once a State, always a State. When these Territories are admitted their destiny is fixed as long as our political system shall exist. In determining this matter let us bear in mind the fact that there will come a time when there will be no race question to complicate and annoy.

There will come a time when Mason and Dixon's line shall have vanished and the memories of the civil war be perpetuated only in legend and song. That great conflict, now nearly forty years ago, the influence of which sometimes yet asserts itself in the councils of state, will in time become like the civil wars of all other great nations, a mere episode in the history of the world. Political expediency and sectional prejudices can not enter into the determination of this question, if the dream of our fathers is to be realized in the perpetuation of an indissoluble union of indestructible States.

The safety and prosperity of the Union depends, in my judgment, more upon fair and equal representation of every section of our broad land in the Senate of the United States than upon any other principle. We are not congested upon some narrow island of the seas where the rain falls or the sun shines upon all at once. Our national domain is broad and expansive. Our industries are as diversified as the ingenuity of man can invent, and each can find a soil and a season for its fullest growth and development. There is only one way that has yet been conceived by which each section may be kept abreast of the others in the onward march of national progress, and that is by giving to each section equal power and influence in the Halls of State.

It is proposed by this bill that an unwilling union be forced upon Arizona and New Mexico and the Indian Territory and Oklahoma, and thus reduce the rightful representation of that great country in the Senate of the United States. And just here I wish to address my remarks to every Member of the House of Representatives as a Representative. When our forefathers established this Government the whole of its powers were divided into the legislative, the executive, and judicial. Congress was given full legislative power. I say this notwithstanding the veto power given to the President of the United States, because a requisite majority in each House may override that veto.

The Senate was given also executive power in the confirmation of appointments, and shares the treaty-making power with the Executive. It was given judicial power in the trial of impeachments. It was intended in the first instance as a sort of privy council of state, with sufficient power to check the Executive in the making of appointments and in the conclusion of treaties. It was intended to provide a means by which the smallest State in the Union, either in respect to territory or population, should have representation equal to the largest in at least one branch of the National Government. It was intended to restrain sudden and impetuous action upon the part of the more popular body and operate as an "element of stability in the government of the nation."

Hamilton's only fear was that it would not preserve its functions, but become overshadowed by the House of Representatives and subject to its domination and control. Indeed, such has been the history of every other representative government on earth. In the beginning of our constitutional existence the Senate was relatively an unimportant body. It had only twenty-six members, and it was not until 1817 that it appointed standing committees; but now it has reversed the processes of evolution which have taken place in every other representative government. In England, in France, in Germany, Austria-Hungary, Spain, Italy, and in all other countries having a representative government the direct representatives of the people have the controlling power and the functions of the upper house are scarcely more than advisory.

The original theory was that the Senate should represent the States and that there should be a balance of States as States in the Senate and operate as a check upon the encroachment and dangerous tendencies in other departments of Government. To-day it is the one all-absorbing and irresistible power in the Government of the United States. It is the most august, the most influential, and the most aristocratic legislative body on the face of the earth or that ever existed. Until 1840 the House of Representatives was the controlling body in Congress. Since the close of the civil war the House, year by year, has been losing its importance, and the Senate of the United States is in effect the sole legislative body in the Government. Our fiscal, our tariff, and financial legislation is all the work of the Senatorial oligarchy.

The McKinley bill was, after all, the work of a Senator from Rhode Island, a Senator from Iowa, an original free trader, but who has abandoned his early faith and never omits an opportunity to sing pæans of praise of the theoristic principles of protection. The Dingley bill, passed by the House, was amended by the Senate beyond recognition. The House by practically unanimous vote passed the Nicaragua Canal bill. When it reached the Senate, with supreme indifference to the expression of the House, they threw it aside and crammed the Panama Canal down our unwilling throats.

The legislatures of a majority of the States in the Union have passed resolutions requesting Congress to submit an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people. Platform after platform of each of the political parties has demanded that Senators be so elected. Session after session and time and again the House has passed a constitutional amendment for this purpose, but as soon as it reached the Senate it was consigned to an eternal tomb. Such has been the exaltation of the Senate and such the decline of the House that when men become enormously rich and are possessed of political ambitions they usually ignore the House, and the Senate becomes their goal.

I do not deny that there have been times when these extravagant powers of the Senate have been used to the advantage of the whole country and nefarious legislation prevented thereby, but in the main I contend that the tendency is undemocratic; it is unrepublican and is dangerous. There is only one way possible to guard against these tendencies, and that is in the way contemplated by the Constitution of the United States—preserve the equal representation of every section of this country in the Senate.

The time has even now passed when this could have been accomplished fully and perfectly, and with the admission of these Territories will be settled the number of Western States for all time to come. Texas is the only one in regard to which there is any provision for dividing, and it is safe to say that local interest, pride in great territorial extent, and memories of her past history will always keep this from being done. At present the representations of different sections in the Senate in proportion to their population may not be exceedingly abnormal, but, sir, it is poor statesmanship indeed that closes its eyes upon the portent of the future simply because the present is sufferable.

The expanding power of the Senate makes it imperative that we take no steps that will tend to destroy in the future the equal representation of every section in that body. Now, let us examine for a few moments the claim of these Territories for admission as separate States.

At the beginning of the last Congress we passed, by an overwhelming majority of the House of Representatives, a bill practically admitting these Territories as separate States. But, sir, there was an element in the Senate, a comparatively insignificant minority, which was not pleased with the bill sent over by the representatives of the people, and the measure, as is generally the case under such circumstances, was filibustered to death.

The House is now asked to surrender, to face about and beat an ignominious retreat. The argument for the admission of these Territories as different States is stronger now, as indeed it will become stronger and stronger as the years go by, than when the statehood bill passed the House last Congress; but an entirely different spirit has now come over the dreams of the majority in this House. Why this sudden change of front? Is there any less reason for the admission of Arizona and New Mexico as separate States to-day than there was two years ago? Is there any less reason why Oklahoma should constitute a State to-day than there was thus many months ago?

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that your majority in this House are opposed to the admission of these Territories under any circumstances; but if it must be, if the time has come when their right to admission is so clear and just and the demand so loud and strong that you can not trifle with it longer, it is proposed that their demand shall be answered in such a way as to give the least possible political advantage to this section and deny her her just meed of influence in the future progress and destiny of the nation; because, sir, the Republican party is dominated and controlled, soul and body, by northern and eastern influences, ever watchful and farsighted in their own interest, but without the slightest regard for the interest of the country at large.

Upon what do you base your opposition to the proposition to admit these Territories as separate States? Is it because they have not sufficient geographical area that you seek to band them together in unwilling union? Every schoolboy whose eye has fallen upon a map of his country will recognize the injustice and absurdity of this contention. Oklahoma contains 39,030 square miles. She has more area than fourteen States in the Union. She has a larger area than Connecticut, Delaware, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Vermont all put together. She will have an area practically as large as that of one-third of the States of the Union.

And what is true of Oklahoma in this respect is no less true of the Indian Territory. She is greater in extent than Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, or West Virginia. Her soil is the richest in the world and could easily support a population of 3,000,000 people. These facts in regard to the area of Oklahoma and Indian Territory make ridiculous in the extreme the suggestion that this is any reason for combining New Mexico and Arizona as one State, either of which would have practically as much territory as all of New England, with the great State of New York thrown in.

If it is not narrowness of territory, then what is it that you base your contentions upon? Is it wealth or population? Let us examine for a moment. There are fifteen States of this Union to-day with less population than either Oklahoma or the Indian Territory. If an accurate and complete census of Arizona was taken to-day there is every reason to believe that she would not fall far short of 200,000 people. If so, she has as many people as the State of Delaware, more population than the State of Idaho, and several times the population of Nevada.

Arizona, the least of these Territories from a standpoint of population, has more people than at least twenty-four States had at the time they were admitted to the Union, and this not including the original thirteen States.

New Mexico can not be far short of 350,000 people; and if so, she has, as was contended by Mr. RODEY, the Delegate from New Mexico, before the Territorial Committee, a larger population than any Territory ever had when it was admitted as a State. In taxable values, in wealth and natural resources of every kind, their claim is equally strong. There were twenty-seven States admitted to the Union with less taxable values than Arizona has to-day. She has more fertile land than all of New England.

New Mexico has over three hundred millions of property subject to taxation. The natural resources of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory make them among the richest countries in the world. In taxable values Oklahoma has demonstrated her qualifications for statehood. The Indian Territory, with her 80 national banks, her 2,500 miles of railroad, her 57 coal mines pouring out over 3,000,000 tons of coal a year, besides her live stock and agricultural products, is lifted in wealth to the dignity of an empire.

The social and intellectual conditions that obtain throughout these Territories, either of them, will compare favorably with any State in the Union, and any argument to the contrary is either insincere or made in ignorance of the facts as they really exist.

People going into those Territories from the intellectual centers of the East have never been known to return on account of any inability to find social relations worthy of their membership. Many of them can testify, after a few years' contact with these people, in society, in church, in the professions, and in business circles, that they are not badly in need of the intellectual culture and business ability to take care of themselves. Their population is almost exclusively made up of people from the States, and their grade of culture and intelligence is practically the same.

I know, sir, that the point is made that certain portions of the population of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory are Indians; in that of New Mexico and Arizona are Mexicans, and are unqualified for good citizenship and incapable of self-government. This very objection was raised in 1845 against the annexation of Texas and against the admission of California in 1851. The Mexican and the Indian in each of these States has long since disappeared, and in his place has grown up the finest type of American citizenship. To-day Texas and California are two of the grandest States of the Union, and are hurrying on to a future of untold possibilities. The great bulk of the population in either of these Territories is composed of typical self-reliant and self-governing Americans.

The American is in the saddle, and the danger from Mexican population in either Arizona or New Mexico is ridiculous. A few years' time is all that is necessary to settle that question in either of the Territories. But, sir, it is strange, passing strange, that this objection should be made by any Representative from New England or any of the Northwestern States. The towns and cities of New England swarm with a foreign-born population.

My friend from Massachusetts, a leading member of the Committee on Territories, stated during the hearings on this question that he had the honor to represent in Congress a district in which there were about 30,000 French Canadians who spoke nothing but French. Add to this the number of Poles, Italians, and other foreigners in his district, and a much larger number of his population will be either of foreign birth or the immediate descendants of foreigners. The difference in the two cases is all in favor of the western Territories.

The foreign population in New England and the Northwestern States will in all probability continue to increase. The objectionable population in the Territories will year by year fade away and disappear.

By the census of 1900 only two of the New England States showed any gain, Massachusetts and Connecticut, and the gain in each of these was in foreign population, which immigrated and settled in their cities. Take Minnesota and Wisconsin and other Northwestern States and see what a menacing population is growing up in each of them. There is far more danger from the objectionable populations which we are trying so hard to restrain with immigration laws in the New England States and in our great cities than these objectionable classes in the Western Territories.

There are more Irish to-day in New York than in Dublin. Chicago is the largest Polish city in the world. Take Massachusetts. I would not speak disparagingly of this great historic State. As an American citizen I am proud of her example and proud of her precepts. She has been called the "Holy Land" of law, of literature, and liberty. But let us be candid. Her population to-day is divided, as stated by a professor in Columbia University, into an insignificant minority, composed largely of ancestor-worshiping Puritans and a few fastidious dilettante on the one side, and an ever growing and increasing horde of foreign-born population on the other. What is true of Massachusetts is true of Connecticut, and is largely true of nearly every New England State.

It can not therefore be urged with any degree of assurance that objectionable population of these Territories is any reason that they should not be admitted as separate States. Another objection is sometimes made—that Arizona and New Mexico are mineral countries, and when the minerals are exhausted they will be abandoned and population will decrease. There are, it is true, in these Territories inexhaustible fields of iron, coal, copper, asphalt, and large and undeveloped mines of gold and silver. But there is no force in the objection. West Virginia and Colorado, Pennsylvania, Alabama, Georgia, Michigan, and Wisconsin are almost exclusively mineral States, and their resources bring untold wealth to the people and support teeming populations.

I can not believe that gentlemen are serious when they advance such arguments against the admission of Arizona and New Mexico. It is stated that there are vast stretches of arid and unproductive lands in these Territories. As stated before, the fact is that there is more productive land in either Arizona or New Mexico than there is in the whole of New England. These lands that are called the "waste lands" there will ultimately become, under the system of irrigation that has been inaugurated, among the finest agricultural lands in the world. In proof of this proposition we have only to call to mind the case of the Panhandle of Texas. A comparatively few years ago this country was considered a part of the great American desert. Mr. Davis, while he was Secretary of War, bought a herd of camels and sought to introduce them in order that the desert might be traversed by caravans such as are used upon the great Desert of Sahara.

It was then the bourne of the solitary herdsman and the cowboy. To-day it is a land of varied industries, supporting thriving cities and a great and growing population. The city of Amarilla, at one time called the "heart of the staked plains," is to-day a city of 10,000 people, with all the modern improvements, such as street railroads, electric lights, waterworks, and banking and manufacturing industries. What has been accomplished toward making the desert bloom there can be accomplished and will be accomplished on a larger and grander scale in Arizona and New Mexico. But, Mr. Speaker, these arguments have been repeated in this House and on the floor of the Senate until it is pardonable to allude to them only in the most general terms.

They have demonstrated, it seems to me, to the satisfaction of any man who will view the question free from party bias and from a standpoint of fairness and justice to the whole country, to the people who inhabit the Territories, that they are entitled to come in to the Union as separate States, and to come now. There is no justice in the denial. When they were organized as separate Territories and separate Territorial government provided for each, the people there and those who have gone there since assumed, and had a right to assume, that their boundaries would be left at least substantially undisturbed when they were admitted into the Union.

The country demands that they shall come, and come as separate States. You have promised it and reiterated it and emphasized it in your party platform, and when the time came to redeem your promise you met it with some miserable evasion or indefinite delay. When your party meets again in a few weeks you will "point with pride" to the progress you have made in the solution of the question, and proceed to dish out to a long-suffering people the stale old promises you have made over and over again. If you thought these Territories were all safely Republican and would continue for the next fifty years to take their religious and political pabulum from east of the Allegheny Mountains, they would come in as separate States before the next national election.

You were ready and willing enough to divide the great Territory of Dakota and make two States of it because it served your purpose politically, and now, supremely indifferent to the virtue of consistency, you propose to force a union of New Mexico and Arizona because you fear that one of those States would go Democratic if they were admitted as separate States.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me return to the proposition that the day will come when the great Southwest will suffer for it and the safety of the Union be endangered if you deny that section the representation in the United States Senate to which her wealth and population will then, at least, entitle her.

Let us preserve the balance and equilibrium while it is not yet too late. Let us set over against the six States in the Northeast, six States in the Southwest. It is just, it is politic, it is sound, prescient statesmanship to do so. I call upon the Representatives from the great West. Where is Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas in this contest? Are you content to remain forever in a state of colonial vassalage to New England? The afterglow of the civil war has faded away. The issues that at one time placed you at variance with your sister States a little farther to the south have been settled forever. Your interest and theirs have now become identical. Is it not time for you to rise in your might and assert an individuality of your own?

On academic questions we can afford to divide, but a great question which involves the power and influence of your whole section in the governmental affairs of this Republic for at least many generations to come is now to be determined. Can you afford to permit the petit party policy of the hour to place you in a position where posterity in the years to come will reproach you for making such an abject surrender of the rights and dignities of your country? There is no question as to where the Representatives from the Middle West and the Southwest should stand in this controversy. They should vote with one voice and always against any bill that seeks to band these great Territories into two States, so great in territorial extent as never to be entirely efficient in themselves and without any appreciable influence in the Government of the nation.

Do not believe for one instant that the older States would divide under such circumstances. During the whole of our national existence New England has been politically one, and with her twelve Senators has absolutely dictated the fiscal and financial policy of the United States. She has always maintained a solidarity of interest on these questions. The junior Senator from Maine may favor expansion; the senior Senator may violently oppose it; both are sent back without a show of opposition. The senior Senator from Massachusetts may be strongly opposed to expansion; the junior Senator, by his voice and his vote, may favor it; both are returned to the United States Senate.

The little State of Rhode Island sends her great tariff builder, term after term, to represent her interest in Congress. These States may differ upon minor matters, but upon fiscal and financial questions they are eternally one. Massachusetts marches at the head of the van and leads her sister New England States wherever she will. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that sound statesmanship would dictate that there should be set off against this solidity of interest in the East a balance of power in the West. To accomplish this we should never consent to the consolidation of these Territories into two States. For that reason and others I have mentioned I am constrained to vote against the bill, much as I would rejoice to see the people of those great sections released from Territorial bondage. [Applause.]

STATEHOOD FOR THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, from the foundation of the Government the admission of States into the Union has always been a matter of party policy. It has never been denied, until a discussion which took place in this House in the last Congress, that that statement was absolutely true. Considerations of political policy controlled the action of the Democratic party at the time of the admission of Ohio into the Union. That State was brought into the Union for the avowed purpose of contributing three electoral votes to the second election of Mr. Jefferson as President of the United States; and that State was brought in without the formality of the ratification of the constitution by the people, and with undue and precipitous haste, in order that the electoral college might be reenforced by three Democratic votes. From that time to this, on the recurrence of each application for the admission of a Territory as a State, the whole question practically has been a question of party politics.

Now, this is a Government of party, and parties speak through caucuses and conferences. The Republican party on this floor has spoken to me through the order of a caucus. There is nothing in my action upon this question that involves a matter of conscientious duty, and therefore, while strongly opposing this bill for a number of reasons, I shall certainly vote for it. I think it best perhaps that it shall be thus disposed of.

I regret that some of the minor details of this bill could not have been more carefully considered. I am aware that my own position upon one of the questions to which I shall refer is not in accord perhaps with the views of a large majority of the Members of this House. I would not put a restriction upon any man, so far as his right to vote is concerned, because of illiteracy. I am one of those who believe that the test of literacy or illiteracy is the most fallacious and unreliable that can possibly be applied to an American citizen.

I have not time to elaborate that question here. But I will never vote, upon a final vote that fixes the qualification of an elector of my country, to eliminate from the electoral power a man simply and solely because he can not read and write. According to my observation, the men who have committed the great crimes in this country and those who are to-day furnishing the elements of danger to the Republic have not been and are not illiterate men by any manner of means.

In the next place, I would have guarded this bill and the States to be admitted under it against the insidious poison of polygamy. Unfortunately there has been a most amazing oversight on the part of somebody in drafting this bill. Just at this time this monster of polygamy is insidiously crouching in the new States and Territories to spring at some time upon the best interests of the country.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand an amendment is provided for in the rule to cover the very thing suggested by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is an attempt already in the bill, and I do not understand the amendment changes it.

Mr. HAMILTON. If the gentleman pleases, it is covered already in the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It is not covered in the bill. That is the great trouble. And it is not provided for in the amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. DALZELL. The amendment simply relates to the sale of liquor.

Mr. HAMILTON. On page 5 of the bill it is provided that polygamous and plural marriages are forever prohibited.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will find that he has made the mistake of his life, if he thinks that is a blow at the real trouble with polygamy to-day. It is not plural marriages that constitute the insidious danger of polygamous Mormonism at this time.

Mr. HAMILTON. This is quoted from the Utah act.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That may be. Then the Utah act is just as fatally defective as this.

Mr. HAMILTON. That may be possible.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And this is just as fatally defective as that.

Mr. HAMILTON. That is possible.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We had just gone through a long hearing before the Senate committee, a public hearing where the champions of polygamy came forward, and while admitting that they had strenuously lived up to the prohibition of the Utah convention and had refrained from further polygamous marriages, yet stated that they were continuing the business of polygamous cohabitation, drawing that distinction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like one minute more.

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. So, therefore, as this matter stands now, this new State of New Mexico and Arizona or Arizona and New Mexico, by whatever name it may be called, will be the home and resort and haven of those who have committed polygamous marriages in some other State and who move in under the cover of polygamous cohabitation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] occupy some time now?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield that time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD].

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, there has been no more important bill before this Congress at this session than the one we are now considering, and it seems to me unfortunate that a measure of so great importance, and having such effect upon the future of this great country should have so little consideration.

I am concerned as much for statehood as any individual on this floor, and for statehood for each of the four Territories asking it, singly or separately, as they prefer. I am not ready, however, to admit that 99 per cent of all the people of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory are in favor of single statehood. I do not know what may be the opinion of those two Territories. I know very well that the Delegate from that Territory presented his bill to this Congress on the theory that the people of Oklahoma were in favor of separate statehood—statehood for Oklahoma alone.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Was he not elected on that kind of a platform?

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I understand from the gentleman himself, in private conversation, that the issue in the campaign of 1902 in the Territory was the question of statehood and as to whether it should be a single State or a separate one. The Democracy in 1902 announced itself in favor of single statehood—that is, statehood for Oklahoma and the Indian Territory combined. The Republican party asserted itself for statehood for Oklahoma alone. When the gentleman to-day declared himself in favor of uniting these two Territories into one State he does that which the Democracy of 1902 demanded of Congress should be done. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

As far as we are concerned, on the minority, all that we ask is that the question as to whether Oklahoma is in favor of single statehood or not, and whether the Indian Territory is in favor of it, shall be left to the people of each of those Territories. We are opposed, and unalterably so, to forcing Oklahoma and Indian Territory into a union unless both Oklahoma and the Indian Territory are in favor of that union. We are opposed to uniting Arizona and New Mexico into one State without the consent of both Arizona and New Mexico.

Sir, this provision in the bill fixing the capitals at Guthrie and Santa Fe until 1910 is unwise, improper, and a violation of another section of the bill which gives the new States the same rights and privileges as any other State.

If the majority party will permit us to offer an amendment providing that the people of those Territories shall have an opportunity of saying whether they are in favor of joint statehood or separate statehood, whether they are in favor of union, then there is no man on the minority, I am sure, but what will support this bill. But we are opposed to saying to a large body of people, "You can not have a voice excepting in connection with another Territory," when that Territory may have power to override the weaker one. For example, it may be that Arizona would vote against union, and that New Mexico would vote for union, and having a greater majority, the result would be that the two would be combined against the will of Arizona.

I insist that that is in violation of every principle of government; that it is revolutionary in its character. What has been the policy of this Government heretofore? From time immemorial States have been made smaller, but never in the history of this Republic has the Congress of the United States undertaken to unite two Territories into one. Commencing with the first, Vermont came from New York, Maine from Massachusetts, Kentucky was part of Virginia, Tennessee part of North Carolina, Mississippi a part of Georgia, and after Mississippi was set off to itself it was then divided into two States—Mississippi and Alabama. Dakota was divided at admission, and West Virginia was formerly a part of Virginia. But you will strive in vain to find precedent for the union attempted here to-day.

Why is it that we are asked to vote for this bill in the shape that it is in? Why not permit it to be amended before passing the measure? You know, gentlemen of the majority, that if you submit this to the House upon its merits, without the party lash being applied, that Arizona and New Mexico will not be united together; or if they are, that consent will be given to them to say for themselves whether they are in favor of union or not.

In the last Congress, in some remarks on the question of statehood for Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, I undertook to give a short and concise history of the questions raised, the area, population, and general conditions of each Territory at the time the enabling act was passed, and I attempted to show that by every method of determination that had theretofore been invoked each of the Territories was entitled to immediate statehood.

To-day these conditions are more favorable in the Territories named than at that time, and the vast domain seeking the privilege of statehood are each more entitled to recognition than it was when the statehood bills were considered in 1902. The same Territories are presenting themselves at this time with the same earnest plea, begging for statehood, but the majority of the Committee on the Territories, instead of pursuing the course of the Fifty-seventh Congress, have voluntarily presented a bill combining the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico into one State and Oklahoma and Indian Territory into another.

In the case of Arizona and New Mexico, which by the pending bill are united, there was not a single demand from any source for such blending. No person appeared before the committee from either Territory who asked such action. No one acting for the people in any capacity even suggested it. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. WILSON] presented a bill early in the session asking statehood for Arizona alone, and followed it with hearings from leading men of the Territory, including the governor, who insisted on admission at once and showed beyond question that the Territory was entitled to this recognition.

When asked by the members of the committee how the people felt about joining their Territory with New Mexico, in every instance an emphatic expression was made to the effect that they were very much opposed to it, some going so far as to say that they would prefer to remain a Territory indefinitely than to be united in statehood with New Mexico. Ex-Governor Murphy, who has been a citizen of Arizona for over twenty years, has been twice its governor and once its Delegate in Congress, a partisan and active Republican in politics, interested in many ways in its property and development, said to the committee:

> Arizona in 1863 was cut off from New Mexico because of its unwieldiness. The area of the two Territories combined would be as great as all of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana. The distance from one side to the other would be as far as it is from New York to Chicago. * * * The legal procedure of New Mexico is under common law jurisprudence, while Arizona has a code. Each has its public buildings and indebtedness, which would be difficult to adjust, and there is nothing in common between the people. It would be a very unwieldy and expensive State to govern, and to my mind the proposition would be absurd to any intelligent citizen of the country. * * * I have been over the Territory a great many times, and have written nine statistical reports, in all of which facts have been carefully compiled. I have yet to hear even one citizen favor the joint statehood proposition.

The Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY] likewise presented a bill for the admission of New Mexico. Various citizens of that Territory appeared before the committee in the interests of statehood and insisted that New Mexico was ready for admission and had all the requisites of a State excepting the enabling act. In an eloquent and forceful plea for the admission of New Mexico Mr. RODEY stated to the committee, among other things:

> Arizona and New Mexico are, indeed, a blanket across the backbone of this continent—one on the right side and the other on the left. One is east and the other is west. The continental divide runs between us. The valleys of Arizona cluster the population largely in a bunch. The valleys of the Rio Grande and Pecos cluster the population in a bunch also.
> If we have this joint statehood it will result in an interminable fight over the location of the capital. Recollect, also, that the Territories now have their institutions. Arizona has a penitentiary, an insane asylum, a fine university, a capitol, and all the institutions that go to make up a magnificent State; all put there by its own taxation and its own money. New Mexico has a capitol, a university, a science hall, two normal universities, an agricultural college, a military institution, a school of mines, a miners' hospital, a penitentiary, and a deaf and dumb asylum. * * * Our laws and our customs are largely different from those of Arizona, and as a State, if we had the power, we would not have the same laws. We have land grants galore in New Mexico to which the civil law of Spain largely applies.
> We have laws with reference to the distribution of waters that we may change to conform to the general western scheme on the subject, but they are not changed yet. All these things would conflict; and if we had a joint legislature with Arizona, there might be interminable conflicts and fights.

Now, with these Territories demanding statehood separately, and protesting against their union, why should they be joined? What motive prompts this action? Can it be proposed because they can not separately maintain self-government? This would certainly not be contended, for the resources of either is much more than that of many of the States already admitted at the time of their admission.

The assessed valuation of New Mexico in 1901 was $36,977,047.94; in 1902 it was $38,633,993.27; in 1903 it was $39,596,951.79. The governor states in his report that the property is assessed on an average of only 20 per cent of its real value, so that its property is worth $200,000,000. The assessed valuation of Arizona is slightly more than New Mexico, being in 1903 $43,880,041. Will it be contended that by union its expense of government would bear more lightly upon the individual citizen, and that it would be wise on this account, notwithstanding their protest, to unite these dissimilar people? It might be interesting in this connection to inquire where the burdens of State government are the heaviest and where the lightest. And in doing this one may be surprised to find that, as a rule, the smaller the area within the State the less has been the ad valorem tax which its citizens were required to pay.

From the Statistician and Economist of 1901–2, possibly as accurate information as can be secured from any source, it may be learned that the greatest rate paid for State taxes in any State in 1900 was in Michigan and Minnesota, and that the lowest was in Connecticut, Delaware, and New Jersey. The rate of tax levied in Rhode Island, according to the same authority, is shown to be 18 cents on the $100 valuation, while in New York it was 32 cents. Vermont levied 12 cents, while Kansas demanded 40 cents. Indiana, smaller than Oklahoma, paid 29 cents, while California, larger than any State excepting Texas, paid 55 cents. Now, the question may be raised, why is it that the smaller States maintain themselves so easily while the larger States carry the greater burden?

There are various reasons which in part account for this condition, which it is not my purpose to stop to explain in the short time allotted to me, but it is largely due to the fact that they are compact and accessible. But in convenience to the citizens, aside from the question of expense, how much better to have the smaller State. The proposed new State, composed of Arizona and New Mexico, would be, according to the statement furnished by the majority, 685 miles long and 378 miles wide. It would have the combined area of 236,509 square miles, larger than the territory included in the area which would be included if a line were drawn from Newport News to Cincinnati, then up the Ohio to Pennsylvania, around its western border and the western and northern border of New York and Maine to the Atlantic, and then down the coast to the starting point, including all the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and parts of the States of Virginia, West Virginia, and Ohio.

This area includes the Appalachian range; the western area referred to is divided by the Rocky Mountains. Should one object to this important area in the west being carved into two States, while the vast eastern mountain district is divided into twelve States? Could it be said that any injury would result to the Government from the admission of two States rather than one in that extensive area?

The underlying objection to statehood, the real foundation of all opposition, though not frequently openly expressed, is in adding to the number of United States Senators.

Gentlemen who love the Union, who are concerned for its future, who know no section in its territory, who rejoice as greatly in the success of Wyoming or Dakota as they would in that of any other section are willing to look beyond the present to the near-by future when the teeming millions shall be found in the West as in the East, when the mountains of coal which have so greatly enriched the East shall find a handmaiden in the developed coal fields of the West, when the mountains of the richest of precious metals shall give subsistence to millions of inhabitants, when the rich valleys shall, under irrigation, surpass the fertility of the Nile and shall furnish attractive homes for its happy citizens, when the mighty forest shall fall before the ax of labor, and the mill and factory shall manufacture their products, and the hills and mountain sides shall be covered with live stock, so necessary for the food and comfort of American homes.

In looking to that propitious period which is the glad hope of every patriotic American, would anyone recommend that the will of the pioneer in that remote region should be trampled under foot and his earnest plea for recognition to statehood be spurned because there will be four more United States Senators? Certainly no one fully in sympathy with American institutions would take this position.

There is a growing sentiment in favor of representation in the Senate according to population. It is argued that it is not right that New York should have the same representation as Connecticut; that the State of Rhode Island should have an equal footing with Pennsylvania; that Delaware should be as potent as Ohio; that Maine should send to the Senate the same number of Senators as Illinois; that Maryland and Missouri should be placed on a par in representation.

If it is right to apply this principle of representation to States to be admitted into the Union, it should with equal propriety be applied to States already admitted. If the sovereignty, as such, is to be no longer considered, then the representation in the States might be changed according to population. It is interesting to note what changes would take place as the result of such a system of selection.

If the same number composed the Senate as at present, namely, ninety members, there would be twenty States with but one Senator, as follows: Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Maine, Maryland, Nebraska, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, and Wyoming. The States to be benefited by such change in our legislative system would be the following: Illinois would have 5 Senators; Indiana, Massachusetts, Missouri, and Texas, each 3; Ohio, 4; Pennsylvania, 7, and New York, 8. How many of the twenty States where representation would be reduced would favor such a provision? How many of them would submit to such a system?

Yet it would certainly have as much justice for its basis as would the idea that the Territories must not be admitted because they add to the number of United States Senators. I can not conceive how the individual who wishes justice, who believes in the wisdom of our fathers, who is concerned that each State in the grand galaxy of States should have the same opportunity, could advocate a system which, if carried to its legitimate result, would revolutionize and upturn our legislative system and take from many of the States which have wrought so nobly and around whose brilliant history is entwined the gratitude and affection of every liberty-loving citizen of the great Republic.

Neither Arizona nor New Mexico is equal to New York in population, and never may be, but either one is entitled to the recognition generously extended to every other Territory which has been admitted, and it should not be subjected to an unnatural and unreasonable union simply to protect the United States Senate from the admission of four Senators from the West.

What excuse can be made for the union of Arizona and New Mexico? Is it possible that it is expected that joint statehood will be accepted by the people, notwithstanding their opposition to it, on the theory that such opportunity for statehood is the only one that will ever be presented? It may be conceded that Congress has the power to pass this bill, but I deny its right to do so from an ethical standpoint.

The highwayman has a physical power to hold up the traveler and demand his property under threat of death, but he has no right to do so. The superior government has the power to say to the inferior, "Comply with our request, or you will be humiliated and overcome," but such conduct would be condemned by every principle of international obligation. The strong may oppose the weak and defenseless, but no principle of equity will justify such conduct. So, in this case, no spirit of fairness, no disposition to regard the fraternal cry of patriotic people, would force Arizona into a State with New Mexico against its will, or vice versa. Nor should Indian Territory be compelled to enter into an alliance with Oklahoma without the consent of each to the union.

What would the people of West Virginia say to being forced back into the old State of Virginia against their protest? If this Congress had the power and disposition to do so such conduct would be no more reprehensible than the union of these two Territories into one State without the consent of each.

The majority of the Territorial Committee, in their report on the subject of the union of Arizona and New Mexico, say:

> After giving full consideration to conditions in both Territories this Committee recommends the admission of Arizona and New Mexico joined as a single State, to be known as Arizona.

They assign no reason for this action; they will not contend that the Territories asked for a blending; they can not say it was the wish of the Delegates, and in my judgment they can not show any injury that would result to the United States by admitting them separately. It may be contended that there have been acquiescences by some of the people. This may be conceded, but why would they consent? Is it because they desired the union? Not at all. It is because by telegram, private letter, and every possible means of communication they have been assured that the President and Congress will grant nothing else; that if they have statehood at all it must be joint statehood.

It is surprising that in the face of all this pressure every county and city, all the boards of trade, every newspaper and prominent citizen of Arizona who is really concerned for its future have earnestly protested against the action suggested by this committee, and in numerous instances they have declared that they would prefer to remain a Territory than to be joined in statehood with New Mexico.

In New Mexico the Territorial Republican convention which selected its delegates to the national convention, which is to be held at Chicago in June, which met within the last few days, made declaration against this proposed union in these words:

> We favor and are of right entitled to statehood within the boundary lines of our Territory as they now exist.

A considerable element of the people of New Mexico it may be, if this bill should be enacted and the question of its acceptance submitted to them, would vote for it, because they would prefer such statehood to none all. But I do not understand what can be the motive that would prompt Congress to force upon them such a dilemma.

How can any Republican vote for such a proposition who is loyal to his party, who follows its teachings, who accepts its direction, who stands pat on its platform and undertakes to carry out its pledges to the people, in the face of this declaration of 1896 in the platform:

> We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States.

And when it was so forcibly reenforced in 1900 by a declaration in these words:

> We favor home rule for and the early admission to statehood of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

The Democratic platform of 1900 made a significant utterance:

> We denounce the failure of the Republican party to carry out its pledge to grant statehood to the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, and we promise the people of these Territories immediate statehood.

The Democrats on this floor commend to the consideration of every Republican the truth of this platform utterance and reinforce it with the declaration that, so far as this Congress is concerned, it seems to be determined to continue to refuse to carry out its platform to the Territories and to go further than a refusal by attempting to drive the people to accept that which has not been asked, under the threat to keep them in Territorial bondage.

The question of statehood for the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma should not be a political one, because both parties are committed in positive terms to their admission. This is one proposition on which, if platforms are to be considered, both parties may unite. What rejoicing there would be among the people of these great Territories if the dominant party would meet the minority party on the common ground of their platforms and give statehood to each of these Territories, as all of us are solemnly pledged to do.

It is my purpose now to confine myself for a few moments to a consideration of the interests of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. Either of these Territories presents an anomaly. Never has a Territory asked to be recognized as a State which had so great a population at the time of its demand; each of these has at least three-fifths of a million of faithful, industrious, and enlightened inhabitants. Oklahoma, from every consideration that goes to make up the requisites of statehood, is entitled to admission in 1904 without waiting until 1906, as the pending bill provides.

Indian Territory, the most neglected spot among the possessions of the Government, demands and should receive immediate consideration. Without public schools, highways, or public institutions it has forged its way to the front in a marvelous manner. Indian rights have been protected, but the white man has to a great extent been forgotten. Conditions perplexing are here presented. This is the recognized home of what are known as the Five Civilized Tribes, who own the lands outside of the towns but can not at present alienate them. These Indian people—mostly of mixed blood, some of them white—are only one-eighth of the total population, but they have thus far been protected by reason of their treaty obligations with the Government.

If these treaties are to be observed hereafter, the Indian Territory can not be admitted to statehood without the consent of the Five Civilized Tribes. There seems to be no question that the solemn treaty of the Government has been made to each of these tribes in language similar to that which was made to the Cherokees, which runs as follows:

> The United States hereby covenants and agrees that the lands ceded to the Cherokee Nation in the foregoing article shall in no future time, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory.

The Government has also agreed with the several tribes to prevent the sale of intoxicants in that Territory in separate obligations made with each tribe, in language similar in each instance to the agreement made with the Seminoles, namely:

> The United States agrees to maintain strict laws in the Seminole country against the introduction, sale, barter, or giving away of intoxicants of any kind or quality.

What should be done with these agreements? Shall the Government ignore them or stand by them? If the consent of the Five Civilized Tribes to statehood is obtained, then the first duty referred to has been fully complied with. If these tribes consent to statehood and accept American citizenship, as by all the statehood bills they are expected to do, then it seems to me that the second obligation would be by them abrogated, and they would take their chances of securing prohibition in the new State and abide by the laws thereof, whatever they might be, on that subject.

I can not understand how statehood can be secured under the provisions of the pending bill without violating the policy which has been carried out for nearly one hundred years in the Government's treatment of these Indians. Congress has the power to ignore all agreements and, as I see it, that is the purpose of the majority of the Territorial Committee. But the serious question is, Can such policy be justly pursued in the treatment of these wards of the Government as to their own possessions?

They own the lands of the Indian Territory, and it is certainly just and proper that their rights should be held sacred because of the peculiar position that the Government sustains to them. Two courses seem to be plain, the first and correct one it would seem would be to secure the consent of the Indian tribes, as indicated. The other is to disregard all treaties, to consider them as citizens, and give them the same consideration as would be extended to anyone else in the Territory. In any event I can not see the necessity for awaiting statehood until 1906. Indian Territory needs government and needs it as badly as any people have ever done within the Republic in its history.

I wish now to call attention to some detailed features of the bill, and especially that with reference to the composition of the constitutional convention. The bill provides for the election of 110 delegates, 50 of whom shall be elected from the Indian Territory and 60 from Oklahoma. This, as I see it, is unfair and unjust. These Territories are about equal in population, area, and relative importance, and should have the same representation in the convention. Oklahoma would probably have the advantage with equal representation, because it is well organized and has the place of meeting.

Every person who appeared before the committee from either Territory who insisted upon joint statehood for the two Territories stated that they should be admitted on terms of equality, and this would include, of course, their representation in the constitutional convention. The census of 1900 gave the population of Oklahoma as 398,331; Indian Territory as 392,060. Since that time the population of each has rapidly increased. It is not known at present which is the larger or what is the number of inhabitants in either.

In my judgment no excuse can be given for this great inequality in representation. It can not be defended on either legal or moral grounds. Indian Territory, without organization, with no code of laws, with no precedents or experience in fixing its needs with more difficult questions to be settled, should be favored rather than discriminated against. There should be equal representation; but if not equal, then it should be fixed according to population, and in that event Indian Territory would have 54 of the 110 delegates.

Another objection to the pending bill is the arrangement of districts which are to select delegates to the constitutional convention. Instead of apportioning them amongst the several counties of Oklahoma and recording districts in Indian Territory according to population, as near as may be, power is vested in an election board composed of Federal officers to arrange these districts without reference to existing boundaries. The same power which fixes the election districts names the judges for the various election precincts, who in turn select their own clerks.

The results of the election must be certified to this same board, who are the board of canvassers, and their findings are final. In all this machinery there is provis on for minority representation in only one particular, and that is that in the selection of judges of election one must be named not of the dominant party. I insist that the whole election system should be nonpartisan in order that there may be responsibility on all political parties.

As might be expected, the Congressional districts provided in the bill for Oklahoma and Indian Territory have been gerrymandered in their formation so as to best serve the interests of the Republican party. Of this the minority, it may be, have no specific right to complain, for if they had the arrangement of them they would be so framed as to send as few Republican Congressmen here as possible. The majority is to be congratulated by their colleagues on that side of the Chamber that they have so nearly eliminated Democrats in their arrangement of districts. Of course the minority are not expected to agree to this feature of the bill.

One of the most serious questions that has been met in any attempt to frame a bill for Indian Territory is in the fact that the Indian lands can not be alienated at present, and if treaties are to be observed, many years must elapse before these lands can all be sold. It is argued that because of this condition there should not be statehood at once, and because existing agreements with reference to the termination of tribal government end with March 4, 1906, that that should be the date for the beginning of the new State.

There is no need of this delay; the wealth of Indian Territory in its cities and towns, its corporations and railroads, its live stock and farm products is astounding, and the taxation on these would easily meet the expense of government, and as the Indian lands become subject to taxation the burden would become lighter. There should be no delay on this account, for, if the Indian Territory is to have no statehood until the lands thereof can be taxed under existing treaties, or until a greater part of the same could be taxed, it would be a number of years before it would be entitled to this recognition.

The organized Territories may put off statehood and their governments will progress as heretofore, but the Indian Territory is practically without government, has no system of public instruction, no method of internal improvement, and is struggling under the annoying scandal of Indian-land frauds and public grafters, and needs to be rescued, and that at once, so that they may right their own wrongs and build up and maintain their own State government, either alone or in connection with Oklahoma.

It may be argued with much reason that the Territory has not gone through its probationary period of Territorial government, and that it should do so before it enjoys the blessings of statehood. But no one proposes this course. The people of the Territory are not asking it. Its environments, resources, and population are such that it is practically agreed that no such probation should be required. Unfortunately, however, the pending bill makes an interregnum of two years during which present conditions must be endured and existing hardships be borne. I can see no good reason for not giving it immediate statehood if it is conceded that it should have statehood as early as March, 1906.

There are numerous other objections to this bill, but I have not the time to call special attention to them, and since no opportunity is to be offered for amendments I shall not consume time in further calling attention to them.

I desire, however, before concluding to call attention to some general objections which have been raised elsewhere than in this forum. In my judgment the persons urging the objections are in fact opposed to any kind of statehood.

It is a well-known fact that there are several individuals in the majority party here as well as elsewhere who are opposed to statehood in any form, and if they vote for this bill it will be on the theory that these Territories must be admitted some time, and that fewer States can be made now than later on. It has been argued that the Continental Congress provided that the Northwest Territory should be admitted when they reached a population of 60,000; that the First Congress ratified this act at a time when there was a population in the Union of less than 4,000,000; that the United States now, with a population of nearly 80,000,000, should require each Territory before admission to have a population of 1,650,000 inhabitants before it is admitted to statehood. It seems to be forgotten that in the First Congress the basis of representation was fixed on a population of 60,000, and that the number of Representatives in that Congress was only 66. At present the basis of representation is about 194,000, and the number of Representatives is 386.

Those who make this argument fail to give the full text of the resolution made in 1787 by the Continental Congress. They quote only a part of said act and end their quotation in the middle of a sentence. To make this distortion, they correctly use these words:

> Whenever any of said States shall have 60,000 free white inhabitants, such State shall be admitted by its Delegates into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government—> and so far as it can be consistent with the general interests of the confederacy, such admission shall be allowed at any earlier period and when there may be a less number of free inhabitants in the State than 60,000.

That quotation should have been completed by adding the remainder of the sentence—

The perfected sentence gives a very different meaning and leaves the question of admission with a less number than 60,000 to the discretion of Congress. That discretion has been repeatedly invoked, and within nearly every decade since that time. There have been thirty-two States admitted to the Union since the original thirteen, and no such standard as the one proposed has ever been required. Why should it be applied to the remaining four Territories? Common justice directs that no such unreasonable standard shall be fixed.

There can be no question that any one of the four Territories has sufficient area to make a State. Any one of them has a much larger population than many of the existing States had at admission. The intelligence, morality, and patriotism of the people are equal to that of any of the States at the time of the passing of the enabling act. Arizona has more wealth per capita than any State in the Union excepting Montana and Nevada, New Mexico is only surpassed by five States, and Oklahoma has more than Maine or Virginia.

Their business enterprise is most successful, and there are fewer financial failures than in any State east of the Mississippi River. With the exception of Indian Territory, they have good public schools; their resources are boundless, but only slightly developed, sufficient to show their exhaustless supply and extraordinary value. Each of these Territories should be welcomed into our Union, not hereafter, but now. They should be taken immediately from the condition of our forefathers—taxed without representation—and placed on an equal footing with every other State in the rights of freemen.

If this were done, the happy homes of their people would be made to thrill with the glad new song for which our ancestors were willing to give their lives and fortunes, and they, I have no doubt, would ever rejoice that they are an integral part of the world's greatest Republic. In the hereafter, when the records of the lives of the Members of this Congress shall have been fully written, and its page is read by succeeding generations, he who stood for justice and demanded that the rights of these Territories should be considered will be applauded and the sordid timeserver who for some temporary advantage sought to deprive them of their rights and to coerce them into unnatural union will be condemned.

As anxious as I am for statehood and concerned that it shall be given to these Territories as soon as such an act could be passed, yet, when confronted with the pending bill, which makes an unnatural union of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico and wholly disregards their wishes as individual entities, and, if enforced, might compel one of them to become part of a State against its will and against its vote, I am compelled in the discharge of my duty both to the Territories and to the country to cast my vote against it.

If the iron hand of arbitrary power were removed and an opportunity were given to amend this bill so that each Territory was given proper recognition and was protected in the ratification of a constitution, then I would support it. This union sought is not justified by any precedent in the history of the Republic. It is revolutionary in its tendency. The bill in itself is extremely partisan, and was framed in utter disregard of the minority and, as I believe, without reference to the wishes of the people concerned.

I make my feeble protest in the name of justice and fair treatment, and hope that this measure may never receive the sanction of Congress, but that these Territories, so unjustly dealt with now, will in the near future have friends in control who are willing to live up to the solemn promises of their respective parties and give to them the boon which they have long sought, the greatest blessing that can be received—recognized participation in free government and factors in the greatest Republic, represented by the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.]

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the other side have consumed the whole of their time. I now desire to yield to the gentleman from New Mexico, Mr. RODEY. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RODEY. [Applause as Mr. RODEY arose.] Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasant thing to have men on both sides of the House greet one with a reception like this on such an occasion after the battle for statehood, greater or less, that I have made. This question is one of the most momentous before our people at home, and I am here at this time for the purpose of showing our acquiescence in this bill, not that it suits the Territory, but to show that we acquiesce in it. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] just now said that one Territory might vote down the other, and so on. That would be because one wants to come into the Union and the other does not.

I have my remarks prepared—those that I intended to deliver on this question; but as I have only a short time to address the House, I will ask unanimous consent at the present time to extend my remarks in the RECORD and proceed to make a few general remarks now in reference to the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RODEY. It may be that people not living in a Territory do not think much of this subject and our persistency in trying to get into this Union. We in New Mexico have been fifty-eight years engaged in this battle. There is but a small percentage of men that hear me now that were born when New Mexico was taken in as a part of this nation. It is no wonder that we are willing, then, to submit the question to our people as to whether or not they will accept statehood under these terms.

Statehood under even these terms, as we expect to show the people when we go on the stump this fall at home—if by good luck the bill shall pass the United States Senate—is not an unmixed evil. There are a great many things that may be said in favor of it. While the proposed State is not as large as Texas, being 30,000 square miles less in area, it has many of the same peculiarities. While containing 235,000 square miles, it is rectangular in shape; and, as you see by casting your eyes at the map near the Speaker's desk, the new State is not nearly as wide east and west as Texas. In fact, from El Paso across to Austin, the capital of Texas, it is very much farther than from El Paso up to Denver, in Colorado.

So there are many things we can argue, when we go upon the stump, to convince even our sister Territory, much as we expected, and wished, and would have liked to have had a separate admission. New Mexico has had her bill passed in the House of Representatives for admission to the Union, I think, as many as seventeen times, and once it passed both Houses of Congress, but failed in this House in conference by the merest accident. We have been cut out of every bill that has been before Congress for statehood where more than one State was involved for half a century, so that it has been truly said that New Mexico is the Cinderella of the American sisterhood of Commonwealths.

I do not intend at this time to go into very much detail, save to correct a few impressions which seem to prevail with reference to the Southwest, and seem to be admitted even by the committee out of a cautious conservatism when advocating the passage of this measure. It is said that there are great arid wastes in New Mexico and Arizona. Now, that is true to some extent, but there is not anything so hard to get rid of on the face of this earth as a popular misconception, and there is not a more deep-rooted popular misconception extant in this nation than the conception that is in the minds of the people and of this Congress with reference to New Mexico and Arizona.

There is not a square mile of the surface area of either of those great Territories that has not its use for something, either for pasture, for lumber, for coal, for minerals, or for agriculture. Most people do not stop to think that the area of New Mexico alone is bigger than the area of the State of New York, all the New England States, and New Jersey combined. Now, when you stop to think of that you can really appreciate that we can give up the size of a few ordinary States to the desert and still have a good many others left for the purpose of agriculture. [Applause.] It would be impossible to find 122,000 square miles (which is the area of New Mexico) in this nation that is not fit to support a splendid population.

Most people think we have no resources in those Territories. There are not a dozen men within the sound of my voice who know that Arizona has the greatest forest within this nation, and admittedly so. The greatest forest of white-pine timber which the continental United States affords exists in Arizona; it runs from its northwest corner down to its southeastern corner. The Geological Survey tells you about that, but none of you read it. [Applause.] The second greatest forest in this nation is in New Mexico. Did not any of you know that until I told it to you? [Applause.] The greatest coal field in this nation is in New Mexico. The greatest iron deposit in this nation is in New Mexico. Our Territory has iron enough to gridiron China with steel rails and coal enough to smelt it; and yet we are told by gentlemen that we can never support a great population, and that unless we have vast agricultural resources we never can have people. The city of New York alone has more people than each of three-fourths of the States of this Union and it does not produce a potato. [Applause.] The State of Pennsylvania does not raise enough farm products to support its 6,000,000 splendid people.

Is there nothing but agriculture that will support a population? I deny but what we have sufficient agriculture for that purpose, and we will have a great deal more when our waters are impounded, as they will be under the beneficent reclamation act which you passed two years ago, and which was the greatest law in my estimation since the homestead act itself; and when, under the provisions of that act, New Mexico and Arizona shall have their available waters impounded—the flood waters—that now go down, unused, to the sea, they will have an area of cultivation amounting to at least 20,000,000 acres, and that will be equal to 80,000,000, or a tract almost as big as New Mexico itself, because when once irrigated 1 acre of our land is equal to 4 of any other land in nonirrigated sections, as everybody confesses.

Do you think that with all these resources we will not support a population? Look at the city of Denver. Twenty-five years ago gentlemen who are now objecting to us would have said that no such city as that could ever have come into being in a place like that. It has no more agricultural resources, as the gentlemen from Colorado will confess, than we have, and yet there is there to-day a city of 150,000 or 200,000 people, showing what can happen. If our coal, our iron, our lumber, to say nothing of our mines and agriculture, do not deceive you in that regard, then we who live there and ought to know will be mistaken. Go back forty years in history and see what there was in this country.

Sometimes I regret that men do not take broader views of things. Fifty years ago Chicago was a small village, or a small city at best. There was nothing between the Missouri River and the Pacific coast in 1845, the time Texas came into the Union. Look at the magnificent States carved out of that country since that time. Look at the way we are going ahead. Let me illustrate for you gentlemen that have fears the possibilities of this country. I tell you that most of you do not appreciate your country. In 1890 we had 62,000,000 people in this nation. Ten years later, in 1900, we had 76,000,000 people, an increase of 14,000,000 people in one decade.

Now, in the next period, the next decade, six years hence, how many people will we have? We will naturally have increased 18,000,000 more, and with the immigration that is coming in we will have 20,000,000 or 24,000,000 people. If we have 24,000,000 people more under the census of this country in 1910, there will be 100,000,000 people in this great nation, and that only a few years away! Think of an increase of 24,000,000 people—more than three times what there is in the present city and State of New York—and then try to appreciate what we are coming to.

You put that enormous multitude down in one place and radiate all the mileage of all the railroads you have in the country from that point with all its equipment, and you could not carry them off fast enough but what a large proportion would starve to death before you could take them to where there was food, if they did not have any to begin with. Where will those people go? They are bound to be here, and they must go somewhere—they will go in the line of least resistance. They will go into New Mexico and Arizona—everywhere else is filled up. [Laughter and applause.] We yet have 52,000,000 acres of public domain in New Mexico alone, and there is a larger amount in Arizona, because Arizona has not the land grants; and all of that acreage is subject to be taken up. More than 2,000,000 of acres were entered as homesteads in New Mexico last year alone. Some one says that we have no resources.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman not think that we are large enough for two States and ought to be two to-day?

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows my opinion on that subject well enough; but we in New Mexico have made up our minds that half a loaf is better than no bread, and if we do not like this bill we have the great American privilege of voting it down, as the election will cost us nothing, for this Government pays for it. [Prolonged laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there is not an acre of the surplus area in the whole of New Mexico and Arizona that is not good pasture ground. That is the grandest pasture on earth, certainly in this nation. New Mexico grazing lands now support seven millions of sheep, a million and a half cattle, hundreds of thousands of horses, and a vast number of Angora goats. She shipped last year 200,000 head of cattle, 30,000,000 pounds of wool, a vast number of sheep and lambs, and a million and a half tons of bituminous coal. She shipped since the census was taken $5,000,000 worth of dressed lumber, some of it even as far east as New York City. Since the census was taken in New Mexico we have built twelve hundred miles of railroad and equipped it, and it is in operation, a distance equal to that between New York and Omaha. We added 170 new post-offices to our list since the census was taken, and yet you think we are not progressing and that we are stagnant and all that sort of thing. We are going on at that rate. It has been said that we have a very small population.

I have tried for three years to show this Congress, wherever I could speak to its Members and every time that I appeared before a committee, that the census as to New Mexico and Arizona is a positive libel upon those communities. The census did not give us to exceed two-thirds of our population, to start with. It could not be taken in the time nor for the price paid. Not enough was allowed to hire teams to go and take it. We have 350,000 people there in New Mexico now, and that is more than many States now in the Union have, as I will show, but the census gives us only 195,000.

Put our number of people in a territory extending from the Lakes down to the south coast of Long Island, and from the eastern boundary of the State of Maine down to Pennsylvania, over all of that vast area, and then try to find the thousands that are out in the mines prospecting and that are lumbering and sheep herding and cattle herding, and do all that in thirty days, over such a vast country at 2½ cents apiece, and see how much of a census you will get. Well, that is just what happened to us. We saw it when it was too late to correct it, and ever since we have been suffering the consequences.

The Census Bureau did not get to exceed a small two-thirds of the population in either Territory, and then they reckoned all the Indians, that we do not count in our population at all—we have nothing in common with them and nothing to do with them, because the Government takes care of those—and returned the preposterous percentage of 33 per cent of illiteracy; and Arizona they gave 29 per cent of illiteracy. There is not any illiteracy among the population that came from the States, either in New Mexico or Arizona. Three-fifths of the population of New Mexico are your own flesh and blood—people who came from the States. Two-fifths are American citizens of Spanish descent, just as good as you or I—just as good as anybody. They have lived here under the flag for fifty-eight years, and there is not to exceed 10 per cent of illiteracy among them.

I utterly repudiate the charge that those people are not fit to carry on a State government. Why, sir, two or three years ago, after a session of Congress, I went down to Rockaway Beach, adjacent to New York City. I witnessed there the crowds coming down from New York and bathing in the ocean day after day. It takes an ocean to clean such a people. [Laughter.] I went among those people and I talked to them, or tried to talk. [Laughter.] They spoke every language ever dreamed of at the Tower of Babel or anywhere else, except the English language. Those people do not know any place on earth except the particular place in the old country where they came from—Bohemia, Turkey, or somewhere else—and New York City. Yet those jack-legged foreigners become citizens and voters in New York in five years, and some, it is said, do on arrival. [Laughter.]

Our people are even called "foreign." In this grand and glorious country we are all Americans. No matter whether we were born amidst the merry homes of England, on the sunny hills of France, on the banks of the placid Rhine, or down by the Shannon's side, when we come here and lift our hands in lealty to the banner of the free, then, as did the Danes of old in Erin's Isle as to the Irish, we become more American than the Americans themselves and entitled to share in that blessed heritage of liberty that was born of your fathers' blood and sanctified by your mothers' tears and dedicated to the oppressed of all the world. [Applause.]

Compare those people with people like ours—a Christian, patriotic people, who settled this country before Jamestown was settled. There is no comparison possible. Yet people all over this nation talk about our unfitness for statehood. Come down there and see us once, and you will know something about us; see what our resources are; see what we are making of that country. I predict that New Mexico, having nearly 400,000 people now, with the trend of immigration westward, and when the benefits of the splendid irrigation law will have become realized, will in ten years have nearly a million of people.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me one question? What is the acreage of an average farm where irrigation prevails? Is it not about 20 acres?

Mr. RODEY. Ten, twenty, thirty, or forty.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And where irrigation does not prevail it is about 160 acres, is it not?

Mr. RODEY. One hundred and sixty to three hundred.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that this bill will pass. It injures no one. It gives us the opportunity of contributing our long historical leaf to the history of this country and enjoying the blessings of this Government as you do. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, let me reason this matter with the House.

The love of liberty is so strong in the human breast, a Territorial form of government when long endured is so intolerable, the prospect of separate statehood for either of these four great Territories is so remote that I stand here to-day reluctantly acquiescing in the inevitable, and on behalf of the long-neglected, good Christian people of the great Territory of New Mexico, whom I have the honor of representing as a voteless Delegate, advocating the passage of this measure. [Applause.]

The desire for self-government springs eternal in the breast of every American citizen. He is never satisfied with less. Taxation without representation was the complaint that resulted in the birth of this Republic, that brought the divine Declaration of Independence into being, and gave to the oppressed of all the world the glorious Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] For more than half a century our people have battled for their rights, as their lights gave them to see them, until now, failing to secure all they were expecting, they accept the only measure of self-government which the powers that be in this nation seem willing to accord them.

In 1848, two years after General Kearny entered grand and historic old Santa Fe, the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo was entered into between this Government and the Republic of Mexico.

By that compact this nation acquired what is now the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, the States of California, Nevada, Utah, and a part of Colorado—a tract of country quite as vast as all of our domain east of the Father of Waters and the Ohio. Its acquisition at that period, in the light of subsequent events, was a measure so wise as that it now commands the commendation of all our citizens. No grander monument stands to-day to the credit of the Administration of President James K. Polk than the consummation of that treaty. [Applause.]

The territory then acquired was for the most part a vast and practically unknown wilderness. It then contained all told much less than 100,000 inhabitants. The same area to-day, with the small additional area acquired by Gadsden in 1853, furnishes homes for more than two and a half millions of prosperous people, and when its vast resources shall have been more fully developed will, in the not far-distant future, add to the measure of our national prowess even beyond the most ardent dreams of the great man whose splendid genius and foresight brought it to us. [Applause.]

At the time General Kearny raised the flag of the nation over what is now New Mexico and Arizona, in 1846, he issued a proclamation to the people embodying substantially the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States. It was received with joy by the people there as the precursor of greater governmental blessings yet to come, and they at once peaceably turned to the pursuit of their usual avocations. That section of country then remained for nearly two years under a military form of government until the date of the treaty in 1848. The inhabitants, however, when the treaty was being negotiated between the two Governments, fearing that all the promises of liberty might not be observed, secured the insertion in the compact of a clause, now known as Article XIX, of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, which reads as follows:

Mexicans who, in the Territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States according to the principles of the Constitution, and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

It must not be forgotten that at this time and for fifteen years thereafter, until 1863, the present Territory of Arizona was a county of New Mexico, and that the latter country, according to the claims of Texas, was bounded on the east by the upper Rio Grande, until 1850, when Congress paid the latter State $10,000,000 to permit the present eastern boundary of New Mexico to be fixed where it now is.

It has many times been contended on the floor of this House by those opposed to the granting to us of our rights that the phrase in the above-quoted portion of the treaty, "and be admitted at the proper time, to be judged of by the Congress," meant an indefinite period. I confidently submit that a proper construction of it is that we were to be admitted in a short time, within the lives of people then living, and for whose benefit the clause certainly was inserted in the treaty.

Contemporaneous understanding and construction of any instrument in writing is always entitled to great weight. California understood this treaty promise to have the meaning here contended for, and under it two years later—in 1850—passed directly from a military form of government into the Union as a State.

New Mexico, in that same year, after four years of military rule, made a similar effort and erected a State form of government, but was refused admission because of the unsettled condition of its eastern boundary.

The present is the twenty-second Congress before which New Mexico has appeared pleading for the passage of an enabling act under which it might come into the Union. Bills for that purpose, as I stated, have passed one House or the other of this Congress many times, and in 1874 the bill passed both Houses, but failed in conference by the merest accident. The present is the fiftieth bill shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to have been considered by Congress on the subject. It would weary the House to go into detail as to the defeat of the aspirations of the people of New Mexico through all the long years from 1850 to the present time. Is it any wonder we acquiesce even in the present bill?

In 1863, as above stated, one of the western counties of the great Territory of New Mexico, amounting to nearly one half our area, was cut off and erected into a Territory by itself, under the name of Arizona, the name being an Indian word, said to mean "little brooks," or creeks, a name which the southeastern portion of the present Territory in the great forest country is said to have long previously borne.

In addition to this treaty promise of admission, we contend that we are entitled to admission generally under the Declaration of Independence and under the ordinance of 1787.

There is in the handwriting of Thomas Jefferson in one of the Departments an ordinance that was drawn with reference to the Northwest Territory which reads about like this:

"That whenever any of the said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein, such State shall be admitted by its Delegates into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government," and so on.

Senator FORAKER, on the floor of the United States Senate last winter, in an elaborate argument on the subject (great lawyer that he is), contended—and the people in the Territories fully agree with him—that New Mexico and Arizona in particular have not only that legal right to come into the Union (because that ordinance was afterwards applied to all the country southwest of the Ohio River as well as northwest of it), but also have the treaty right contained in the treaty with Mexico. But apart from all that, both political parties have often specifically promised us admission and different Presidents have mentioned us in their messages.

As far back as 1849 President Polk, in his message to Congress, intimated that the people of New Mexico would soon apply to be admitted as a State, and hoped that Congress would settle the question. He referred to the matter two or three different times.

There was a controversy through many years as to the appointment of residents of the Territories to the offices in the Territories, and in 1884 the Republican national convention at Chicago, Ill., resolved upon that subject as follows:

Resolved, That appointments by the President to offices in the Territories should be made from the bona fide citizens and residents of the Territories wherein they are to serve.

The Democratic convention at St. Louis in 1888 also resolved upon the question of statehood in the Territories, and specifically mentioned New Mexico, stating that by virtue of population and development it was entitled to admission into the Union. I submit the resolution, which was as follows:

Resolved, That a just and liberal policy should be pursued in reference to the Territories; that right of self-government is inherent in the people and guaranteed under the Constitution; that the Territories of Washington, Dakota, Montana, and New Mexico are, by virtue of population and development, entitled to admission into the Union of States, and we unqualifiedly condemn the course of the Republican party in refusing statehood and self-government to their people.

In 1888 the Republican convention at Chicago also resolved in favor of statehood for the Territories at some length, and with reference to the appointment of residents of the Territories to the offices therein. I submit the resolution, which was as follows:

The government by Congress of the Territories is based upon necessity only, to the end that they may become States in the Union; therefore, whenever the conditions of population, material resources, public intelligence, and morality are such as to insure a stable local government therein, the people of such Territories should be permitted, as a right inherent in them, the right to form for themselves constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union. Pending the preparation for statehood all officers thereof should be selected from the bona fide residents and citizens of the Territory wherein they are to serve.

In 1892 the Democratic convention at Chicago also resolved and approved the action of the then present House in passing the bills for the admission into the Union of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. The resolution was as follows:

We approve the action of the present House of Representatives in passing bills for the admission into the Union as States of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and we favor the early admission of all the Territories having necessary population and resources to admit them to statehood; and while they remain Territories, we hold that the officials appointed to administer the government of any Territory, together with the Districts of Columbia and Alaska, should be bona fide residents of the Territory or District in which their duties are to be performed. The Democratic party believes in home rule and the control of their own affairs by the people of the vicinage.

In 1892 the Republican national convention has a plank in its platform stating that it favored the admission of the remaining Territories, which I also submit, as follows:

We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable day, having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States.

All the Federal officers appointed for the Territories should be selected from bona fide residents thereof, and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as practicable.

In 1896 the Democratic national convention at Chicago emphatically favored the admission of these Territories to the Union. The resolution is as follows:

We favor the admission of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma into the Union as States, and we favor the early admission of all the Territories having the necessary population and resources to entitle them to statehood; and while they remain Territories we hold that the officials appointed to administer the government of any Territory, together with the Districts of Columbia and Alaska, should be bona fide residents of the Territory or District in which their duties are to be performed. The Democratic party believes in home rule, and that all public lands of the United States should be appropriated to the establishment of free homes for American citizens.

In the same year (1896) the Republican party followed suit, as follows:

We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States. All the Federal officers appointed for the Territories should be selected from bona fide residents thereof, and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as practicable.

In 1900 the Republican convention at Philadelphia used this language:

We favor home rule for, and the early admission to statehood of, the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

And because of the failure of the Republican party to keep its promise of 1896, the Democratic convention at Kansas City in 1900 used this language in its resolution:

We denounce the failure of the Republican party to carry out its pledges to grant statehood to the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma. We promise the people of those Territories immediate statehood, and home rule during their condition as Territories, and we favor home rule and a Territorial form of government for Alaska and Porto Rico.

The people of the Territories, or at least those of the Territories that are now applying, have been looking at these resolutions for many years and wondering when these promises are to be kept. Our people see no issue, no controversy, both parties promise to admit us, and yet we were defeated in the Fifty-seventh Congress—our bills were talked to death.

Since 1846, the date of the raising of the American flag over grand old Santa Fe, seventeen States have been admitted to the Union, every one of which was promoted over the head of poor, illtreated New Mexico.

Those admitted, with the dates of admission, were:

1846	Iowa.
1848	Wisconsin.
1850	California.
1858	Minnesota.
1859	Oregon.
1861	Kansas.
1863	West Virginia.
1864	Nevada.
1867	Nebraska.
1876	Colorado.
1889	North Dakota.
1889	Montana.
1889	Washington.
1890	Idaho.
1890	Wyoming.
1896	Utah.

None of these States had any promise in any treaty as to the time they should be admitted to the Union; and, as I will presently show you, very few of them were nearly as well qualified at the time of admission as New Mexico then was and has been for many years.

No Territory heretofore admitted as a State was ever equal in population to New Mexico at the present time. It is difficult to fix the exact population that any particular Territory had at the time of its admission to the Union as a State, because it often was admitted between a census period—two or three years after or two or three years before a census, as the case might be.

You have to calculate between the two extremes to ascertain what the census actually was at the time of admission; but, giving the benefit of the doubt to the Territories as they were severally admitted, I have calculated that each Territory when admitted had the population given it in this table. I have also added the date of admission:

1791. Vermont, say	86,000	1848. Wisconsin, say	250,000
1791. Kentucky, say	75,000	1850. California, exactly	92,597
1796. Tennessee, say	52,000	1858. Minnesota, say	150,000
1803. Ohio, say	60,000	1859. Oregon, say	50,000
1812. Louisiana, say	80,000	1860. Kansas, exactly	107,206
1816. Indiana, say	85,000	1863. West Virginia, say	300,000
1817. Mississippi, say	55,000	1864. Nevada, say	16,000
1818. Illinois, say	50,000	1867. Nebraska, say	90,000

I claim that the present population of the Territory of New Mexico is not less than 350,000 people, and so it can be seen that if I am right it has a larger population than any Territory ever had when admitted to the Union as a State without any exception whatever. If it has this population, then but four of the thirty-two Territories heretofore admitted even approached it; that is, Maine, West Virginia, South Dakota, and Washington; and New Mexico now surpasses in population, sometimes many fold, the following eight States already in the Union, which had, according to the last census, populations as follows:

Delaware	184,735	North Dakota	319,146
Idaho	161,722	Utah	276,749
Montana	243,329	Vermont	343,641
Nevada	42,335	Wyoming	92,531

I might as well explain that right here. Our population is made up about as follows: Three-fifths of it are people from the States and their descendants, making about 210,000 in number; the other two-fifths of it are native American citizens of New Mexico of Spanish descent, amounting to about 140,000 in number.

If New Mexico and Arizona are joined together, as by this bill proposed, the new State, in addition to being second in the Union in area, will, as to population, in addition to the above, equal or surpass the States of Colorado, Florida, New Hampshire, Oregon, Rhode Island, and Washington.

Referring for a moment to the census again, the census of 1900 is one of the worst libels that was ever cast upon the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. It gives the former 33 and the latter 29 per cent of illiteracy, because it calculates the Indians, that are not taxable and not counted among our population, in with less than two-thirds of the people of each of the Territories. These percentages of illiteracy are preposterous.

It is well known that there is not to exceed 10 per cent of illiteracy in New Mexico among its native people, and that there is absolutely no illiteracy at all, either in New Mexico or Arizona, as to the people who came there from the States. It has been said that Arizona is the most highly educated community in this nation, having more college graduates, proportionately, among its people than any other Commonwealth. The Director of the Census confesses that the work under his department in New Mexico and Arizona is worse than worthless. It could not be done in the time nor for the money paid for the work on those vast areas.

The people are so spread all over the country as that only those along the river valleys and in the towns were even attempted to be taken; but the nation receives this official count, made by the Census Bureau, as truth, and we have had to suffer and are suffering the consequences. Every argument made on this floor during this debate will give the two Territories combined less than 325,000 people, while, as a matter of fact, they have living within their borders, as is shown by their registration lists and school census, a good deal more than half a million of American citizens. Every native in New Mexico, and they form but two-fifths of our population, who is under 58 years of age is a born citizen of the United States, and they are a good, Christian, patriotic people. There need be no fear of polygamy among them. No constitution can ever be adopted in the new State that does not contain the most stringent provisions against it.

No matter what our treaty, constitutional, legal, or moral rights to admission to this Union may be; no matter how many times we may have applied for admission or how many promises may have been made and broken in platforms with reference to us, it is in my opinion, idle to further talk of them. We are confronted with a condition and not a theory. Liberty is as sweet and dear to us as it is to any other citizens of the United States. We have been for fifty-eight years without a State, and we are willing now to accept, as I said, half a loaf rather than no bread. Unless this bill passes, in my opinion, we will not get into the Union in this generation.

It is useless to point out that New Mexico alone, with its 350,000 people, its manifold and vast resources, and its future prospects, is entitled to admission as and of itself. We can not get into the Union in that way. If Arizona was not on the map we could probably succeed in a week, but it is there. We do not want it and it does not want us, but we can not get our rights without it, and therefore we are acquiescing in the passage of this bill.

I know not what fate this bill will meet in the other branch of this Congress, but let that be as it may, the Territories will have to pursue their only mode of presentation as to it; they will have to follow it as lobbyists to the end. We hope to get it amended there so that we will be given three representatives on this floor for the joint State, as our population entitles us to, and we hope to receive a liberal donation of cash to help us along with our schools. This nation has taken our revenues for half a century and in equity owes us many millions of dollars. If we are good enough to do the work, fight the battles, and pay the freight of this nation, we ought to be good enough to be set up in housekeeping out of what is justly our due.

We are anxious about it, as we want the right to vote. The right to vote has ever been considered the essential element of representation. The Puritans gave their best blood to establish that principle long ago. New Mexico alone is entitled to two Representatives in the House right now, if we could get in. But your Government is not organized so as to permit any but an equal representation between the States in the Senate, and we did not have the pleasure of organizing this splendid Government. Your Senate represents your sovereignties. No sensible man now wants to change that. The fathers builded well. This House represents population. A Senator argued that until we have a population of a million and a half of people we are not entitled to come in, as he claimed that would be the present average among the States.

Do you want to know how New Mexico is now? It is modern and up to date. Its cities and towns maintain all things modern, such as street cars, electric lights, waterworks, gas works, telephones, clubs, postal city delivery, etc. I predict for New Mexico in 1910, at the census, near 1,000,000 of people. Where, then, will be the objection of the gentlemen who object to our coming into the Union because of this "disproportionate representation" we will get in the Senate? Why stop now, when you only have at most three or four States to let into the Union for the present—the continental Territories—and when letting them in will only raise the representation in the Senate to ninety-six? Are you to stop at this time and keep us out forever? Every other place is progressing, just as we are. We will have to progress tenfold as compared with every other part of the Union in order to get up to where the Senators claim we ought to be before we come into the Union, with a million and a half or two million people.

PRESENT CONDITION, 1904.

New Mexico, as stated, has now a population of 350,000 people, more than 200,000 being people from the States and their descendants, and the balance being native American citizens of Spanish descent.

The area of the Territory is 122,580 square miles, about equal to the combined areas of the State of New York, all the New England States, and the State of New Jersey.

It has been without a State government for fifty-eight years.

There is practically no land in the Territory that can be strictly classed as "desert," nor does the census or the Geological Survey make any such classification of any of its lands. Almost every square mile of the Territory is useful, and has value either as pasture land, timber land, agricultural land, or mineral land. Its coal fields are as large as the entire State of New York. Its timber areas, of white pine and other varieties, are second only to Arizona's in the nation.

It is confessedly the greatest pasture land in the nation. It has mineral deposits of lead, silver, and copper, as well as gold-bearing quartz veins. It has not heretofore obtained due credit in the national records for its output of the precious metals, because nearly all its ores are shipped out of the Territory in bulk to smelters at El Paso, Tex., Kansas City, Mo., Pueblo, Colo., and other places, and are calculated as the output of those States. Probably little mineral output, save what is carried out by the express companies in the shape of bullion, is taken account of. In spite of this, New Mexico shows often as high as $10,000,000 output per annum of the precious metals.

I contend that it has just as rich mineral deposits as the State of Colorado. No one can convince me that the southern State line of Colorado across the Rocky Mountains demarks the southern boundary of the mineral region or the mineral wealth when the same mountains extend on down through New Mexico.

Its iron deposits are the largest in the nation, and with its coal will yet enable the Territory to sustain a population that will surprise some of the pessimists as to the Territory's future.

In the way of precious stones it produces an immense amount of turquoise, garnets, peridots, and onyx. It has tremendous deposits of bicarbonate of soda, gypsum, and kindred minerals, and, of course, it possesses marbles and building stones in great variety.

The Territory produced during the last five years nearly a million and a half tons of bituminous coal per annum, and the product is still increasing. During the same period of time it produced more than $5,000,000 worth of manufactured lumber, and a new plant, capitalized at $8,000,000, has just been erected at my home town of Albuquerque to manufacture lumber from an immense lumber tract on the continental divide that the concern owns, which it purchased from a land-grant railroad.

It has produced and shipped to the steel works at Pueblo, Colo., about a thousand tons of iron ore per day for several years last past, and is still continuing to do so.

It produces annually from twenty-two to twenty-five million pounds of wool and ships some 200,000 head of cattle into the market every year.

New Mexico is covered all through its northern half and its western side with the remains of the habitations of its former inhabitants. There are tens of thousands of these ruined habitations of races long since passed away, or at least of a more numerous race of aborigines than are now inhabiting the Territory. The cliff dwellings alone of New Mexico, if they were all occupied contemporaneously, indicate that the Territory once had a population of more than half a million people. I could elaborate on this subject in a manner that would require the time for an extended lecture, and I think I could entertain the committee, for I have been over the ground and seen these evidences of the former habitations of man.

As heretofore stated, when New Mexico's waters shall have been impounded and put upon the land, the Territory will have not less than twelve, and perhaps as high as fifteen, millions of acres under cultivation. That enormous quantity of land, which is equal to three or four times the same area in the Eastern States, will sustain a population equal to the entire present population of the city and State of New York.

The Territory, as illustrating the richness of its soil, took the first prize for quantity and quality of wheat per acre and second prize for quantity and quality of oats per acre against all the world at the World's Fair at Chicago in 1893.

At the present time the Territory raises immense quantities of the very finest apples, and large quantities of grapes, melons, peaches, and other fruits. It shipped 200 carloads of apples from the Pecos Valley to Chicago in 1902 and an equal quantity from the San Juan Valley, in the northwestern part of the Territory, to Denver and other northern points.

The finest sort of vegetables are raised in the Territory, and its celery is said to surpass any other celery raised in the country.

EDUCATION.

During the last twenty years New Mexico has undoubtedly made the greatest progress of any part of the nation in educational matters. During that time it has erected at its own expense educational institutions worth a good deal more than $2,000,000, and it has to-day the University of New Mexico, at Albuquerque; Hadley Science Hall, at Albuquerque; two great normal schools, one at Las Vegas and the other at Silver City; a fine military institute (as large as a university almost) at Roswell; a splendid, well-equipped school of mines at Socorro; a great agricultural college at Las Cruces.

And then there are denominational institutions and mission schools all over the Territory. The Catholics have a whole village of schools and colleges at Santa Fe, Las Vegas, Albuquerque, and other places.

The Presbyterian Board of Missions has Indian schools at Albuquerque, Tierra Amarilla, and other places, besides many day schools around at the different Indian pueblos. The Government of the United States has an immense Indian school at Santa Fe, an equally large one at Albuquerque, and more than two dozen day schools at the different Indian pueblos. The Methodists and other denominations have schools in different towns and outlying precincts all over the Territory.

The Territory has as fine a system of common schools as there is to be found anywhere supported by an equal population. It spends more than a million dollars annually in their support. The larger towns and cities, and there are twenty or more of them, have each from one to seven fine brick schoolhouses, costing from a few thousand to as high as forty or fifty thousand dollars each, and this without in any manner disparaging the common schools of the villages and outlying precincts all over the Territory.

There are 2 thousand teachers employed by the Territory now. The school children number, according to latest accounts, nearly 75,000.

The Territory supports an educational organization, with a superintendent, who has his office at the capital, at Santa Fe. Every one of the several large institutions has a board of regents, who manage its affairs. Every city and town has a board of education to look after the school interests of the municipality.

There is a teachers' institute in the Territory, which holds annual meetings, and by law the teachers are bound to attend a normal institute every year.

School elections in the Territory are almost nonpartisan, and there is no place where school affairs, school property, and school funds are so economically administered and held so sacred to the purposes of educating the youth of the Territory.

This does not look as though the Territory was backward in any way or was not making progress, as has been claimed. The contrary is really the fact, as anyone can see who will take the time to investigate it.

TERRITORIAL INSTITUTIONS.

Besides the institutions mentioned, the Territory has a fine capitol building, a penitentiary, an insane asylum, a deaf and dumb asylum, a miners' hospital, and many other institutions.

People of the East who have visited these several institutions pronounce them to be as well conducted as those in any State of the Union, and more economically.

CHURCHES.

There is perhaps no part of the nation that has as many churches in proportion to its population as New Mexico. The Catholics have their church headquarters for the Southwest at Santa Fe, and all over the vast Territory, in every city, town, and village, they have churches.

Every Christian denomination known to civilization has churches in many of the cities and towns of the Territory. The larger places have from twelve to fifteen places of worship of different denominations, including, in two or three cases, as in my own town of Albuquerque, a Jewish synagogue.

STORES.

It would surprise members of this committee could they see some of the stocks of goods kept by the merchants of New Mexico. In towns and villages having only a few thousand or a few hundred inhabitants stocks of merchandise will be found as large as those carried in cities of twenty to sixty thousand people in the Eastern States. This, of course, occurs because of the immense stretches of country that are supplied.

BANKS.

There are some twenty national banks in New Mexico and about a dozen Territorial banks, every one of which is doing a prosperous business and has deposits that would astonish Easterners, when compared with the capital stock. One bank in my own town, with $150,000 capital, has a balance sheet of more than $2,500,000. Another bank there, with only $70,000 of its capital paid in, has a balance sheet of more than $1,000,000, and it is almost equally good throughout the Territory.

We have a few trust companies and several prosperous building societies.

CLUBS AND SOCIAL ORGANIZATIONS.

Every town of any size has a commercial and social club, and gentlemen of the committee will testify as to the character and magnificence of the club in my home town of Albuquerque.

TERRITORIAL FAIRS.

Territorial fairs are annually held at Albuquerque, Roswell, Farmington, and other places. Gentlemen of this committee who visited us will, I think, admit that the one held at the city of Albuquerque was a very good one.

EXPORTS.

The exports of the Territory are cattle, horses, hides, sheep, wethers, lambs, wool, Angora goats, Angora goat hair, lumber, coal, iron, gold, silver, lead, copper, precious stones, Navajo blankets, Indian pottery, Indian curios, piñon nuts, red pepper, sulphur, guano, gypsum, salt, fruit, such as apples, grapes, peaches, and melons, also large quantities of vegetables, particularly celery. The Territory raises immense quantities of alfalfa and hay, and wheat, oats, and other cereals, but does not export much.

RAILROADS.

The Territory has now constructed and in operation more than 3,000 miles of fully equipped railroad, with the same mileage of telegraph lines, and often both great companies have wires on the same road and hundreds of additional miles of road and telegraph projected. About 1,200 miles of this railroad has been constructed since the census was taken, and it indicates the tremendous strides forward that the Territory is taking. The Wells, Fargo & Co. Express Company permeates the entire Territory. Every railroad, telegraph company, and other business enterprise is doing a thriving, profitable, and speedily increasing business.

NEWSPAPERS.

I have referred to the fact that we have about seventy-five newspapers in the Territory, five or six of them being modern dailies that class with those of the middle-sized cities of the Eastern States.

I have also shown you that we have 400 post-offices, and they are increasing at the rate sometimes of as high as two or three a week.

TAXABLE WEALTH.

The Territory, for purposes of taxation, does not return its property at more than one-fifth of its real value. The amount returned for purposes of assessment at the present time is $43,000,000, but I might state the reasonable assessable valuation of the Territory to be as follows:

7,000,000 acres of railroad land, with its coal, iron, and timber, at $5	$35,000,000
7,000,000 acres of private patented land grants, with its timber and, in some instances, its minerals, at $5	35,000,000
2,000,000 acres agricultural land, at $10	20,000,000
3,000 miles of railroad and telegraph line, with its franchises, equipment, machinery, shops, etc., at $30,000	90,000,000
Patented mines and plants	25,000,000
7,000,000 sheep and goats, at $2	14,000,000
25,000,000 pounds of wool, at 8 cents	2,000,000
1,700,000 head of cattle, at $20	30,000,000
100,000 head of horses, at $10	1,000,000
1,000,000 Angora goats, at $3	3,000,000
City lots and buildings	25,000,000
Stocks of goods	15,000,000
Household furniture of all kinds	5,000,000
Jewelry	2,000,000
Cash, bonds, stocks, mortgages, etc	10,000,000
Product of mines—coal, iron, gold, silver, copper, lead, etc	7,000,000
Product of farms—alfalfa, wheat, and other crops	5,000,000
All other kinds of property	5,000,000
Total	329,000,000

As it will be seen, this tabulation gives the Territory easily property of the value of $329,000,000 to be taxed after we become a State.

Should the constitution of the new State limit taxation to 1 per cent for all purposes, it would raise, on the above valuation, the sum of $3,290,000, and this is more than twice the amount required to sustain a State government, and so our contention, which we have often made, that the Territory will be the lowest-taxed State in the Union when admitted is bound to be true, and this is counting the wealth and resources of only one of the great Territories you are to join together as one State under this bill. In mines and lumber Arizona's wealth is greater than that of New Mexico, so it can be confidently asserted that the new State will have taxable wealth of at least $700,000,000.

It is proposed by this bill to create two States out of the four remaining continental Territories—one to be known as "Oklahoma," out of that Territory with the Indian Territory added, and the other to be known as "Arizona," out of that Territory with New Mexico added. My remarks have referred almost entirely to New Mexico as a component part of the proposed State of Arizona, as it is the only one which substantially concerns our people.

As to the great State of Oklahoma, I but bid it a fervid godspeed and leave to others more competent than I, and to the Delegate from that jurisdiction, the task of informing the House as to the facts concerning it. It is the grand young giant embryo commonwealth of the Southwest, a credit to itself and its people, and the greatest that Congress has ever yet been called upon to admit to the Union.

Let me ask again: Will this jointure of the two Territories be an unmixed evil? I think not. The great State thus created will still be more than 30,000 square miles less in area than the great State of Texas and much more compact in form. Its different parts will in these modern railroad days be infinitely more accessible to each other than were the different sections of much smaller States in former times. It will, of course, be in size the second State in the Union. They will thereafter run in this order:

	Square miles.
Texas	265,780
The new State of Arizona	235,000
California	158,360
Montana	146,080
Nevada	110,700
Colorado	103,925
Wyoming	97,890
Oregon	96,030

And so on in diminishing order until Rhode Island, with its 1,250 square miles of area, ends the list of sovereignties.

The great State of Texas has the right, under its enabling act, to divide itself so as to make five States, yet such a proposition would meet with no favor. It had but about 150,000 people or less when it was admitted to the Union in 1845, spread out over its immense area.

The bill proposes to call the new great State "Arizona." I am sorry that the committee feels that this must be done. I admit it is a beautiful and euphonious name, and one that will give the new State some advantage, because of the order in which it will be called in all national conventions and published in all census and other governmental reports, and, while I admit that the name "New Mexico," as designating a section of our country so close to the Republic of Mexico, is somewhat inconvenient, still the Territory has become my home, I was married there, my children were born there, and I have learned to love it.

I have read its history with pride. There are many of our citizens who look back with reverence on the record of the conquistadores. It is not pleasant to know that the committee, in its wisdom, should see fit to deprive the land of their forefathers of the name it has so long and so honorably borne and around which clusters so many glorious memories. I can not do better on this subject than to insert here in the RECORD a letter recently addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Territories of this House on this subject, which treats of it in a manner in which only he is capable of treating it. It is as follows:

THE NAME OF NEW MEXICO—TO CHANGE ITS NAME TO ARIZONA WOULD BE NOTHING SHORT OF SACRILEGE—A GLORIOUS HISTORY—THE TRADITIONS, ROMANCE, AND ASSOCIATIONS OF THREE CENTURIES CLUSTER ABOUT IT.

Ex-Governor L. B. Prince, president of the New Mexico Historical Society and a well-known and oft-quoted authority upon the history of New Mexico, has addressed the following letter to the chairman of the Committee on Territories of the House:

SANTA FE, N. MEX., March 12, 1904.

To the chairman of the Committee on Territories.

SIR: The proposed change of the name of New Mexico to Arizona is so contrary to precedent and involves such an overturn of history that I think it must have been suggested without consideration, and I therefore take the liberty of drawing your attention to the historic facts involved.

Never before in the naming of a State has an old name, sanctioned by centuries of use and interwoven with the whole history of a country, been ignored or changed. Apart from sentimental considerations, the confusion necessarily caused by blotting from the map a name which would be constantly found in all books on the Southwest would be not only annoying but misleading.

Suppose that the name of New York should suddenly be changed to Montauk, what confusion would arise hereafter in reading the history of the Empire State, when its old name was only a reminiscence and its identity had constantly to be explained. Yet New York is comparatively a new name, dating only from the English occupation in 1606, while the name of New Mexico is almost a century older.

To turn to the exact history involved, New Mexico has the oldest name of any civil division in the United States except one—Florida. It was so named by Antonio de Espejo in the report of his expedition in 1582-1585, and has never been varied since. I have before me a copy of the account of Espejo's discoveries, printed in Paris in 1588, which narrates that "they found fifteen provinces full of cities and villages where the people lived in houses four or five stories in height, and called it New Mexico because in many things it was similar to the other Mexico already discovered."

In the prose account of the conquest and colonization of the country by Onate in 1598, it is called "the kingdoms and provinces of New Mexico;" and the long epic poem of thirty-three cantos, by Captain Villagra, which narrates the story of the conquest in heroic verse, is called "History of New Mexico." The official title of Onate, after the conquest, was "governor and captain-general of the kingdoms and provinces of New Mexico;" and for many years the dignity of a kingdom was always accorded to New Mexico in all official documents. In this respect its position was very different from that of any other parts of the Spanish domain afterwards embraced in the Republic of Mexico. They were provinces of the vice-royalty of Spain, but never aspired to the dignity of being separate kingdoms.

The importance of New Mexico as to territorial extent is well illustrated by the maps of different epochs. In those of the seventeenth century, it divides the width of the continent with Florida, extending from the Pacific Ocean to the western boundary of what are now Arkansas and Missouri; everything else to the Atlantic was embraced in Florida except the English settlements along the coast. This division appears on all the maps of that century, including Sanson's map, published in Paris in 1657, and Sauerman's, published at Bremen in 1689; and continued as late as that of N. de Fer, geographer of the Dauphin, in 1705. In those of the eighteenth century Louisiana takes its place between Florida and New Mexico, occupying the Mississippi Valley, but New Mexico still extended from the Pacific to the present Indian Territory until late in the century, when the strip along the western coast began to be marked "California." It is thus apparent how important a place the name played in the history of the continent in earlier times.

After the Mexican war, the compromise measure of 1850 established the Territory of New Mexico, including all of what is now New Mexico and Arizona, with southern Nevada, and southern Colorado to the thirty-eighth parallel. Subsequently all north of the thirty-seventh parallel was made part of Colorado in 1861, and in 1863 the Territory of Arizona was formed with the one hundred and ninth meridian as its boundary. Thus, even under the United States Government, New Mexico originally embraced nearly all of the Southwest, and it would seem strange to give to it now the name of one of its old counties. For in 1860, after the Gadsden purchase had been added to its territory, with about 8,000 inhabitants, the legislature of New Mexico created the county of Arizona with Tucson as its county seat.

If the name of Arizona had any significance or historic interest, there might be some reason for its adoption. But it has neither. The name itself belongs to Mexico and not to the United States. King's Handbook of the United States says that it comes from Arizonac, the Pima name of a locality near the head of the Rio Altar in Sonora. Bancroft adopts the same derivation, localizing it to a point near Saric in Sonora, where it was applied to a famous mine of that vicinity. When the name was being adopted by Congress as that of a Territory, its orthography was so uncertain that various forms were suggested, including Arizonia and Arizuma.

Its meaning, if it has any, is more uncertain than its derivation. Bancroft ridicules the various ideas of a Spanish origin, some of which are certainly absurd, as "Arrezafe," a place full of brush and brambles; "Arida Zona," an arid region; "Narizona," a woman with a large nose, etc. The uncertainty of its Indian significance can be judged from the following remarkably diverse meanings, which are ascribed to it by different authors, such as "Maiden's Valley," from the Pima language; "The Sun's Beloved," from the Mojave; "Few Fountains," "Beautiful Region," "Silver Bearing," "Little Creek," etc., while some claim that it is named for Arezuma, a mythical Aztec queen, and others that it is called after Arizonia, a goddess from whom the Zuni Indians claim descent.

Thus neither the origin nor the significance of the name is certainly known, and yet it is for this that it is suggested to discard the old historic name of the Southwest, which was the established title years before Jamestown or New Amsterdam or Plymouth was even thought of.

Around the name of New Mexico cluster all of the history, the traditions, the romance, the associations of more than three centuries. These things should be cherished, not destroyed.

If it is decided to unite Arizona with New Mexico in one State, it is simply the restoration to the latter of its western portion, which was taken from it by act of Congress in 1863. But it would be strange if when the daughter returns to the old home the mother's name should be changed to that of the child instead of the latter resuming its old position.

Very respectfully,

L. BRADFORD PRINCE,
President Historical Society of New Mexico.

If the land of sunshine is to be merged with her sister, if its glorious memories are to disappear, I can not do better at this place than to read the following song, which was written by Perry E. Brocchus at Washington City in 1859 as a tribute of affection to New Mexico, and was respectfully inscribed to Hon. M. A. Otero, then the Delegate to Congress from New Mexico, and father of the present governor of the Territory. It was published in the New Mexican in September, 1867, and was clipped from the paper at that time by Marcus Eldodt, who has had it in his possession ever since:

NEW MEXICO.

I love that land of brilliant clime,
As bright as mortals ever know,
With lovely vales and hills sublime,
The land of bright New Mexico.

I love the valleys deep and green,
Where crystal waters laughing flow
In wild romance the hills between,
The valleys of New Mexico.

I love the prairies broad and free,
Where the elk and deer unfettered go,
With tranquil brook and lonely tree,
The prairies of New Mexico.

I love the peaks beyond the cloud
That glisten with perennial snow,
The glorious summits of the proud
Sierras of New Mexico.

I love the hues that gild the West,
At evening, with supernal glow,
And crown the hills with dazzling crest,
The sunset of New Mexico.

I love the soft, mellifluent tongue,
That from the lips doth sweetly flow,
Like strains with harp and timbrel sung,
The language of New Mexico.

I love the silence deep and grand,
That reigns around, above, below,
From mountain top to river strand,
The silence of New Mexico.

I love the skies so fair and bright,
That o'er the earth their radiance throw,
Serene by day, so grand at night,
The skies of fair New Mexico.

Oh, I would haste, would haste away,
More swiftly than the light can go,
And there forever fondly stay,
In the hills of far New Mexico.

Oh, yes, beneath that gentle sky,
Where moon and stars so softly glow,
There I would live, there I would die,
On the wilds of dear New Mexico.

Then bury me on the mountains high,
Through whose deep vales bright waters flow—
Whose summits pierce the deep blue sky,
The mountains of New Mexico.

Whatever be the fate of this bill, whatever may be the result finally as to the destiny of these two great Territories, however their resources may be developed and their populations increased, there is one fact undenied and undeniable, that both of them possess the most matchless health-giving climate on earth. A citizen of New York, having recently gone to Arizona, and having enjoyed the pleasure and benefit of an outing, sleeping nightly beneath the skies all over the vast mesas and mountain sides of the great Southwest, on his return to New York put his enthusiasm into poetry, under the title of "My Arizona bedroom," and here it is:

MY ARIZONA BEDROOM.

Oh, my Arizona bedroom
Is beneath the Milky Way,
And the moon is in its ceiling,
And the star that tells of day;
And the mountains are the corners,
And the dry earth is the floor
Of my Arizona bedroom,
Which is large as all outdoors.

Oh, my Arizona bedroom
Is ventilated right;
Every zephyr under heaven
Comes to me with blithe "good night;"
Comes to me with touch of blessing
And of ozone, one drink more,
In my Arizona bedroom,
Which is large as all outdoors.

Oh, my Arizona bedroom
Has the lightning on its wall,
And the thunders rap the panels
And their heavy voices call;
And the night birds wing above me,
And the owl-let hoots galore,
Through my Arizona bedroom,
Which is large as all outdoors.

Oh, my Arizona bedroom
It sometimes seems to me,
Is afloat in middle heaven
With each star in ecstacy;
And the tide that turns at midnight
Drifts us down to morning's shore,
Floats us, stars and bed and bedstead,
On the ocean of outdoors.

Oh, my Arizona bedroom
Is beneath the splendid stars,
And the clouds roll up the curtains,
And the windows have no bars;
And I see my God in heaven
As the ancient did of yore,
In my Arizona bedroom,
Which is large as all outdoors.

—J. William Lloyd in New York Sun.

I say to my friends of the minority, and I have friends among them I am happy to say, if your motives are as pure as your platforms proclaim, then pass this bill. It will give us the first chance we have had to come into the Union in half a century. Listen to the voices of a million and a half of people in Oklahoma and Indian Territory. Consider the wants of 150,000 children of your own flesh and blood that are without schools in the Indian Territory.

Listen to the voices of 350,000 people in the Territory of New Mexico as well as you listen to the voices of the people of Arizona. Remember that in passing it you let in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory anyway; and if the people of New Mexico and Arizona do not want it, they can vote down a constitution under it and will not be out of pocket, as the nation pays the cost under this bill. Don't retort by telling me to ask the Republicans to let us in separately. That is just playing politics, and you know they won't do it, and we continue to be ground between the upper and nether partisan millstones.

Now is your time, let us come in and enjoy full-fledged citizenship the same as the citizens of the United States in the States. We have been buffeted by politics and made partisan instruments long enough. We have been battledoored and shuttlecocked for half a century by first one party and then the other. It is time that it was stopped.

Gentlemen, we would like to have a voice as to who shall be our governors, our judges, and our other officials. We would like to have a voice in the national elections. We would like to be represented in the upper branch of the National Legislature; and we would like to have you grant New Mexico the liberty that your own fathers fought for.

In the name of the liberty the fathers wrung from the oppressor; in the name of the patient and patriotic people of the great Territory of New Mexico; in the name of common justice; in the name of the power that established this Government and guides its destinies, I ask at your hands that you do us justice by passing this bill.

And thus—

Sail on, O Ship of State,
Sail into the Union, strong and great;
Let Destiny before thee go,
To guide thy way, New Mexico!

I thank you, gentlemen, for the kind and patient attention you have given to my weak and necessarily incoherent remarks. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded? If not, they will be voted on together.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The third reading of an engrossed bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. This bill has not been read—not a word of it. I want to know whether it is in order now to ask for the reading of the sections of this bill before it is passed, the House not having yet heard a word of it?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, any gentleman has the right under the rules to demand the reading of the bill in full at this stage. The third reading of the bill has been ordered. Does the gentleman demand that the bill be read in full?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would that be violative of the special rule that the House adopted?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; that rule provided for the consideration of the bill to final passage without amendment, except as indicated (and the amendments have already been passed upon), or intervening motion or appeal.

But the right to demand the third reading of the bill resides with every Member of the House.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, we realize that we are in the minority and can not control the matter. If the gentleman who is the chairman of this committee is willing to have this bill passed without one line of it being read to this House, the minority can afford to submit.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask if the reading of the bill was not dispensed with by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The opportunity has been given to the House at two different times to have this bill read, and twice by unanimous consent was that right waived. The House now has the opportunity for the third time to have the bill read in full, on the third reading.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to demand that the engrossed bill be read? If so, I demand that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was doubtful, as the reading of the bill had begun.

Mr. MADDOX. I never heard of it. Even the amendments have never been read yet.

The SPEAKER. The amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. MADDOX. The amendments were agreed to, but, if the Chair will permit me, they were never read.

Mr. DALZELL. The amendments were set forth in the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is mistaken. The amendments were read on the adoption and prior to the adoption of the rule. If gentlemen really want to arrive at a correct solution of the queries they ask of the Chair, and will indulge the Chair for a moment, the Chair thinks we can get at it.

The Chair was and still is in doubt, on the third reading of the bill, the demand for the reading of the engrossed bill not having been made until the reading had begun, whether it was not waived. Suppose that, the title of the bill having been already read, the third reading had progressed in full until the last section, and then the reading of the engrossed bill should be demanded in lieu of the one read almost universally in practice.

It is not one time in a hundred that the engrossed bill is read, or that the bill has been engrossed, under the practice of the House touching these matters. The third reading of the bill is by its title; and yet it is in the power of any Member to demand the reading of the engrossed bill. That is almost universally waived.

Now, the question in the mind of the Chair is whether, the Clerk having commenced to read the bill, it is too late to demand the reading of the engrossed bill?

The Chair will resolve the doubt in favor of the privilege of each Member of the House, and as the reading of the engrossed bill is demanded, before any of it has been read except the title, if the demand for the reading of the engrossed bill is insisted upon——

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia demands the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to inquire whether the doubt in the mind of the Chair was solved after consultation?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the doubt was solved after consultation; because, without mentioning names, it is true that the skilled parliamentarian who has been at this desk for many Congresses can give the Chair—and the gentleman from Mississippi—cards and spades, and still have a fountain of parliamentary knowledge left. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Georgia demands the reading of the engrossed bill. The bill will be laid aside——

Mr. PAYNE. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MADDOX. I will just ask for the reading of the ordinary print of the bill and not the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. Then the reading of the engrossed bill is not demanded. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Pending the reading.

Mr. MADDOX said: Mr. Speaker, I believe I will withdraw the demand. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia withdraws his demand for the third reading of the bill in full.

Mr. MADDOX. We can not hear it for the noise, anyhow. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Does any other Member desire to have the bill read in full? [Laughter.] The Chair hears no further demand. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi said: Mr. Speaker, let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 104, answered "present" 21, not voting 109, as follows:

J. W. WADSWORTH,
E. STEVENS HENRY,
JOHN LAMB,
Managers on the part of the House.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

Amendment No. 1 simply transfers an official formerly paid from the lump-sum appropriation to the statutory roll.

Amendment No. 2 raises the salary of an electrician from $900 to $1,000 per annum; and in view of the character of the labor and the competency of the present incumbent your conferees agreed to this small increase of salary.

Amendments Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, agreed to by your conferees, provide for four additional clerks in the Weather Bureau. It is proposed to establish in that Bureau a small force to especially and particularly look after and issue warnings in regard to flood and river service.

Amendment No. 19, to which your conferees agreed, provides for an increase of $50,000 for the Bureau of Animal Industry. This increase is made necessary by further outbreak of scab among sheep and cattle on the western ranges, and by a sudden outbreak of a bad contagious disease among horses in Iowa.

Amendment No. 20: This amendment, inserted by the Senate, appropriated $50,000 for experiments in breeding and feeding in cooperation with State agricultural experiment stations. Your conferees reluctantly agreed to an appropriation of $25,000 for these purposes; their objection being that it was thought unwise for the Department to go into experiments in animal breeding, as it might commit the Government to an endless task, resulting in no practical good to the agricultural interests of the country; but finally, at the earnest solicitation of the Secretary of Agriculture, your conferees agreed to the amendment at the decreased amount stated, viz, $25,000.

Amendment No. 22 provides an increase of $500 in the salary of the Chief of Bureau of Plant Industry. This Bureau is one of the most important in the Department. Under its present chief it has done remarkable work, furnishing information which has been of great value to the agricultural interests of the country, and the Senate, in its wisdom, deemed it fit and proper that the salary of the chief should be increased by $500, to which your conferees agreed.

Amendments Nos. 72 and 73 transfer the Division of Entomology into a bureau, but does not increase the amount appropriated by the House for salaries.

Amendment No. 100 increases the salary of the librarian $200. The present incumbent has served in her present capacity and at her present salary between nine and ten years, and the Senate, in its wisdom, considered her worthy of the increase, to which your conferees agreed.

Amendment No. 32 provides an increase of $3,500 for pomological investigations.

Amendment No. 37 provides an increase of $2,500 for botanical investigations and experiments.

Amendment No. 42 provides an increase of $2,500 for grass and forage-plant investigations.

Amendment No. 44 provides an increase of $5,000 for the Arlington Experimental Farm.

Amendment No. 56 provides an increase of $2,500 for investigations in the production of domestic sugar.

R. 15054) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon.

This is the last appropriation bill from that committee. I shall call up the bill when the sundry civil appropriation bill has been disposed of, or as soon thereafter as possible. I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has announced that he will call up the pension appropriation bill immediately after the conclusion of the sundry civil appropriation bill. I have sent for additional copies of the deficiency bill, and if the other bills are disposed of to-day I shall ask the Senate to take it up late in the afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Committee on Military Affairs. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has just announced that the last appropriation bill has been reported from the Committee on Appropriations. I notice by the Calendar that the Military Academy appropriation bill, so-called, has been before the Committee on Military Affairs since the 6th of April. I should be glad if some Senator on that committee would tell us about its status.

Mr. WARREN. The Military Academy appropriation bill is in the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs. I am not able to state whether it went to that committee on the 6th of April or at some later day, but it was sent to the subcommittee at a later date than that, and the subcommittee are considering it. They are now waiting for some information from Colonel Mills in regard to certain items about purchase of land, etc., for waterworks before they can complete it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator that it is desirable to get the bill at an early day before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. That committee does not need any spur or whip to compel a performance of duty. They will report the bill as soon as they have the information, and will report it, without doubt, before the other appropriation bills are disposed of.

DOCUMENTS FOR DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report a bill to amend an act entitled "An act providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill (S. 5597) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents" was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 23 of the statutes of the United States, entitled "An act providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895 (Stat. L., 28, p. 606), be, and is hereby, amended as follows:

In paragraph 20 of section 73 strike out the words "to the Department of Labor, 5 copies" and insert, after the words "to the Department of Agriculture, 50 copies," the words "to the Department of Commerce and Labor, 300 copies."

In paragraph 24 of section 73 strike out the words "to the Department of Labor, 5 copies" and insert, after the words "to the Department of Agriculture, 50 copies," the words "to the Department of Commerce and Labor, including those for the officers of the Immigration Service, 300 copies."

In paragraph 68 of section 73 strike out the words "to the Department of Labor, 4 copies," and also the words "to the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, 2 copies," and insert, after the words "to the Department of Agriculture, 15 copies," the words "to the Department of Commerce and Labor, 150 copies."

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill seems to give an abnormal number of volumes to the Department of Commerce and Labor. Does the Senator remember the number of copies the Treasury and other Departments get?

Mr. PLATT of New York. I do not remember the number stated in the printing act. Let the Secretary read the letter I send to the desk from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the letter sent to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

The purpose of the bill is to provide the Department of Commerce and Labor with its proper quota of pamphlet copies of the statutes of the sessions of Congress, bound volumes of the Statutes at Large, and of the Official Register of the United States, the printing law as it now stands making no provision for the distribution to this Department of the documents mentioned.

INVESTMENTS OF CAPITAL INDEPENDENT OF TRUSTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted on the 18th instant by Mr. DOLLIVER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to prepare and send to the Senate a statement showing what companies have been incorporated in the United States and what investments of capital made by individuals or copartnerships since the year 1900, outside and independent of the so-called "trusts," and the aggregate capital, compared with the total capitalization of the trust combinations.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I have been very much interested since the present session of Congress began in observing the complete victory which the existing tariff law has won over the prejudices and settled opinions which for generations have determined the attitude of the Democratic party toward the protective policy. For the first time in our national history since 1816 that policy stands approved, its enemies themselves being the judges, by the common consent of the American people. If we may accept the plain intimation of the Democratic leaders of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, the old battle cries of the party are not to be heard as we approach the Presidential election of this year. But in their place we are likely to find a calm and resigned acceptance of our established industrial system, with no suggestion of a change which will disturb its foundations or alarm the interests which have grown up under its influence.

Whether this change in the attitude of the Democratic party means a change of heart or simply a cunning change of tactics, it is a little too early to say. The benevolent admission of the fact that vast investments of capital, furnishing employment to millions of workingmen, ought not to be suddenly sacrificed to political theories which have never worked well in the United States, will, it appears to me, be taken for what it is worth. It met all demands in 1884, though everybody perceives that the intervention of tremendous national experiences since that time has somewhat weakened the popular confidence in such an announcement of the plans of the Democratic party as they have been, somewhat ambiguously, confided to us in the course of the recent Senate debates by the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

If all Democratic leaders were as wise and sagacious as he is, it is possible the platform upon which Mr. Cleveland was first elected President could be taken up again, without exciting either the suspicion or the derision of the American people, but, fortunately for the cause of truth, not all of them have mastered the art of chloroforming their adversaries, as the Senator from Maryland has, for no sooner do others less gifted undertake to follow his smooth and sinuous suggestions than they are betrayed into familiar habits of speech which put the whole industrial community on its guard.

The brilliant young leader of the minority in the House of Representatives makes a brave effort to echo these counsels of prudence and moderation in dealing with the tariff question, and succeeds almost as perfectly as the Senator from Maryland himself, though he has not acquired the educated discretion which enables him to ignore the general Democratic opinion inherited from distant generations "that protection is a system of taxation whereby the public is robbed in order that a few may be hothoused by legislation into artificial prosperity." He is conservative for all that, and makes an honest effort to assimilate the palatable wisdom of the Senator from Maryland. And it must be confessed that he does fairly well in lining the party up, when we consider what his real opinion is and what the ultimate Democratic design is.

In order to interpret the conservative programme of dealing with the tariff which the Senator from Maryland for the second time brings forward as a platform for the Democratic party, let me read two sentences from an article printed in a recent magazine by the Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS:

"The general principle that protectionism," says this writer, "is wrong, morally wrong—a prostitution of government to private ends—should never be forgotten; the goal ought never to be lost sight of. At the same time the friends of tariff reform would not strike down, in a revolutionary way, overnight, as the Germans say, all the scaffolding which the false system has erected."

I may be mistaken about it, but it looks to me as if the platform outlined by the Senator from Maryland, intended to allure the country into the belief that the great industries by which our people live are not to be subjected, in case of Democratic victory, to an immediate assault, will be read in the light of this more candid if less seductive statement of the actual motive of Democratic statesmanship. For the difficulty which his followers labor under when they try to harmonize their crude fanaticism with his soft and benignant method of winning elections, without arousing the country and putting the people on their defense, is illustrated also in speeches which have been made here and to which I can more appropriately refer:

I have been taught, and I believe, that the Dingley tariff is an abomination—

Said the eloquent Senator from North Carolina in the Cuban debate of December 15—that it is an exorbitant and excessive taxation, and that after levying a sufficient sum to make up the difference between the labor and the material cost between this country and competing countries it imposes heavy additional duties, in many instances for no other purposes than private enrichment.

It will thus appear that the effort to detach the Democratic party from its traditional antipathy to the protective tariff system is not likely to deceive very many people in a country whose pathway has been lit by an experience so acute and so recent as to baffle all attempts to explain it, however persistent or captivating. If the protective tariff system is to become an issue in the approaching campaign, the issue will be between its friends and its enemies, and the mere fact that the wolves who propose to devour it are dressed in sheeps' clothing will not save them from the reception which they would have in their habit as they have lived all their days.

If such an issue is to be made, if the scattered occupations of the American people now flourishing in every State of the Union are to be again subjected to the doubts and uncertainties of Democratic tariff reform, whether by sudden assault or the indolent horrors of a protracted seige, I know of no Republican who does not welcome the issue and stand ready to defend the historic faith of the party; for surely there never was a period in the history of the United States when the policy of protection had so complete a vindication as it has had under the tariff law of 1897.

From whatever point of view it may be judged—whether from the universal employment of the working forces of the country or the general level of high wages or the multiplication of new industries or the prosperity of the farm or the activity of domestic trade or the volume and net results of foreign commerce—the years covered by the Dingley law will be memorable for generations to come. That enactment stands at the beginning of a new epoch in our commercial life, yet it only repeated upon a wider scale the national experience from the beginning, and it will be a vain task to try to blot out of the minds and hearts of the American people the memory of the redemption wrought in their affairs by the statute which bears the name of Nelson Dingley and preserves the immortal signature of William McKinley.

It is entirely too early for our brethren on the other side to begin the task of explaining away the business disasters incident to Mr. Cleveland's second Administration, much less of disparaging the act of Congress which brought them to an end. To my mind, it has always seemed that the good providence which tries to guide our footsteps had at length determined to give the American people one national experience which they could all understand, and I do not believe that very many who were over 21 years of age when General Harrison was voted out and Mr. Cleveland voted in, and who marched wearily from the fortunate business conditions of 1892 through the wilderness of that lamentable four years, leaving by the wayside their worldly possessions as they marched, will ever deliberately repeat such an act of folly or invite again such a general assignment for the benefit of their creditors. It is gratifying, at least, to find the real leader of the Democratic party recognizing the educational significance of that experience by putting on an air of moderation and caution, as he guides his party in its attack upon the national industrial policy by covert phrases and honeyed words intended to conciliate the apprehensions of a people just recovered from the ten plagues of Egyptian statesmanship.

I count the concession which the protective tariff has won from its ancient enemy all the more remarkable because it has had more to contend with in the last ten years than ever before in its history. The founders and first apologists of the doctrine forecast the only rational complaint that could be made against it. They faced boldly the proposition that if we stopped buying manufactured goods in England and undertook to make them for ourselves, the factories at home, protected by the tariff law, might exact exorbitant profits in the absence of foreign competition.

It was to that criticism that Alexander Hamilton, in the Treasury report which has become the text-book of our progress as a people, addressed his most profound reasoning, confidently laying down the principle that the law of competition acting within our own market place would effectually correct whatever tendencies in that direction might arise. It was a notable testimonial to the wisdom of the founder of the protective-tariff system in America when nearly a century afterwards, looking back upon the whole course of our material development, James G. Blaine was able to put on record, in his unique historical sketch of the period of his own public service, an unqualified corroboration of the opinion which, when Alexander Hamilton first wrote it down, was hardly more than the daring intuition of a mind which had anticipated all the problems of the national life. Mr. Blaine said:

> Protection, in the perfection of its design, does not invite competition from abroad, but is based on the controlling principle that competition at home will always prevent monopoly on the part of the capitalist, assure good wages to the laborer, and defend the consumer against the evils of extortion.

Year by year the good sense of that propositton had been manifest. Nobody denied that while industries were taking form and gaining a foothold among us temporary burdens might arise from the greater cost of production here compared with the countries in which they had been long established, but time gradually demonstrated that as one after another the fields of production in the United States were occupied that temporary disadvantage either disappeared altogether or was reduced as far as it could be without degrading the wages of labor.

Until within more recent years it could not be intelligently said that the system of protection, which began with the organization of our Government and continued with an interruption, never complete, of hardly twenty-five years, had disappointed that expectation of the statesmen who laid its foundations. Competition here, in every field of production, before the eyes of all men, had put the price of manufactured articles down so low that in 1896 Mr. Bryan was able to enlist the Democratic party in a wild crusade for doubling the price of everything by cutting in two the value of the standard coinage of the country.

Within the past ten years the industrial system established by our fathers and defended by all our great practical statesmen who were not under the duress of the slave power, from Washington to McKinley, has had to submit to a test more severe than it had ever before encountered. The question for the first time has become debatable whether the universal law of competition in our market place is able to stand up in the present state of American business or has gone to pieces as a result of a new industrial situation. And we are gravely informed that the trust question is to be made the paramount issue of the approaching campaign. So far as I am personally concerned, it makes very little difference what issue is selected by the Democratic convention as paramount. I sometimes think that we on our side have become neglectful of our rights, in always allowing our opponents to define the area of the controversy and to select the subject for debate. I never knew of any other kind of fighting where such a diagram of the contest was prepared in advance, except the duel described by the biographer of Curran, the Irish orator.

When Curran, on being challenged, chose pistols at 30 paces, his adversary objected, because being a man of 300 pounds weight he would be at an evident disadvantage in such an encounter with one who weighed less than 100 pounds; and to adjust the matter, Mr. Curran proposed to draw out on the overcoat of his antagonist the figure of a man exactly his size, with the distinct understanding that all shots which fell outside the chalk marks need not count. [Laughter.] At any rate there is no mistaking the fact that for a time, at least, our friends on the other side are likely to make more noise about the trusts than about anything else—a familiar and somewhat mechanical noise, it is true, but nevertheless noise enough to be overheard in the general confusion of their counsels.

It can not be denied that the public uneasiness over the sudden rise of the trust system, affecting all classes of society, has given an uncommon opportunity for every form of reckless agitation to find an audience. It would be expecting too much even of Democratic conservatism that it should miss such an opportunity; and it must be confessed, if it could be shown that the policy of sheltering the industries of the United States against the damaging competition of other countries had resulted in a successful conspiracy in restraint of trade in our own country, the task of defending the protective tariff would become a good deal harder than it ever has been before.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the uprising of public opinion against the trusts should have taken the form of a clamor not altogether confined within party lines against the protective tariff system itself, and it can not be denied that there was something exasperating beyond all patience in seeing industries which had literally been created out of the dust of the earth by the act of 1890 manipulated within ten years into huge corporations seeking to engross the whole market place. But time enough has elapsed and things enough have happened to enable us to bring all these scare heads and signals of distress to the test of experience, and to judge with some degree of accuracy how the principle of protection holds its previous reputation in the midst of such new and strange influences as have beset the American market place during the last ten years.

The Democratic party was quick to take up the statement which the president of the American Sugar Refining Company made in his testimony before the Industrial Commission that "the customs-tariff law is the mother of trusts." That sentence, passing rapidly into the liturgy of Democratic devotions, has become the text for every species of extravagant declamation and invective. It has seldom happened to a single man to render such a service to his party in the hour of its distraction, and if that sentence is to be made the paramount issue of the approaching campaign, ordinary generosity would require that Mr. Havemeyer's name should appear somewhere on the ticket.

I propose to inquire briefly into the truth of that proposition, then into the extent of the trust influence in our various fields of industrial production, and, after that, into the behavior of the law of competition, operating in a market place like ours, suddenly invaded by the reckless spirit of trust speculation.

It is hard to understand how anyone experienced in the practical aspect of affairs can believe that the effect of protective laws has been to foster, much less to engender, monopoly. The American market place is a unit, and every part of it, in the nature of the case, shares alike in the advantages arising from a given schedule. The object of such a schedule and its uniform result has been to produce not one industry but many of like kind; not in one section of the country alone, but everywhere throughout our borders. So that if a tendency toward monopoly has grown up in the United States it must be explained on some other principle. For more than a century these laws which are said to breed trusts had the undeniable effect to distribute throughout our whole territory the industries which they were designed to build up, so that from ocean to ocean the map of the United States has been colored all over by the innumerable industrial activities of the American people.

And even in these later years, at the very time the outcry against the trusts has silenced all the other noises of our political strife, the publication of the census of 1900 has thrown the light of definite information upon the flights of everybody's imagination. Whoever now begins his tirade against the trusts by announcing that they bestride our narrow industrial world like a colossus, only makes himself ridiculous. Fortunately, we know in this Presidential campaign what we did not know in the last—exactly how many trusts there are, where they are located, what their capital is, and what their relation to the business of the country is. At the time the census was taken they employed 8.4 per cent of the factory labor of the country, and their total output was 14.1 per cent of the aggregate factory product of the United States. In order to exhibit the exact relation which they bore to the varied field of our industrial production, I will ask your attention to Table 26, contained in Part I of the census of manufactures:

The census of 1900 has been supplemented by careful investigations, which bring our knowledge down to date. A notable and useful work of this character is the recent book called "The Truth about the Trusts," by Mr. John Moody, who appears to be a competent student, entirely without bias, except perhaps a rather insubstantial hope that better days are ahead for the trust combinations. I notice in this book that the author puts down the names of 318 trusts, counting those in various states of dilapidation; but the list includes at least 100 which are composed of only two constituent companies and many others which are unimportant in size and negligible in influence.

It is a safe calculation, however, considering how rapidly their competitors have gained upon them, to say that the combined product of all of them, compared to the total output of the country, is less rather more than is shown by the figures of the census. It needs, therefore, only the slightest familiarity with our industrial statistics to relieve a man's mind at once of the fear that the whole market place has been overshadowed by new and sinister business adventures; and hereafter whoever tries to deal with the trust problem at all will be compelled to deal with an ascertained situation and to let go, however reluctantly, of the endless chain of hearsay and fable which has been worked so long by all sorts and conditions of men in the United States.

I do not intend to discuss at this point the origin of the trusts. The subject is an intricate one and I have not finished my meditations upon it, but I have got far enough into it to see that the protective system is not the mother of them, for that system was a century old before the first one of them was born; and beside that, they made their appearance in free-trade countries even before they did here. I distinctly remember that Mr. Blaine, immediately after his return from Europe in 1883, opened the Harrison campaign by the statement, verified by the common knowledge of everybody, that England was even then plastered all over with trusts. Furthermore, very many of our trusts, from the least and the meanest, like the American Ice Company, even unto the greatest and most successful, like the Standard Oil Company, have dealt with commodities which have nothing to lose by free trade, and never have had.

I am not one of those who have been deceived by the dogmatic statement so often heard in this discussion that the trust is an evolution, and therefore to be accepted, if not as a consummation devoutly to be wished, at least as a final state of things not to be disturbed, except under the heavy penalties imposed by the laws of nature. There is an evolution of business from the day of small things to the modern triumphs of accumulated capital over the market places of the world which no man in his senses complains of; and one of the misfortunes of the trust agitation as it has been conducted in the past has been its indiscriminate attack upon enterprises of large capital, and especially upon corporate undertakings which have assembled vast investments for the transaction of business upon a scale previously unapproached.

There are few among us who would take away from the business community of the United States the modern weapons with which we have fought our way into the arena of the world's affairs, and that man renders the American people a very doubtful service who, in his hurry to strike down the trusts, assaults with indiscriminate stupidity the great corporations which have collected the scattered and unfruitful accumulations of many individuals and put them at the service of the community.

The oldest law known among men, except the law of the family, is the law of property. It has been comparatively easy to justify that law in all ages, for while it has not always been regarded as certain that what you have earned and saved is yours, it has always been obvious that it is not mine. If it has become harder to defend the law of property, whether individual or corporate, in our own times, it is not because its foundations are any less secure or its rights any less sacred; it is because the inventions of avarice and greed have filled the hearts of millions of people with resentment against the whole tribe of promoters, underwriters, stockjobbers, and cheats at common law. And I venture the opinion in this Chamber that the law of property which we have inherited from our fathers, the immemorial prescription of civilization which guards the earnings and savings of labor, whether invested in a farm, in a cottage, or in the stocks of a railroad, a bank, or a manufacturing company, never had more defenders to fight for it than it has to-day, nor a wiser, truer friend to speak for it than the President of the United States.

Unhappily, there is and probably always will be a prejudice more or less general against great wealth in the hands of others, but in a country like this such a prejudice is confined within the narrowest limits and as a political asset has proved absolutely worthless. Even a corporation, like a bank or a railroad, no longer has to contend with the swarm of petty misconceptions which at one time threatened to hinder the development of these indispensable agencies of commerce and business. As the people have studied the trust problem, a good many common errors have been eliminated from their judgment, and a good many advantages in these organizations have found appreciation.

In so far as they stand for an evolution, for a law of progress under which enterprises once conducted single-handed by individuals have grown into partnerships, into companies, into corporations, and even into legitimate combinations, bringing many separate properties under one management, there is much to be said in their defense. The people of the United States, with their accustomed prudence, have been slow to frame a wholesale indictment against them, for when the record is examined neither political party appears to have done very much to circumvent their plans. If they had been in reality hideous monsters about to seize the market place by the throat, does anybody doubt that the terror and distress of the public mind would have found an immediate and effective response from the law-making powers of the Government?

The Republican party is accused by its adversaries of nurturing the trusts, and for proof the circumstance is cited that they began to increase and multiply after McKinley's first election. It is true that few trusts were organized during Mr. Cleveland's last Administration; not, however, because either the President or the Congress by word or deed assumed a threatening attitude toward them, but for the reason that all business was suspended, all credit abolished, and hardly enough money left in circulation to capitalize the organized charities. The only responsiblity which Republican policies have had in the matter is that under their auspices a revival of business took place which lifted the country at once out of rags into affluence; and whatever may be said in condemnation of the trust evil, there are mighty few thoughtful citizens who have ever had any temptation to kill them off by remedies which have never failed to produce the industrial misfortune out of which we escaped in 1896.

Nor ought it to be forgotten that the only steps which have been taken by legislation to prevent conspiracies in restraint of trade—the act of 1890, the act of last year to put a stop to secret freight discriminations, and, more important than either, the adequate equipment of a Bureau of Corporations in the new Department of Commerce and Labor—have been taken by the Republican party. The Sherman law did not, however, deal with such a problem as has grown up in these later years. The late Senator Hanna, using the language of a plain, blunt, business man, began his discussion of the trusts on the stump in Ohio by stating in a straightforward way that "there are no trusts in the United States," and while his speech was laughed at a good deal, yet he spoke the literal truth.

I hold in my hand a little book, published in 1888 by William V. Cook, a member of the New York bar—a mere pamphlet on the trusts—which gives a description of the various forms of industrial combination which up to that time had attracted public attention. He sets out in full the agreements upon which the Standard Oil trust and the sugar trust of that period were based, and describes with some detail the various forms of trade arrangements by which numerous industries had sought the advantages of a more or less compact organization. Some were manufacturing agreements; others selling agreements; others still mere associations for the benefit of the trade. Only two of them appear to have represented a settled purpose of monopolizing the market place, and all of them seem to have been a crude expression of the desire of those concerned to avoid the losses and wastes incident to unrestrained competition.

These were the trusts of 1890, and against them the public opinion of that day, aided by antitrust laws, Federal and local, as administered by the courts, was so effective that within a brief time the primitive trust system disappeared altogether, and little remains except the name to identify the corporate combinations of to-day with the trust movement of the period prior to 1890.

The trust of these times is a single corporation, regularly chartered under State laws, which has acquired, in one title, the separate properties which constitute its plant, so that the problem of dealing with it without rewriting the whole law of corporate property becomes at once difficult and obscure. The trustees who formerly managed separate properties freely committed to their control by the owners have disappeared, and the board of directors exercising all the legal rights of proprietorship over combined properties has taken their place. I am not sure that this transition of industries from the hands of several corporations into the control of the single one, if it could have been made within certain well-defined limits and in perfect good faith toward the public, would have in the long run been regarded as against the general welfare. It permits so many savings in production and distribution and avoids so many of the wastes of the common methods of business that there are reasons for believing that the public would have taken no detriment, but advantage rather, from it.

It has been so uniformly true that the process of cheapening production and facilitating transportation has inured to the benefit of the whole community, that it requires no very unusual confidence in the laws which govern this world to believe that these corporations, when honestly formed and honestly administered, might be made a blessing to the whole world. I have never been disturbed because Congress has not been more swift to strike them down, because I am sure that there are laws in the universe which Congress did not make and which, fortunately, Congress has not yet repealed; and without disparaging the sovereignty of the people over these gigantic creations of the State, the real sovereignty which holds them to their strictest account is the frame and structure of things in a world governed, after all, by the everlasting law of fair dealing among men. The progress of society from the itinerant shoemaker, carrying his tools and his stock with him, fashioning footwear for the entire family while he tarried under their humble roof, to the mammoth shoe factories of New England, is by far more startling in its effect upon the community than the absorption of all these great plants into one could possibly be.

When I have reflected, therefore, upon what might happen to us if any one of our varied industrial fields should pass into a single ownership I have found a good deal of comfort in the thought that even such an institution, from its foundation up, would be compassed about by far-reaching limitations upon its power to oppress and degrade the market place which it had been called to serve; so that if one of our modern trusts should manage to secure and to hold, by fair means or foul, the exclusive production of a given article of general use and necessity, in the very nature of the case not only its permanent grip upon the market, but its profit from year to year would require its managers to divide with the community the savings incident to its improved methods and to put its product within reach of the people upon the fairest and most equitable terms.

It is a maxim of every great business that it moves upon tonnage, and its whole problem is to secure the wide distribution of its product rather than to reap extortionate profits upon a limited sale. The Government of the United States, if you will allow me to make an example of the only perfect monopoly there is in the country, has always jealously guarded its exclusive right in the manufacture and sale of postage stamps. Again and again the price of them has been put down—from 25 cents to 15, from 15 to 10, from 10 to 5, from 5 to 3, from 3 to 2. Every one of these reductions has been for the purpose of increasing the postal revenues, and every one of them has so speedily brought about that result that to-day there are shrewd people who think that a flat reduction of letter postage to 1 cent would still further increase the receipts of the service.

What law is that? It is the law of maximum consumption, by virtue of which the profits of a great business are multiplied; not by the arts of extortion and greed, but by deliberately reducing the price of the article until its use reaches from the few to the unnumbered millions. That is a law which God made and which Congress has not yet repealed.

Not one of the trusts, not even those which, like the American Sugar Refining Company, have approached most nearly to a monopoly, is exempt from that law. They watch more diligently than ever the signs of the market, for they know better than anybody else that their profit is in the sale and not in the manufacture of their goods.

Even such a natural monopoly as a railroad has learned that its dividends are more secure with a big business done in a fair way with a friendly community, than with a precarious business conducted on lines which impoverish its patrons and leave them stripped and embittered at every station along the line. How else shall we account for the fact that the consolidation of the American railway system has been accompanied with a steady decline of rates, until to-day they are less than 50 per cent of what they were twenty years ago, and less by far than anywhere else in the whole world. The motto, "Charge what the traffic will bear," belongs to a rudimentary stage of railway management, long since superseded by the more enlightened selfishness which studies the improvement of facilities and the development of the territory upon which its earnings permanently depend.

There is another common law inherent in the nature of things which stands guard in the market places of the earth against the exactions of greed even when it is clothed with the powers and opportunities of monopoly, and that is the law of deferred consumption.

There is a sense in which to the modern man the distinction between luxuries and necessities has passed away, so that, speaking in general terms, everything is a necessity. But the necessity of buying things has one benevolent limitation upon it—it is not always necessary to buy them to-day, or this week, or even this fall. Nearly everything, from the clothing upon our backs to the roof over our heads, can wait until the structure of high prices yields to the irresistible pressure of the market place.

Suppose, for example, that every factory making hats in the United States should be absorbed by a single corporation, which should blindly and stupidly fix the price of one at $10, how long would a monopoly like that last before it would be reduced to bankruptcy by the quiet but effectual competition of every old hat that there is in the United States? Even the present price tends notably in that direction, for I am told that many of the lockers in the cloakrooms of the Senate are keeping the dust off of silk hats purchased to attend McKinley's funeral.

That placid, undemonstrative section in the statute book of human nature called the law of deferred consumption has already wrecked more than one promising capitalization of industry in the United States, and in some cases, at least, left the victims of the disaster too feeble to call for a receivership. So, if you should ask me to account for the fact that notwithstanding the shrieks of our political platforms, notwithstanding the timidity and hesitation of our statesmen, the American people as a whole have gone serenely about their affairs, refusing to become panic stricken by the apparently unobstructed advance of the mercenaries upon them, I should explain it by their instinctive faith in the government of the world—in those omnipotent energies which make for open and even-handed justice among the children of men.

For, when you come to think of it, in moments of meditative leisure, it would seem to be rather singular that the good God who made us and placed 80,000,000 of us here together in the greatest market place that has been known in the centuries of the world's commerce should have gone off and left us in our weakness to be robbed without benefit of clergy, with nothing to lean on except an occasional act of Congress or a joint resolution of the State legislature.

Let me mention another of these laws, more effective than the legislative enactments of man, which puts a limit to the schemes of monopoly, and that is the law of alternative consumption.

That is a law in obedience to which the market place turns from an article which has become irritating in price to a similar article which answers the same purpose. There are few things which men use that can not, in a pinch, be made to give way to something equally as good. If, for example, the manufacturing of woolen goods should pass into the control of a single corporation—a thing utterly incredible, or at least as far as it has been tried, utterly unprofitable—its product of this year would not only find itself in competition with last year's output, but with the aggregate supply of all the other textile industries in the country.

If a lumber trust were possible, combining every one of the 32,000 separate establishments which constitute, according to the census, the chief industry of thirty-one States of the Union and an important industry in all the rest, including our Territories and the islands of the sea, the market place would speedily bring even such a corporation to its terms, not only by putting off until to-morrow what could be done to-day, but by turning to the brickyard, the stone quarry, and the other supplies of building material within everybody's reach.

It is a common observation, verified by universal experience, that an unreasonable price not only fatally limits the use of the article, but drives its customers in other directions to satisfy their wants. Suppose that the present approach to monopoly attained by the American Tin Plate Company could be continued indefinitely, that institution would still be far short of a command of the market place, except on terms dictated by the people who consume its products. There is hardly a demand for tin plate which can not be met by the use of something else. So that even in the case of ordinary tinware, if the price should begin to respond to the dictation of greed, the potter, the glass-blower, the maker of enameled ware, and a score of other equally alert craftsmen are at hand at once to offer their sympathy.

Even the Standard Oil Company, powerful as it has become, is plainly subject to the mastery of these forces. The Oil City Derrick, in a certain sense, owing to its location, a trade journal, commenting in a recent editorial on the constant variations in the price of petroleum, says:

> A drop of 5 cents a barrel in the price of crude oil follows close upon the celebration of the Christmas holiday. It was preceded by a cut of 20 points a gallon on the refined quotations, and appears to be simply a case of history repeating itself. Refined oil was at a price which compelled economy in its use. There was a falling off in the demand, and to induce greater buying the price had to be lowered. The average foreign consumer can not afford to pay the equivalent of 15 or 20 cents a gallon for his oil.
> When it gets up to the prohibitory mark he simply does without it or substitutes an inferior article. In the United States gas and electric lighting have been crowding out oil illumination for years. The increase in the home consumption has been due to the increased use of oil for heating and cooking purposes, and for furnishing fast running power of various kinds. It is clear that a two-dollar market is not to be reached this year, and that the figure could not be long maintained under present conditions. In 1895 similar conditions prevailed and the market climbed rapidly to the highest point known in years. But the price was beyond the ability of the great body of consumers, a decline in the demand resulted, and a great drop in prices quickly followed.

I call your special attention to the statement made by this writer about the gradual displacement of illuminating oil by the competition of electric light. That is a process only just begun. In a thousand laboratories throughout the world unknown or obscure men are turning the blaze of science on the problems which concern the comfort of human life. The other day, in an unfrequented quarter of New York, I saw an American inventor, with a German electrical engineer by his side, peering into the secrets of a strange mechanism, which sends out a novel magnetic current which distributes heat and light as a mere incident in the traction of motors and the transmission of sounds by wire—a mere by-product of the dynamo.

These two men, whose names I am not at liberty to speak, may be wasting their time or they may be introducing a revolution which shall make all previous industrial ages seem meager and unattractive. At any rate it can do us no harm, while we are considering the array of forces which appear in a market place like ours, to counteract the abuses of commercial greed and to awaken unscrupulous persons from the dream of avarice to think of the thousands of students in every land who are devoting their lives to the exploration of nature in the eager hope of bringing its inmost mysteries to the service of the human race.

I have by no means mentioned all the subtle factors which are at work in this world to establish justice. It is an instructive thing to consider how ingeniously the rule of fair dealing strengthens itself by capturing the very infirmities of human nature. Here is a group of men made uncomfortably rich by the exploitation of the plate-glass industry. They are troubled, as most of us never are, to find a place to put their money. A year ago a million dollars of it is quietly transferred to Michigan and expended on one of the most elaborate beet-sugar factories in the world. They had nothing against the sugar trust; but they unconsciously lent themselves to a movement of capital, which, if the beet-sugar industry is not still further harassed, will require only a few years more to distribute the surplus of that interesting institution.

The history of the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company, which began only a few years ago by buying up every profitable plant engaged in that business in the United States, illustrates also many other weaknesses of fallen man. More than one of its promoters has found the inglorious ease arising from a separation from his lifelong occupation intolerable for him and unpromising for his children. The contentions of the board of directors have turned out to be a poor substitute for the dignity and independence of the old factory, and so we are not surprised to find the pioneer of that industry in Pennsylvania retiring from the trust and initiating his boys into the business for themselves at Toledo, Ohio.

There are few better illustrations than this plate-glass industry of the manifold devices of nature to circumvent the best-laid schemes for engrossing the market place, for, not satisfied with the situation which had been created through its absorption of practically the whole productive capacity of the country, it appears to have followed the hope of gain in new and perilous directions.

Not content with what appeared to be the undisputed privilege of manufacturing all the plate glass made in the country, in a moment of weakness it undertook to invade the functions of the merchant by establishing its own selling agencies in all the important cities of the country. To do that profitably it was compelled to keep in stock the kindred building material which the old jobbers of glass had been accustomed to handle, and before they knew it they had aroused the wrath of excitable little corporations engaged in manufacturing and selling paints, and these responded swiftly to the challenge of the trust by beginning the construction, at Kane, Pa., at a cost of more than a million dollars, of a perfectly equipped plant for manufacturing plate glass.

Our experience has already advanced to such a stage that we are enabled to say with some degree of certainty that no industry dealing with those natural resources, like the harvest of the fields or the mineral riches of the earth, which are everywhere distributed throughout the country, can offer a hopeful chance for the operations of the trust promoter. That phase of the subject, however, I do not intend to discuss until I have advanced a little further into this study of the forces which are at work in the market place to bring confusion to the trust movement of the last decade.

I hold it to be true that the law of competition, while it may be made subject to reasonable restraints, and possibly ought to be, can not be repealed or permanently impeded in its movements by any possible human devices. It is, therefore, my conviction that all or nearly all of these unwieldly creations of the incorporation laws of the country would be worn out by the internal resistance of the market place even if they represented a legitimate investment of bona fide capital. In that case if they survived at all it would only be on account of the efficiency of their administration and the equity with which they distributed to the community the economies in production arising from the combination.

I am not without the sympathy which every sober-minded man feels with those business undertakings, numerous in every part of the country, which have been compelled to consolidate their interests rather than to go on, each destroying the business of the other, in the fierce struggle to sell its products, and which, rather than continue any longer a death grapple for the trade, with its accompanying wastes and disappointments, have united their capital and brought the scattered details of their business under one management. In cases more numerous than the public is aware, this process has gone on, giving strength to enterprises that were weak and a new lease of life to others which were ready to fail.

Against such combinations I will not utter a word of condemnation, and I shall count myself unfortunate if I have not made plain the distinction between the speculative trust flotations and these legitimate combinations of capital to more efficiently carry on, without the aid of wind or water, the pursuits in which they are engaged. Unfortunately, however, for the typical speculative trust enterprise, it exhibits only a morbid, and, in many cases, a profligate effort to take away from the people the fruits of the world's industrial progress by creating an inflated capitalization which, in order to pay any dividend at all, must not only sacrifice the property involved, but lay burdens upon the community which no free market place will patiently bear. I have examined with some care the history of the organization of industrial trusts, such as these now in existence, in every stage of decomposition, and with a few honorable exceptions they all stand upon a more or less fictitious basis, and very many of them have been administered with cynical indifference to those principles of sound finance which have been for generations treated with respect throughout the world.

A corporation, very far from being a curse to the world, ought to be one of the chief blessings of civilization. I regard the English statute, which first outlined the structure of the modern corporation, as an epoch-making step in the progress of society. The bank, which represents the union of numerous stockholders and accepts on deposit the modest savings of the neighborhood, which would otherwise constitute a useless hoard, and puts them to the honorable service of the community, is a benign and not a hurtful institution. And so that organization of capital in corporate form which, in exchange for its stock, takes the actual money of investors, in sums great or small, and applies them to the production of the things which men need, ought not to have an unreasonable critic, much less an enemy, in the world.

We ought not to complain even if it grows with its success until at length, by the efficiency of its administration, it attains a commanding influence in the market place. The mere fact of its combination with other institutions of like character ought not in itself to work a prejudice against it. A single firm in New England, still managed by the surviving member of an ordinary partnership, owns more than a dozen cotton mills, running more spindles than any corporation in the world. I refer to the firm of B. B. & R. Knight, of Providence, R. I., and I will present briefly the history of that firm, given in a work called "The New England States." I hope that I can get the attention of the young men of the United States.

Everywhere I go I find men coming to me asking whether the old opportunities of American business are not gone; whether the trusts, the combines, the present industrial attitude of things have not at last succeeded in shutting the door of opportunity in the face of the young people of the United States. And I find hundred of thousands of young men grown indolent and heartless in the battle of life because they have been told that the doors of opportunity have been at last shut. I have already said that I have not finished my meditations on this trust question, but I have got far enough in it to see that whatever else is true about it, that is not true. Instead of shutting the door of opportunity in the face of the young men of the United States, modern industrial methods have multiplied the opportunities of life in a thousand different directions.

Within twenty years every railroad magnate in America will be in his grave. Within twenty years every trust manager in the United States will either be on the retired list or in a sanitarium somewhere for nervous diseases brought on by drawing his salary, and panic-stricken boards of directors will be scouring in every direction looking for men of training and energy and intellect to take up these great business responsibilities and go forward with the work of the modern world. If I could get the ear of the young men of the United States I would say to them that there was never a minute in the history of the human race when a man taken by himself stood for as much and when a dollar taken by itself stood for as little as it does to-day.

I call your attention to this statement. I think it describes an authentic case of the evolution of business.

This firm was established in 1852, and still exists with its original partners. Moreover, it has now under its control and its ownership more cotton-manufacturing machinery than was ever owned by any business house or corporation in the world. Robert Knight, the younger brother, was the first to become interested in manufacturing. He was born in 1826. He began work at the age of 8 years in the Cranston Print Works, and from the age of 10 to 17 was employed in a cotton mill in Coventry. Then followed a period of study at an academy, a short session as a teacher, and a time of employment as a clerk.

In 1850 he purchased, with Zachariah Parker, a mill in Warwick, which they had been operating on lease for four years so successfully that they had, during that time, earned the purchase money, $40,000; in 1851 he bought out his partner, and in 1852 sold one-half to his elder brother, Benjamin B. Knight. The partnership then formed has remained unchanged. Benjamin Knight, born in 1813, like his brother, was employed for a time in the Cranston Print Works, but then became a clerk, and began business on his own account soon after coming of age. He was a successful merchant at Providence when he first engaged in manufacturing. The brothers brought great skill and good judgment to their enterprise, and have steadily enlarged the field of their operations.

Their first purchase was a mill at Hebronville, in Attleboro, Mass., and their next one was one at Dodgeville, in the same town. Since then they have come into possession of the Grant Mill, at Providence; the Manchaug, in Sutton, Mass.; the Whiterock, at Westerly, R. I.; the Clinton, at Woonsocket; the Jackson and Fiskville, at Scituate; and the Readville, at Hyde Park, Mass.; and they own almost 200,000 spindles in the town of Warwick, in six large mills. These last-named mills were a part of the Sprague estate, and were purchased from the trustee of the estate in 1883. At present the Knights own in all more than 400,000 spindles, of which about 300,000 are in Rhode Island and the rest in Massachusetts.

If two boys beginning life as common hands in a cotton mill can acquire and build up in their own names such a business as that, without harm to any public interest, who shall say that a corporation, with shareholders scattered all over the country, could not do the same thing? The wagon works at South Bend, Ind., date back to a little blacksmith shop on the edge of the woods at Ashland, Ohio, where my colleague, the senior Senator from Iowa, as a boy used to watch the old father of the Studebaker Brothers working at his forge, shoeing horses, and setting tires on the tumble-down vehicles of that frontier village of fifty years ago.

To-day his children and grandchildren control a corporation with millions of capital, occupying 90 acres of land, with 30 substantial buildings, in which thousands of well-paid American workmen are turning out carriages fit for the luxury of kings, and wagons which are helping to do the work of the whole world in peace and bringing up the rear of all its armies in war. That looks to me like an evolution of business, and I have sought in vain for somebody to fix the exact point between that little blacksmith shop yonder on the edge of the woods, at Ashland, and these palaces of modern American industry at which the safety of society requires the intervention of the politicians.

The union of two or more establishments in one, whether effected by one of them buying the others out or by a third absorbing them all would be, so far as the public is concerned, a matter of comparative indifference if the obligations left outstanding in the process corresponded, in an economic sense, to the combined assets; and the most flagrant offense of many existing trust organizations lies in the fact that they have appeared in the market place bearing the burden of fictitious liabilities supported by an inventory of imaginary property. Comparatively few of them have added anything to the actual capital which they found invested or made a substantial contribution to the working instrumentalities of industry. They have as a rule taken over plants already in operation, and in many cases encumbered them in advance so far beyond their value as to make the days of the combination few and full of trouble.

Take for illustration the Corn Products Company, commonly called the glucose trust, which in 1902 combined the starch trust with nearly every important glucose factory in the country. The entire property involved could have been duplicated in the most modern form for less than one-third of the capitalization of the trust. To make a dividend on its capital stock and to pay interest upon the bonded indebtedness of the constituent companies required earnings so excessive that immediately new companies, attracted by the apparent profits of the business, entered the field with improved machinery, and the result is thus stated in a recent issue of the Kansas City Journal:

Instead of the trust being able to undersell and drive them out they were able to undersell the trust. A single independent company with a capital of three millions is, it is said, grinding one-third as much goods as the trust with its capitalization of seventy-six millions.

We ought to be very slow to believe that we are living in a world where a modest investment of actual money will have anything to fear from such stuff as dreams like that are made of. Such a situation, whatever the college professors may say, is not an evolution of business, it is the lineal successor of South Sea bubbles and Mississippi schemes, and this aspect of the case is worth a careful attention because it is a description of nine out of ten of the lesser combinations and of more than one of the seven great industrial trusts.

The success of such enterprises is rendered all the more precarious, because this structural weakness necessarily communicates itself to every subsequent financial activity of the corporation. If the process of forming the organization originated no excess of stock, no promoter would undertake it, and unless the stock issue was accompanied by a cunning prospectus of dividends, the public gullible, as it is past all belief, would not absorb the securities. Thus it has happened that hardly one of the industrial trusts, even if it understood what the laws of sound finance are, has been in a position to obey them. It has been for a generation regarded as axiomatic that of the earnings of a railroad system a sum approaching one-half must be used to improve the property and to fortify its resources against the evil day.

On that principle the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has won the confidence of the financial world, and what has been true of it has been in a large measure true also of the well-managed railroad properties East and West. But a railroad system, for reasons arising out of the very character of its traffic, is not subject to those sudden fluctuations which are likely to beset an ordinary industrial enterprise. The Midvale Steel Company worked wisely toward a dividend basis for ten years before it paid one. How, then, shall these shackly creations of the market place, with half their capitalization representing nothing beyond the pleasures of hope, bound by every consideration of good faith to produce dividends from the start whether the stock represents anything or not, observe the precautions everywhere known to be essential for the preservation of their tangible assets and for that reinforcement of their reserves which is required to meet the exigencies of their business?

That they have not been able to do so, or at least that they have not done so, is shown by the fact that the average sum carried to the reserve account, taking all the trusts whose reports are accessible to the public together, is only 3.2 per cent of the outstanding capital, the permanent value of which it is intended to secure. Andrew Carnegie did not become the ironmaster of the world by fixing prices and limiting output in times of depression. He followed the fortunes of the market place even though in the last ten years of his business life he had to wade through balance sheets fluctuating all the way from three to forty millions of dollars.

But he had been so busy for thirty years making steel that he had never had time to study the art of manufacturing stocks; and if the corporation blanketed by his mortgage goes on losing its business for the sake of maintaining prices and starving its surplus under the necessity of paying dividends whether they are earned or not, it requires no prophetic foresight to see the miraculous little Scotchman returning in his old age to Pittsburg to rescue the imperiled steel properties of the United States.

These specific infirmities of genesis and of management would, in my humble opinion, gradually drag down the whole structure of the trust system without the aid of any act of Congress or the assistance of any political convention even if no outside influences were at work to undermine their foundations. But there is an outside influence at work, very ancient and not yet obsolete, which has steadily tended to weaken their hold upon the market place, which a good many people thought they were about to control, and that is the law of competition.

It is a favorite Democratic theory that the trusts depend for their life upon the effect of the tariff law in mitigating the pressure of foreign competition upon the industries which employ our own labor, and that, therefore, free trade in trust-made goods would kill the trusts. I confess that I do not see how any man can contemplate such a remedy without at least a grave apprehension that disasters may be invited worse than the disease. I never hear that simple Democratic panacea for the trusts recommended without thinking of the advertising card of a traveling doctor, which I picked up the other day in a country hotel. It reads:

O. P. Vanderman, specialist in rheumatism and neuralgia. A sure cure in its most aggravated form.

I do not deny that free trade may be counted upon with reasonable certainty to cripple, if not to destroy, almost any industry which it comes in contact with. The whole world seems to understand that, for as we enter upon our Presidential campaign the ministers of the English Crown, awakened by the decay of the ancient crafts of the Kingdom, are preparing an appeal to the people for a revision of those sacred acts of Parliament which in the course of fifty years have left the Empire commercially dismembered and the home market itself glutted by the remnant sales of other nations.

Therefore, even if it could be shown that a trust has absorbed any given field of production, I would not counsel my countrymen to turn that field over to foreign countries for the purpose of exterminating that trust, for even if American capital has been so managed as to forfeit the consideration of our laws, the employment and wages of American labor have still their claim upon the attention and good will of our Government.

There is only one sense in which the protective tariff can be held responsible for the trusts, and that is, that without the protective tariff there would have been fewer industries to combine and therefore fewer combinations. Further than that, the protective tariff has created the conditions, that unprecedented circulation of money in the hands of the people, without which the trust securities of our times could not have been even partly digested. So uniformly has the approach of our tariff law to the basis of free trade been accompanied by national poverty that its acceptance now might safely be relied upon to induce conditions which would effectually discourage the trust movement.

Seeing, then, that the protective tariff is responsible for the existence of some of the industries which have been organized into trusts and at the same time for the reintroduction among our people of the general use of money, without which these venturesome exploits of modern business would not have attracted the attention of either Doctor Jekyll, the banker, or Mr. Hyde, the capper, is it asking too much of the American people that they inquire with some care into that remedy for the abuses of the trust system which the protective tariff provides? For while it is true that out of the abundance of capital incident to these seven years of plenty the opportunity of the trust organizer has arisen, it is also true that this very abundance of capital in search of employment, offering itself in a market place where the law of competition has been fighting for its life, has completely vindicated the whole doctrine of protection.

Let us contrast for a moment the remedy of free trade with the remedy of protection in the case of some well-known American trusts. We may take up for example the National Salt Company, and I refer to that particularly because in the present session of Congress an absurd effort has been made to repeat the folly of 1894 by putting salt on the free list. At that time no salt trust existed in the United States, so that the Wilson bill simply expressed the unrestrained animosity of the Democratic party against a particular industry. Salt had been protected in the United States for over a century at a rate as high as it was then and often at a much higher rate. The industry dealt with one of the universal resources of the country, a resource which our fathers had sense enough to foster from the first act of the First Congress.

The difficulty which they had in getting salt to use, on account of disturbed conditions abroad, was the very thing which drew from Mr. Jefferson that manly and patriotic message confessing the mistake of his Administration in departing from the counsel of his cotemporaries in dealing with questions of trade, which was quoted very eloquently on this floor during the Cuban reciprocity debate by the junior Senator from Colorado. It appeared to Jefferson and to everybody who afterwards examined the question, whatever his politics, from that time down to the second election of Mr. Cleveland, that this industry could not be abandoned without damage to the public welfare. It remained for that Congress, dominated by the very men who are now inventing reassuring phrases of conservatism and prudence, with which to mask the battery of Democratic malice against the protective tariff system, to discover the necessity of putting salt on the free list.

They did it at a time when half the salt works of the country were idle and their managers turning frantically in all directions to sell their product in a stricken and helpless market place. They were not after the salt trust then; they were pursuing the salt industry; and so far as free importation could accomplish that result, they turned our market over, its capital and its labor alike, to the only salt trust then existing in the world—the British Salt Union, with its principal office in Liverpool—a trust which had monopolized the entire salt production of Great Britain. It may be that the Congress of 1894 knew more about the subject than all their predecessors and all those who have come after them, but I can not recollect anything in connection with their achievements that is likely to give currency to that view of their case.

The National Salt Company, commonly called the salt trust, was organized in the spring of 1899, and within a year had sufficiently monopolized the salt business of the country east of the Rocky Mountains to claim in its published reports 94 per cent of the entire output of evaporated salt. It started out with a capital stock of $12,000,000, five millions preferred, seven millions common, all of it very damp. It had to do business in a market place protected by a tariff law which for over a century had operated to invite independent capital to embark in the industry; and the question the trust had to face was this: Would its size, its pretensions to monopoly, the mere swagger of its intoxicated capital prevent others from seeking the profits of that business.

In a sense the National Salt Company put the protective tariff system on trial. Less than five years have passed, but already the theory of protection has come out of that trial perfectly vindicated by the unanswerable finding of the market place. The salt industry does not require an exorbitant investment to carry it on with success; money sufficient to bore a hole in the ground and buy fuel enough to pump the water and heat it is all that is needed to start a salt factory wherever salt deposits are found. Is it any wonder, therefore, that the National Salt Company should have been compelled to add a new department to its business? A purchasing agent, to buy off competition; a performance so continuous that according to the decree of the court of equity that listened to their tale of woe in the State which gave them their charter, it reduced them from apparent solvency to unquestionable bankruptcy within a few months—liabilities one million five hundred thousand, assets three hundred thousand barrels of wet salt.

To complete this comedy of mismanagement, we are not surprised to see new promoters and new syndicates coming forward to gather up the remains, under the high-sounding name of "International Salt Company," with vague plans and specifications for bringing under one control the salt works of Canada, Italy, Spain, and Great Britain as well as of our own country. It is astounding that a sane man could be found, after the Lord has graciously located a reservoir of salt under the whole earth and an ocean of brine all around it, to give countenance to a proposition to supply the world with such a necessity of life, under the auspices of an international corporation which starts out with a bogus capital of $42,000,000, a large portion of it set apart for the profit of an underwriting syndicate, and its visible resources preempted by an indebtedness of $12,000,000, with neither a provision nor a prospect for even a preliminary payment of interest.

If there is room in our market place for a project like that why did the Post-Office Department issue a fraud order against the amiable clergyman who boiled a bushel of pumpkin seeds and began a profitable business career by advertising that while in the Holy Land he had secured a limited number of the seeds of the gourd mentioned in Sacred Writ and was willing to distribute them to devout persons at a dollar apiece? [Laughter.]

I will refer again, by your permission, to the glass industry, a field of production which in the last few years has illustrated at once the facility with which trust combinations could be formed and at the same time the ease with which outside capital digs away their foundations and anticipates their final collapse.

Here is an industry which in all its departments is literally the child of the protective tariff. It could not exist at all on the basis of free trade, so that it may be admitted that if its products had been put upon the free list all the glass trusts would have disappeared, and with them nearly every vestige of the industry in the United States. If the tariff was the mother of the glass trusts, it has been a very careless and unnatural mother, for its standing invitation to American capital to embark in the business has never been withdrawn and has been so generally accepted that every effort to keep it in the hands of trusts has already ended in unmistakable failure. An honored member of this body, a successful manufacturer of glassware, operating a factory once connected with the United States Glass Company, permits me to call him as a witness to the swift descent of that institution from the domination of the trade to the premonitory symptoms of final dissolution. He managed to get his factory out of it in good time, and has had the satisfaction, as an independent manufacturer, of making good profits while the shareholders of the trust have waited in vain for their dividends.

Mr. SCOTT. They got one the other day, the first since 1891.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not begrudge it; since 1891 one dividend. A fate almost equally interesting has undertaken the other trusts that undertook to dip into the glassware business in the United States.

Notably the National Glass Company, organized in 1899 with nineteen plants. Its vital ailment, according to a recent writer, was a sort of corpulence which prevented the trust from coping with less top-heavy competition, the same disability that qualifies the speed of a fat man in a foot race. And so, after five years, its constituent companies have fallen back, not under the anti-trust act but under the law of gravitation, to their original form, and the water-soaked millions of its capital have been sorrowfully laid away where they will have a chance to dry out.

Exactly the same tragedy has overtaken the American Window Glass Company. It capitalized the prospects of twenty-two separate plants in October, 1899, at $17,000,000 and assumed control of 90 per cent of the total window-glass product of the country. It went on the theory apparently that it could depend upon the size of its capital to overawe the market place and gain for it the profits of a self-sufficient monopoly.

The trust took every precaution to strengthen its position. They overlooked only one thing, and that is that this is a world that does not allow for any length of time a dividend on $17,000,000 for the transaction of a volume of business for which $5,000,000 in cash will furnish equal facilities. If independent investors ever did tremble before the trust, they certainly never took counsel of their fears, for within five years the business has slipped out of the hands of the American Window Glass Company until now instead of making 90 per cent and conceding to others 10, it makes only 10 per cent, and has been compelled to concede the other 90 to irreverent outsiders, who, under the broad invitation of the protective tariff, have felt free to embark in the business.

I have already alluded to the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company, which totally monopolized that product as early as 1895. To-day they have less than 50 per cent of the productive capacity of the country, and while shortsighted men—some of them, I regret to say, Republicans—have been calling upon Congress to put plate glass upon the free list, the Dingley tariff law has called into existence seven well-equipped plate glass plants outside the trust and the magnificent new establishment now building at Kane, Pa., will make eight. Now I submit that if it is possible, as I have shown, to kill the glass trusts and at the same time to keep the industry alive and well, why should any man whose head is still doing business on its own account, seek to wipe them out by handing over their orders to our friends in Belgium, Germany, Austria, France, and England?

It would be easy if I could properly encroach on the time of the Senate to take up one after another the case of more than a score of once hopeful and enthusiastic trust combinations and study the behavior of the protective tariff in the fight which has been going on in the American market place against every unreasonable restraint of trade. I can, however, cover the whole ground by inserting a study of industrial statistics made for the end of the year summary by Mr. Luther Conant, jr., financial editor of the New York Journal of Commerce. This writer says:

It was evident by the end of 1902 that a decided check had been given to the industrial consolidation movement, and during the past year the organization of these so-called "trusts" was restricted to a total which appears insignificant by comparison with the returns of preceding years.

The pronounced halt in this consolidation of industrial properties during the year 1903 may be appreciated from the fact that from a total capitalization of more than $2,800,000,000 in 1901—this including the $1,400,000,000 Steel Trust—there has been a drop in the year now ending to less than $430,000,000, this figure including a $100,000,000 increase in the authorized capital of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. These figures include only mergers and not miscellaneous new companies organized during the year, a summary of the capitalization of which is given separately. Following are figures of consolidations for a series of years:

INDUSTRIAL CONSOLIDATIONS.

	Stock.		Bonds.
	Preferred.	Common.
1903	$107,276,000	$266,350,000	$52,250,000
1902	273,638,900	622,158,300	226,348,000
1901	888,950,000	1,349,950,000	566,575,000
1900	180,800,000	560,595,000	203,800,000
1899	759,100,000	1,674,450,000	229,895,000
Total five years	2,209,824,900	4,473,503,300	1,278,868,000

Following is a summary of the capitalization of new companies:

OTHER COMPANIES.

	Rivals for consolidations.	Miscellaneous companies.
1903	$105,610,000	$1,208,322,000
1902	244,800,000	1,292,011,550
1901	173,650,000	979,900,000
1900	63,800,000	948,875,000
Total four years	587,860,000	4,429,108,550

What do these figures mean? They write the doom of the speculative trust system; they mean that an actual dollar is more than a match for an imaginary one—that the modest unobtrusive coinage of the realm has nothing to dread from the free and unlimited coinage of the air. Already the market place is strewn with the remains of arrogant institutions which five years ago pushed honest men off the sidewalks as they opened their books for the accommodation of the restless and buoyant throngs. Take up your newspaper, and if you read carefully you will hardly find a day in which the obituary of some trust is not printed in fine type and narrow space, which occupied the whole page with its prospectus and the announcement of its birth.

Glance at the proceedings of the courts and watch the lawyers picking the bones of corporations that five years ago were ostentatiously giving tips to investors with half-defined ambitions to own the earth. It is the 1st of January. What is the governor of New Jersey doing yonder at Trenton? He is crossing off the books of that thrifty and hospitable Commonwealth the names of scores of preposterous consolidations, illustrating all types of mental and moral hallucination—thrusting them out into a cold world for the nonpayment of dues.

Here is a partial list of failed industrial enterprises, at one time colossal in their proportions, already admitted to the hospital for disabled trusts, undergoing the most difficult operations known to the surgery of the street:

The Malt trust, 80 plants, with a total capital of $24,000,000.

The General Asphalt Company, 20 plants, with a capital of $31,000,000.

The International Salt Company, 28 plants, with a capital of $42,000,000, valued in the market at $7,000,000.

The New England Cotton Yarn Company, with 9 plants and a total capital of $17,230,000.

The United States Cotton Duck Corporation, with 21 plants and a capital of $26,100,000.

The Phosphate Trust, with 111 plants and a total capital of $57,000,000.

The realty trust, with 7 plants and a total capital of $66,000,000, valued in the market at $16,000,000.

The shipbuilding trust, with nine plants and a total capital of $79,851,000, valued in the market all the way from $13,000,000 down to nothing; not to mention a score of others whose chance of recovery is too small to attract the interest of the overworked doctors of high finance. It is not necessary to speak harshly of the men who organized them and it can do no good to express our sympathy for the credulous multitudes who went broke on them. "Let them alone. They be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind" do not the Scriptures expressly admonish us that "both shall fall into the ditch?" It will do us no harm either to step for a moment inside the gates of our new national cemetery dedicated to the memory of dead trusts; its boundaries are large, and while it is only partly occupied, its gates, as General Harrison used to say about the gates of Castle Garden, never swing outward.

I do not pretend to have read all the inscriptions on the tombstones, and if I were disposed I could add the names of a good many once animated institutions whose graves are already dug if their friends were only willing to quit sitting up with them.

Here are some of the trusts which are definitely known to be dead and gone:

This is only the advance guard of the innumerable caravan which moves to that mysterious realm where the small and the great, the millions and the billions, meet at last on equal terms. Open the Wall Street Journal for October 26, 1903, and read for yourselves the bloodless verdict of the market place against the modern American trust system. I will print the article in full as an appendix to my remarks. It indicates the present lost condition of 100 corporations whose stocks are dealt in on the New York Exchange, taking no account of those which are too little or too feeble to make their way from the curb to the headquarters.

It shows a shrinkage in these better-class shares of nearly two thousand millions of dollars. That is to say, a loss of more than 43 per cent of their advertised value. Is it any wonder that even the best of the industrial shares are under suspicion, since the public discovered that with conditions exceptionally favorable less than 50 per cent of the total trust capitalization has ever paid any dividend at all? When stocks which have never failed to make a show of 7 per cent per annum settle down between 50 and 60 cents on the dollar, what is likely to become of the miscellaneous assortment of speculative investments which have never been able to draw a full breath in their lives?

What is the significance of an evaporation of values like that? Evaporations of values did I say? Revelation of values rather; progressive revelation, clouded and bewildered somewhat by the jockeying of the stock exchange; revelation moving gradually toward that daylight of fact and truth which shall shortly make it plain that the only dollar entitled to a dividend in the American market place and the only dollar which in the long run will have a dividend is the dollar actually put in. Can any man believe that the business community, which in 1896 fought for its life against a proposal to manufacture its standard coin out of material valued everywhere throughout the world at 50 cents, will allow itself now to be smothered under an infinite flutter of picturesque paper certificates?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will suspend for one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. House bill 14416, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that may be informally laid aside until my colleague shall have finished his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the bill may be temporarily laid aside that his colleague may conclude his speech. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, we will quit talking one day about the conflict between capital and labor, for we all join in the hope that they are on the way toward a better understanding, even toward a treaty of permanent peace. But there is a conflict in which there can be no truce—the conflict between capital and capitalization—the earnings and the savings of labor against the coalition of the promoters and the engravers. We do not need to call on the Old World to take the fight off of our hands. Independent American enterprise is equal to the strategy of our commercial defense.

A victory over the trusts won by enlisting the armies of the aliens against them is not an American victory. Such a victory would prostrate our market place in inconceivable disaster, in the midst of which labor and capital would suffer a common affliction. The victory which we seek—the only victory that can be of any value to the industrious millions of our people—is the victory of our own capital, fighting its battle under the protection of our own laws and sharing the fruits of its achievements with our own market place.

The experience through which we are passing has not, of course, been without its depressing effect upon business and commerce. But if the prosperity of our people were an artificial thing—if the American market place were not founded upon a rock—how could it have stood when these winds blew and these rains descended and these floods came?

The process of stripping the uniform from the militia captains of industry and dressing them up in citizens' clothes has not been entirely unattended with inconvenience, but looking at the whole country together the reconquest of the market place by the reserve corps of American energy, that indefinable moral quality which claims the prerogative of signing its own name, has already justified the faith which our people from the beginning have had in the industrial system founded by our fathers. In its allegiance to that system the Republican party has not faltered for a moment. If there were doubts and fears and anxieties while the underwriting syndicates strutted their brief day upon the stage of our affairs they are all gone now.

We approach this Presidential campaign united in the bonds of our historic faith. We did not originate it; we inherited it from our fathers. When William McKinley died he left it as a rich legacy to us who followed him in the great triumphs of his public life. It was not a discovery of his. He got it from Abraham Lincoln, who got it from Henry Clay, who got it from Alexander Hamilton, who got it from Benjamin Franklin; so that our title is clear, our abstract perfect, without lien or incumbrance, running straight back to the original sources of American common sense.

If changes are required to bring the tariff law of 1897 into a more perfect relation to the industrial progress of the American people, we propose to make them ourselves, whenever in our judgment the work can be undertaken without doing more harm than good; but we shall not consent to any change which surrenders the rights of American labor or the advantage which every man who makes a bona fide investment of his money in the United States ought to have over his competitors in other lands. We look forward with hope to the progress of our commerce from the river to the ends of the earth, but we do not forget that the statistics of our foreign trade have brought the most encouragement to our people in those exact periods when our own producers have been most perfectly guarded against the injurious approach of the outside world, and that the law of 1897 for the first time in our history has yielded us a favorable balance of our trade in manufactured goods.

We do not underestimate the value of the foreign market; but knowing how small it is, how small it always must be compared to the volume of our domestic business, we refuse bargain that away, or put it in jeopardy for the sake of a dim and nebulous prospect of recouping our losses in the markets of the world.

We follow a leader who has enforced the laws of the land without favor and without fear, who has dared to utter the convictions that are in him with absolute reliance upon the integrity of his country and the good will of his countrymen. We do not know what the vicissitudes of the struggle may be; we do not presume to lift the veil of the future; but we are persuaded that the American people will not turn their backs upon the national policies for which Theodore Roosevelt stands, nor upon the lofty ideals of public duty with which, whatever his political fortunes may be, his name will be associated in the history of the United States.

THE SHRINKAGE IN 100 INDUSTRIALS—AMOUNTS TO $1,753,959,793 FROM THE HIGH PRICES OF THE BOOM.

The leading industrial stocks of the country show a shrinkage of $1,753,959,793 from the high prices of the boom to the recent low. The market value of 100 industrial stocks at the highest price at which each has sold during the past three years was $4,090,047,450, and at the recent low price it was $2,336,087,657, a loss in market value of 43.4 per cent.

The total capitalization of these stocks is $3,693,410,837.

We present below a table comprising the highest price at which each of 100 industrials has sold during the past three years, with the recent low, and showing the total shrinkage on each. Not one of the stocks which we have taken show a shrinkage of less than $1,000,000.

a $25 par. b $50 par.

In United States Steel preferred we have allowed for the amount converted into bonds. We have not included the $10,000,000 each of common and preferred issued by the Massachusetts Gas companies last January. We have taken one-half of the shrinkage of Anaconda, as Amalgamated holds one-half of the Anaconda stock, and the shrinkage of that appears in the figures for Amalgamated.

The shrinkage in Colorado Fuel and Iron, Calumet and Hecla, Anaconda, International Power, Standard Oil, and Westingh use is in each case more than the par value of the capital stock, and in Amalgamated and United Gas Improvement nearly equal to it.

The $20,000,000 preferred and $25,000,000 common of United States Shipbuilding are not included owing to the fact that there has never been any market for them.

It has been estimated that the capitalization of the industrial corporations of the United States, aside from gas and electric companies, is $8,000,000,000. All of these have sustained some shrinkage, but the percentage would probably not be as large on the whole number as it is on those we have taken above, because the stocks we have not included are largely inactive, more closely held, and less subject to general market influences.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Iowa may remain on the table; and I give notice that on Friday morning, after the routine business, I shall take occasion to submit some remarks on the tariff, reciprocity, and allied subjects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the resolution to which the Senator from Iowa addressed himself may lie on the table. The Chair hears no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14416) making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the pending amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to have the question before the Senate stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment of the committee relating to the annex building, on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned yesterday I was about to make a few remarks—not a speech—on the pending amendment.

I am not an architect nor an expert in any way in that line, but I remember well that on my first visit to Washington some forty years ago I was profoundly impressed with the beauty of this Capitol, and also with the stately appearance and commodious arrangement of the Patent Office. The Smithsonian Institution was also attractive. Those were beautiful buildings, and they were admired and have ever since been admired by strangers who have come here.

The architecture of the buildings constructed since that time has not been favorably commented on by strangers nor does it favorably impress many of us. There are one or two exceptions, notably the Library building. The Printing Office building in its line, though it is not an architectural beauty, is well adapted to its purposes. The Library building attracts the attention of all who come here. But this Capitol above all is commented upon by every stranger. Although I am nor familiar with the architecture of the Old World to any great extent, I am quite familiar with the architecture of Paris and London, and they have nothing there that pleases me as much as this Capitol, and I have heard foreigners make the same remark.

There may be American architects who are equal to those who existed prior to the civil war; there may be those in the country who are superior to them, but they have not appeared in this capital as a rule. The buildings that have been erected here are apologized for by the citizens. They apologize for your new post-office building, for your War, State, and Navy Department building, and you will find that American citizens of taste will be apologizing for them.

Now, I do not want anybody to apologize for any mutilation of the east front of this Capitol. I have heard it universally admired, and I want to know the architect who is to do this work before I vote to have it done.

I am heartily in favor of the new building for the accommodation of the Senate, though I shall not be here to enjoy it and there are not many Senators now here who will enjoy it. Many of them will be gone when the building is completed, but it is a duty, I think, to provide for the business of the Senate. Our accommodations are now cramped and inconvenient. You are putting up magnificent buildings all over the country elsewhere; and the accommodations outside of Washington for doing official business are generally superior to the accommodations here for the Senate.

This annex building ought to be erected, but it ought not to be made a condition that if we erect this building, which is necessary for the business of the country, we shall take any chances for a modern architect to mutilate the east front of the Capitol.

In what the artists who have constructed buildings here have generally done I do not say has been the case all over the country, for it is not true, I know, because there are many fine buildings all over the country; but the artists here appear to have had an insanity of originality, and they conceived the most fantastic things in the world, particularly the State, War, and Navy Department building.

I hope there will not be any committal to the destruction of the beauty of the east front of the Capitol, and in voting for this amendment I shall vote for it with the understanding that we are not committed to that project. I hope it will not be done. I hope the good sense of Congress will come in to preserve all there is of grandeur and beauty in the architecture of the Capitol of the nation. Every building put up should be for all time. It should be enduring. It should be constructed after models—and there are plenty of them—which endure through all the ages of history in different parts of the world. In Rome and other places you have these models; but with the modern departure, with the insanity of originality, the work is always deprecated as soon as it is done.

I hope that this new building will be erected; that it will be a stately building which will be a credit to this nation, as this Capitol is a credit to this nation, and that not only our own citizens will be proud of it, but that foreigners who come here may admire it.

I trust there will not be any experiment made which would disfigure this building or any other building that we may erect. Let us have a monumental building, erected for all time, not to be torn down, or something which is to last only a year, but let it be a handsome building. The House of Representatives I hope will have a fine building at their end of the Capitol, which will comport with the beauty of the architecture of this Capitol, and that the two buildings which are projected may add to the beauty, the grandeur, and the permanency of the capital of the nation.

I shall vote for this amendment with the distinct understanding that there will be no vandals or no modern architects insane with inventions of new things wicked enough to try to experiment with the east front of this Capitol.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, undoubtedly the question now before the Senate has been sufficiently debated to enable every Senator to fully understand the issue. I feel as though I ought to apologize for detaining the Senate, even for a few moments, in protracting the discussion. Nevertheless, I desire to add a little to the sum of what has been said.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] remarked on yesterday that at the beginning of his present term of service he was consigned—I think that was the proper word—consigned to the basement of the Maltby Building, and that the room or apartment furnished him was so inadequate, if not unwholesome, that he declined to occupy it and provided for his use quarters elsewhere at his own expense. My experience in one respect is the opposite to that of the Senator from Colorado. He was placed in the cellar of that building, while I have been put into the garret.

When I first came to the Senate, about a year ago, to attend the called session held immediately after the adjournment of the Fifty-seventh Congress, by the considerate courtesy of the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Committee on Rules of the Senate I was given two rooms in the fifth story of the Maltby Building. When I examined them, Mr. President, I ventured to enter a modest protest against the assignment. I do not criticise the Sergeant-at-Arms or the members of the Committee on Rules nor blame them in the least, for I am sure they did the very best they could. They told me they had done so, and being, like Brutus, honorable men, and, like Washington, most veracious men, I knew their statements were absolutely correct. I am confident they did the best they could, and I wish here now to acknowledge my sense of appreciative obligation to the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, for the courtesy he extended me at that time, the use of his committee room during the vacation and until better accommodations could be provided. Later, at the beginning of the present session, a third room, about the size of the others, was added to the two rooms I already had. Formerly this room had been used as a storeroom or lumber room. Those three rooms constitute my office suite.

That Senators may understand how entirely inadequate these apartments are to accommodate the uses for which they are intended, I might call attention to one circumstance occurring but the other day. Six of my constituents were here on business with Congress of great importance to them and to the locality which they came to represent. Those six gentlemen came to my committee rooms or offices to consult with me about the business they were here to look after. I was not able to seat them in the room which I personally occupy; it was not large enough, and so I was obliged to seat two of my visitors in the adjoining room occupied by my clerk, and we communicated with each other through the open doorway. I have had more than one experience of that kind.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill now before the Senate, and other Senators have spoken of the necessity of ample quarters for the use of Senators, and have spoken of the necessity of the use of books by a legislator in preparing himself for the duties he has to discharge. I have some hundreds of books which I brought with me, and which I often have use for, but I have no place to put them, Mr. President. I could not store them in those rooms, much less arrange them for convenient use.

The rooms are poorly ventilated and poorly lighted. Besides the doors, which communicate with the hall leading to the elevator, the rooms have one window each, looking out upon a blank wall 30 feet away, a part of the adjoining wing running back from the central building. The prospect is cheerless and the surroundings dispiriting.

The furnishings are poor, but I make no special complaint of that. I am five stories above the street. The elevator does not run after 6 o'clock in the evening nor on Sunday nor after the final adjournment of Congress. So if I have occasion to go to those rooms after 6 o'clock in the evening or on Sunday—as it may sometimes occur, not often, but it might—or after the Congress adjourns, I must climb five flights of stairs when I go in and descend them when I go out.

There is some little compensation for these inconveniences. I am located, happily, next to the bath room and also immediately adjoining the window, from which I could make my exit to the fire escape if occasion required.

I have not detailed this story to relate a tale of woe or to excite sympathy, for I ask no sympathy, but I maintain that a representative of a great State, because of his representative character, if for no other reason, is entitled to better accommodations and better surroundings than those I am being compelled to put up with. There are other Senators in the Maltby Building little if any better provided for than I am. This I know. They feel about it as strongly, some of them perhaps even more strongly, than I, if I can judge by what I have heard them say.

Mr. President, there are Senators who have excellent quarters in the Capitol and elsewhere, who have every convenience and comfort afforded them; their surroundings are pleasant, congenial, and conducive to good thought and to good work. I do not complain of that; I am glad of it; but I insist there ought to be a nearer approach to equality in the accommodations afforded Senators who are entitled to seats on this floor as the representatives of equal States.

I shall vote for the amendment to construct this new building, and also for that part of the amendment which provides for a commission to examine into the question of extending the east front of the Capitol; but I am addressing myself now especially to the new building.

My good friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] thinks that $3,000,000 is too much money to expend for this proposed building. It may be so. If an adequate building can be constructed for a less sum, it goes without saying that it should be done. It may not be going too far to indulge the hope that the entire appropriation would not be used if found to be unnecessary; but I believe, sir, that when we construct a public building here at the capital for the uses of the Congress or of the executive or judicial departments it should be ornate, massive, and imposing, but, above all, it should be adequate and well adapted to the uses for which it is intended. With all due deference to the good judgment of the Senator from Arksansas, I doubt whether a less sum than $3,000,000 can purchase the site and erect such a building as ought to be constructed for this purpose.

I shall not hesitate to cast my vote for the amendment, but if that were all I had to say I would not have detained the Senate to say it. It will take some years at best under the most favorable auspices to erect this building and have it ready for use. In the meantime I desire to submit to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa, and to other Senators whose voices are potent here, whether some provision ought not to be temporarily made for the accommodation of Senators situated as I tell you I am and as I know others are. That is the special purpose for which I arose. Aside from the question of convenience involved, the question of safety to life is involved, and I believe, Mr. President, that an amendment ought to be made to the amendment now pending, providing that the Sergeant-at-Arms, or some other officer under the direction of the Committee on Rules, shall secure some additional office rooms to be disposed of equitably and properly for the accommodation of Senators whose present quarters are so inadequate. I shall not offer such an amendment. I desire merely to suggest it to the Committee on Appropriations and to ask the members of that committee to give it consideration.

Mr. HALE. I would say to the Senator that I agree with him fully about that, but it would not do to complicate it with this provision. We can put such a provision as the one to which the Senator refers either on this bill or on the general deficiency bill as a separate proposition. As I understand the Senator, he thinks that provision for additional rooms should not await the construction of this new building, but that it should be made at once. Is not that the Senator's idea?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Well, that as an independent proposition can be put on as an amendment either to this bill or to the deficiency appropriation bill when it comes up. I agree with the Senator that there is some need for something of that kind.

Mr. STONE. I am glad to hear the Senator so express himself. It is immaterial to me on what bill a provision of that kind may go. I have suggested it simply for the thoughtful consideration of Senators who are in control of these appropriations and who are especially influential here in determining matters of this character.

Mr. President, I think I have said all I care to or need to say.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, there are two questions to be determined by the Senate—one as to whether or not the proposed extension of the Capitol will improve the Capitol architecturally, and the other the question of accommodations for Senators. I imagine, if it is determined that the extension of the Capitol will improve it architecturally, then it would be very desirable, if possible, to include in that extension the accommodations necessary for Senators; but if it is determined that the extension will not improve the Capitol architecturally, then the office building becomes a necessity. In the event that both are done, an expenditure of five million and a half dollars or six million dollars is possible. In the event that the extension of the Capitol only is sufficient to accommodate Senators with offices, an expenditure not exceeding two million and a half dollars is possible.

It seems to me that we ought to have the report of experts upon this question, and upon both of these questions, before we conclude anything; that we should have first the report of the architects and of this commission as to whether or not the Capitol will be improved in architecture by the proposed extension, and, second, as to whether or not that extension can be so made as to accommodate Senators, for if their report is favorable as regards both of these contentions, we will save an expenditure of at least $3,000,000 and we will have secured, to a higher degree than the construction of both buildings contemplates, the convenience of Senators.

As to the necessities of Senators, there are forty-three Senators to be provided for, and we will assume that they require in all between sixty and seventy rooms. Would it not be possible in this extension, if it is determined upon, to include such accommodations, assuming that the House of Representatives, in view of the very large and expensive building that they are proposing to put up for the accommodation of their Members, may yield a part of the space to which they are entitled, and possibly a part of the space which they now occupy?

It is admitted that this new building to be erected for the House of Representatives will meet all their demands. It can be so constructed as to permit them to withdraw from a part of the space which they now occupy; it certainly can be so constructed as to do away with the necessity of their claiming the additional space to which they may be entitled, and if by so doing an expenditure of $3,000,000 can be saved and the greater convenience of Senators can be secured, it seems to me a very desirable thing to accomplish.

We have, then, forty-three Senators requiring between sixty and seventy rooms. What possibility is there of our securing that number of rooms? Mr. Walter, the former Architect of the Capitol, has prepared two plans for the extension of the east front of the Capitol, one involving the addition of about sixty-six rooms and the other the addition of thirty-three rooms.

If the extension providing for sixty-six rooms is made, and the House of Representatives waives its rights to its one-half, those sixty-six rooms will accommodate the Senators who now need additional accommodations. Another plan prepared by Mr. Walter, providing for an extension only of the middle half of the present main or central building of the Capitol, would involve an addition of only thirty-three rooms. That number would not, of course, be sufficient for the Senators now demanding additional accommodations. But if the House would agree to surrender to the Senate the committee rooms which it now has in the western front, formerly occupied by the Congressional Library, substituting for those rooms rooms that it can construct in the new building, we would have twenty-six additional rooms, which, added to thirty secured by the smaller extension contemplated by Mr. Walter, would make fifty-six rooms for the accommodation of forty-three Senators.

Now, it does seem to me that as yet we have not had plans prepared which were designed to cover both questions—the question of architecture and the question of additional accommodations. At all events, we have not had the aid of eminent architects in this direction. No one to-day knows what the product of their work may be. They may be able to present to us a plan for the extension of the Capitol which will satisfy us architecturally and give us all the additional rooms which we require. An arrangement may possibly be made with the House of Representatives by which they will permit us to occupy a part of the space to which they are entitled, and in that event the construction of the office building will be entirely done away.

I assume that every Senator upon this floor would prefer to be in the Capitol building rather than in the office building, for the nearest point to the office building will be 300 feet distant, and only a few of the Senators can be accommodated in the corner nearest the Capitol. With the extension of the building it means that many Senators will occupy offices from four to five hundred feet distant from the Senate Chamber, and necessarily they will take a great deal of time in going up and down in the elevators and through the tunnel in order to attend to their duties here. I assume that if we can cover the question of the proper architectural development of the Capitol and at the same time the question of the convenience of Senators, we will content ourselves with one construction and one expenditure instead of two.

Now, what is the sensible and businesslike thing to do under these conditions? It seems to me we ought to authorize this commission, consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to employ, as the Senate amendment contemplates, these three eminent architects, for the purpose not only of preparing plans for the extension of the Capitol, but also for preparing plans for this office building and presenting them to us in the alternative, with their recommendation, first, as to whether the plans for the extension of the Capitol would improve or impair its architectural appearance; second, if the contention be determined in favor of the improvement of its architectural appearance, whether the extension can be so made as to furnish Senators with the necessary accommodations; and, third, if not, plans for a suitable office building.

All this can be presented to us at the same time in December next, and we can determine these questions intelligently. As it is we are proposing now immediately to order the construction of the office building, and yet the plans presented by these architects may demonstrate to our satisfaction that we can secure sufficient accommodations in the Capitol building.

It seems to me we should have the whole question of the accommodation of Senators as well as the question of the architectural effect submitted to these trained architects, who are accustomed to just such problems and who will work them out in the most satisfactory way to us, and that we should simply authorize the plans for both of these structures to be submitted for our approval in December next, so that we can then determine whether we shall enter upon both of these enterprises or whether we shall confine ourselves simply to one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment providing for an annex for the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the roll is called, will the Chair please state what we are about to vote upon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations providing for the construction of an annex for the benefit and use of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], whom I do not see present. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote; so I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. QUARLES. I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and withhold my vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], who is absent. I am informed that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], who is absent, and that the Senator from Oregon has voted. Therefore I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], so that he will stand paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ELKINS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. I am informed that he is favorable to this proposition, and therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK]; but as there is no party division on this question, and after consultation with his colleague, I will vote.

Mr. BATE. That is correct.

Mr. SPOONER. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 10, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next passed-over amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, line 11, after the word "modifications," it is proposed to strike out "of the interior;" in line 15, after the letter "a," to strike out:

commission, composed of three Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

And insert:

joint commission, composed of three Senators, namely, Hon. GEORGE P. WETMORE, of Rhode Island, Hon. RUSSELL A. ALGER, of Michigan, and Hon. ARTHUR P. GORMAN, of Maryland, and three Members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, namely, Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois, Hon. WILLIAM P. HEPBURN, of Iowa, and Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON, of Tennessee; and said commission shall employ three eminent architects jointly to prepare designs, working plans, details, and specifications, and to supervise the work, under the direction of the said commission and with its approval: Provided, That said commission shall report to Congress such designs, working plans, details, and specifications as it shall recommend, which shall be approved by Congress before any further action is taken toward the construction of said extension.

On page 84, line 10, after the word "grounds," to insert "subject to the approval of Congress as aforesaid;" in line 17, after the word "such," to strike out "professional and personal;" and in line 20, after the word "commission," to strike out "hereby created;" so as to make the clause read:

Toward the extension and completion of the Capitol building in accordance with the original plans therefor by the late Thomas U. Walter, with such modifications as may be found necessary or advantageous, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $500,000; and the said construction shall be made under the direction of a joint commission composed of three Senators, namely, Hon. GEORGE P. WETMORE, of Rhode Island; Hon. RUSSELL A. ALGER, of Michigan, and Hon. ARTHUR P. GORMAN, of Maryland, and three members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, namely, Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois; Hon. WILLIAM P. HEPBURN, of Iowa, and Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON, of Tennessee; and said commission shall employ three eminent architects jointly to prepare designs, working plans, details, and specifications, and to supervise the work, under the direction of the said commission and with its approval: Provided, That said commission shall report to Congress such designs, working plans, details, and specifications as it shall recommend, which shall be approved by Congress before any further action is taken toward the construction of said extension; and the superintendent of the Capitol building and grounds, subject to the approval of Congress as aforesaid, under the direction and supervision of said commission, is authorized to make contracts for said construction after proper advertisements and the reception of bids within a total sum not exceeding $2,500,000, including the sum herein appropriated, and said superintendent, subject to the direction and approval of said commission, shall employ such services in connection with said work as may be necessary. Any vacancy occurring by resignation or otherwise in the membership of the commission shall be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House, according as the vacancy occurs in the Senate or House representation on said commission.

Mr. ALLISON. After consultation with Senators respecting this provision I am authorized to offer some amendments to the amendment. After the word "commission," in line 12, page 84, I move to strike out "is authorized to make" and insert "whenever it shall be authorized by Congress shall conduct the making of all contracts."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, line 12, after the word "commission," it is proposed to strike out the words "is authorized to make" and insert "whenever it shall be authorized by Congress shall conduct the making of all."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 14, page 84, after the word "bids," I move to strike out the limitation "within a total sum not exceeding $2,500,000, including the sum herein appropriated."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "therewith," in line 13 on page 83, I move to strike out "five hundred" and insert "seventy-five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, line 13, after the word "therewith," it is proposed to strike out "five hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read "$75,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word about this amendment before it passes from the consideration of the Senate, as respects the propriety and necessity of making this extension.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] the other day expressed his total dissent from the proposition to make this extension, and in the debate it has been stated that this has not the approval of the architects of the country. As I understand the history of the Capitol, the architect who has been so fittingly and appropriately spoken of as having erected here the most beautiful Capitol building in the world, has put himself on record over and over again as to the necessity of the extension of the east front of the Capitol and made several plans, as was stated a few moments ago by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], for that construction.

Some of them received his absolute approval, and some of them were condemned by him. There is, as I understand, one plan made by him that he strongly urged upon Congress, which provided for an extension projecting 67 feet from the center of the building. The present plan, a model of which is in the Rotunda, projects, as I understand, a hundred and eight feet.

Now, that I may not be mistaken, I wish to place upon record what Mr. Walter stated upon the subject. I wish to say another thing, and that is that when these two wings were placed where they are now it was in mind, as I think all the circumstances indicate and show, that this projection was necessary for the completion of this great building.

The construction of the two wings was undertaken and this wing, I believe, was completed in 1859, the House wing having been first completed. But before this wing was completed finally a project was started for the tearing down and rebuilding of the Dome. So this beautiful façade, which is mentioned as having been spoken of by distinguished Senators in 1855, was a façade with a low dome, and the Dome that we now have was authorized, I believe, in 1857. It was completed in 1865 and cost $1,000,000 in round numbers. It was greatly enlarged as regards its height and also in the details of its construction. This was built under the architectural management and direction of Mr. Walter.

Now I want to read what Mr. Walter said in 1864, after the Dome was completed or about the time of its completion and long after these wings were constructed.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator, when he reads what Mr. Walter said, will tell us to which of the plans that Mr. Walter had prepared he was addressing himself. I understand that the only one to which he ever gave his adherence was the 67-foot plan. Is it not the fact that that is the only plan which it can be shown he really approved?

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps it is the only plan, but I am not quite ready to state that it is the only plan. But I know he disapproved of one plan which extended the eastern front 275 feet.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that that plan was simply an extension, leaving the front as it is now.

Mr. ALLISON. No; the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. TELLER. Very nearly, if not quite, it was.

Mr. ALLISON. What I wish to avoid is the idea that anybody here, as far as I know, has approved any plan. This amendment especially rejects the idea of any approved plan by providing for three eminent architects who shall take up this question, and what I was saying respecting Mr. Walter was with regard to the importance of a projection there in order to perfect the eastern façade of this building.

Now I desire to read what Mr. Walter said in 1864:

Now that the new Dome—

Which was built after these two wings were built.

Now that the new Dome and the wings of the Capitol are approaching completion—

The figure at the top of the Dome had not then been placed—it must be apparent to everyone—

He seemed to have some ideas then—it must be apparent to everyone that the extension of the Senate building on the east to the line of the new wing becomes an architectural necessity. I have therefore prepared plans for thus completing the work in harmony with what has already been done, and will place them in the Capitol for future reference.

I do not suppose, nor would I recommend, that any action be taken by Congress in reference to such an improvement until the war is ended and the financial condition of the country becomes settled and prosperous; but, inasmuch as it is my purpose to retire from these works as soon as the Dome is finished, I deem it incumbent upon me to leave upon record my views as to their final completion.

I will not read other extracts from Mr. Walter upon this subject, and I only read this one to show that at the time these great improvements were made with regard to the two wings of the Capitol and the tearing down of the old Dome and its reconstruction, at a cost of a million dollars, Mr. Walter, the architect, whose work has received the approval of the generations that have followed him, stated that he desired to put on record his conviction that the Capitol would not be finished until there was an extension of the central portion of it.

Therefore, when we are dealing with this question, we are not dealing with the models; we are not dealing with any specific plan; we are dealing with eminent architects, whose duty it is made to be, and whose pleasure it will be, I have no doubt, to ransack the records of the Capitol with respect to the projected plans of Mr. Walter, and so harmonize those plans with whatever plans they may have, as to details, as to make the Capitol what Mr. Walter and everybody else in 1864 believed was necessary to secure its completion. So the Capitol now, nearly forty years after the close of the war which he said would retard its necessary improvement, stands as it stood at the close of the war, when Mr. Walter wrote the statement which he put upon record in the archives of our country.

Therefore it is that I for one, whilst I approve the construction of this addition because I believe it to be necessary, also believe, and every study I make and every moment of reflection I give to the matter adds to the strength of my judgment, that upon every account we should enter, as we propose in this amendment to enter, upon the extension of the east front of the Capitol.

Mr. TELLER. I speak more from memory than anything else, but I am morally certain that Mr. Walter never suggested such a proposition as is now proposed, by building out a couple hundred feet, or nearly that.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will permit me, such a proposition is not proposed in this debate by anyone here, and we have struck from the bill the idea that this projection is approved by the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I am not contending that the provision proposes anything of that kind; it did not as it came from the House. I said yesterday, and I said once before, there is authority to say that there might be a slight addition in order to put the building in better harmony than it is now. My discussion of the matter yesterday was upon the theory that we are to make this extension with a view to the rooms that will be furnished. Mr. Walter's idea was to put it in harmony with the new Dome, which everybody knows was slightly out of proportion.

Mr. ALLISON. And to furnish twenty-two additional rooms.

Mr. TELLER. It might produce that effect, but the demand that has been made here for twenty-five years has been not for twenty-two rooms, but for three or four times that number, an absolutely different thing from what Mr. Walter ever proposed, and from what I believe any architect will ever propose, whether three or five or whatever number may be employed.

I do not myself contend that there is anything in this provision which requires us to adopt that plan or any other. I do not know what plan the architects may propose, but they ought to know beforehand whether they are to provide a plan simply to complete, as one may say, the harmony of the building or whether they are to have a plan that will give us 100 rooms or 75 rooms or whatever the number may be. They can not do that unless they know for what purpose it is to be done. If it is to complete the Capitol, that is one thing; if it is to furnish rooms, that is another. We ought to settle that by adopting the provision to construct the additional building. Then there will be no claim for any more rooms.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, as the Senator from Iowa has intimated that at the time of the construction of the two additional wings it was in contemplation to extend the center of the Capitol, I wish to read, without taking much time, an extract from the fundamental report which was made by the Committee on Buildings and Grounds at that time, signed by Jefferson Davis and John H. Clarke, February 17, 1851. I will read only the pertinent extracts that bear on the real question in controversy here, and that is whether we shall do anything now that commits Congress to the invasion of the symmetry and beauty of the eastern façade. The report says:

To answer the requirements of Congress without impairing the beauty, disturbing the harmony, or diminishing the effect of the noble structure our fathers erected was a problem of extreme perplexity.

Later along they are more definitive and state, dealing with this question of the two wings and the center, that—

The architectural character of the present edifice, though it does not invite, is nevertheless such as to admit of additions—and it is believed that they may be made not only to harmonize with it, but to heighten its effect. In the plan proposed it has been studiously sought to avoid interference with the original design. The beautiful east façade will be preserved and rendered not less imposing by the stronger light and shadow given by the proposed projections.

That is, the wings—

I might talk until the darkness of evening frowned upon us and I could not so clearly express the desire recognized by the great men who had in charge the extension of the Capitol in no way to mar or disturb or deform the beautiful east façade.

Nothing at that time was intimated to the contrary; and come what will, I will not vote for any proposition which commits the Senate now to a project of extension that in the end will result in what was so studiously excluded and so eloquently deprecated when the original plans were carried out for the two wings.

I do not agree with the Senator from Iowa, who in his appeal to the Senate when he took his seat declared that the amendments as he had at last proposed them committed us to the extension of the eastern front of the Capitol. If I believed that, I would without hesitation move to strike out the whole proposition of the House and leave the matter clean as it is and the front as it stands before us.

Mr. CLAPP. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask the Senator if it does not mean something, if it does not foreshadow some action by Congress, why leave it in the bill at all?

Mr. HALE. That is a very strong argument, undoubtedly. As the Senator from Iowa saw fit to declare when he sat down that he would expect that the work of extension should go on, it certainly will be put in our faces that he has committed himself to that proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I said only what I believe, that whatever we may do here to-day or ten years from now, what Mr. Walter said in 1864 was an absolute necessity will be agreed to at some time by some Congress. I did not deal at all with the specific provision of the bill.

Mr. HALE. The Senate has voted almost unanimously for what would be a great, noble building for the convenience of Senators. It ought to have large, spacious rooms for committees and all accommodations for all Senators, not only for those who have now good committee rooms here, but those who have poor committee rooms and those who have none. There are only a few committees that have good rooms. I could not pick out more than twenty-five Senators who have committee rooms such as they ought to have in this Capitol. If I were a Senator outside of that number, I would much rather have good, ample rooms, two rooms to each Senator, in the building beyond in which to hold committee meetings.

As has been suggested, and I had the same idea in my mind, the building ought to be made large enough so that as a part of it there shall be a moderate auditorium to be used whenever great hearing are held. At every session there are hearings upon great popular questions where a committee room is entirely inadequate, and there ought to be provision in this new building for just such a room as that. But the commission can settle all that.

Mr. President, I am glad the vote has been so nearly unanimous; and having generously consented to the House proposition for their building, I hope that no rude hand will be laid by any Representative of the House of Representatives upon this project for an additional building that has received the almost unanimous approval of the Senate.

Now, with that building going on, I ask Senators to consider another thing. If you enter upon any project to change the eastern front and rebuild the Capitol there and carry it out, it is no slight matter that every one of us who frequents the Capitol in our duty, every citizen who comes to Washington and seeks to view the great National Capitol is to be met with piles of brick and masonry and the sound of the hammer, and all the work that is going on is to be in our ears and is to visit our vision for three or four years. That we could abide if everybody was in favor of it, but it is a serious thing to shut out the Capitol from the view of the American people, as would be done for that time, and to submit ourselves to all of the inconvenience and interruption that will go on for three or four years.

Therefore, if we accept this provision, I for one accept it upon the condition that I am not in any way committed to any extension hereafter. The discussion has developed the sentiment of the Senate in favor of this eastern front. I do not believe any extension ought to be agreed to, unless it be some immaterial extension that will carry out the foundation of the Dome for a comparatively small space. But to enlarge it in any way, to fill up that middle space and destroy the beauty of the recession of the center from the sides, no matter what we do here, I will not in any way be committed to, and I shall reserve to myself for one the right to oppose any plan of that, no matter what architects recommend it, no matter what committee recommends it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The east front has stood as it is now for upward of fifty years. What emergency is there demanding that this question of an extension should be taken up now, particularly immediately following a vote of the Senate to proceed with an expenditure involving from three to four million dollars for the construction of a building for the accommodation of Senators?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that there is none. I should be glad if this matter was left and nothing whatever done, except the construction of a new building for the Senate, as the House is going on with its building. I should be very glad if that could be done.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator from Maine yesterday to say that it is the desire of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States that that tribunal shall continue to sit in the Capitol.

Mr. HALE. No; the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] made that statement.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Iowa said so, and I think the Senator from Maine said so, as he will see if he will look at his remarks.

Mr. HALE. I asked the Senator from Iowa if the Supreme Court were finding any fault with their present quarters, which I understand they are not, if they are not interfered with by having the light shut out.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand that the justices of the Supreme Court very much prefer that the sessions of that court shall continue to be held in the Capitol. I do not think any justice of the Supreme Court has ever been quoted as having said that the members of that court regard the accommodations now offered to that tribunal as in any wise adequate. Not one of those justices has a room apart from the conference room in which they meet to confer about decisions.

Now, is it the Senator's notion that that condition should perpetually exist? Leaving out the question of committee rooms, leaving out the accommodation of Senators, let it be assumed that that will be provided for by this new building, do we not owe something to the Supreme Court of the United States in respect to giving them adequate accommodations? There is hardly a capitol, there is not a new capitol, in any State which does not give to the judges of the supreme court infinitely better accommodations than are given under the Dome of this Capitol to the highest judicial tribunal in the country. Is it the Senator's notion that there may be some slight change in the east front of the Capitol which would accommodate the Supreme Court and yet not in any way mar the façade?

Mr. HALE. I do not think we can make any projection to the east there large enough to hold the Supreme Court without marring the present plan. I do not think that can be done.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not referring to a new Supreme Court chamber. I think the justices of the Supreme Court would prefer to continue to occupy the present court room. It is a historic room, where great justices have sat, celebrated causes have been decided, and where great lawyers have won renown. I think the justices are satisfied with that room as a court room. But could not a change be made which would furnish them some additional accommodations without, in the Senator's view, impairing the beauty of the façade?

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator he has introduced a new element. I am not troubled about the Supreme Court. They may not have all the room they want. They may be well content where they are. They do not want to be disturbed. They do not want to be walled up. The Chief Justice told me the other day that this plan of extension would wall them up. I will say to the Senator that comes up only indirectly. I do not think in the future the question of what shall be done with the Supreme Court, or whether they shall remain in the Capitol, is so much a question for us as that at some not remote day Congress ought to provide for the erection of a great court building on the corresponding corner to the Library to match that building in architecture, not match it in expense in the interior, which shall contain not only the Supreme Court, with rooms for all its judges and its reporters, but shall contain all the courts of the District of Columbia, except, of course, the municipal courts, which should be downtown, and the frequenters of which should not be let loose upon a building here.

It ought to contain rooms for all forms of arbitration, for all hearings of joint commissions appointed by this Government and other governments, and it should be a complete temple of justice. No Supreme Court judge ought to insist, when we furnish such accommodation as that so near here, that they should be kept here in a legislative building. The courts have grown in their extent and ramifications as Congress has done. Their business has increased greatly. There are several great tribunals here in Washington that are now put around in different rented buildings that ought to be placed in the great building which some day we will erect there.

But, Mr. President, that question is not involved here. The great question that is involved here now is whether we shall commit ourselves to anything that hereafter it will be urged we have done, and that Congress has embarked in the scheme of extending the east front of the Capitol and marring or destroying or changing the present feature. That is the great question.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will yield, I wish to say one word in regard to the report of Mr. Jefferson Davis and Mr. Clarke, made in 1851, read by the Senator from Maine. That report was made before either wing of the Capitol was completed. I doubt whether it was then even in the model form we now have here; it was on paper. I am not surprised that they spoke of the beauty and symmetry of the building created by our forefathers and theirs. But it must also be remembered that the two wings were not completed until 1859, and that in 1857 that Capitol, so distinguished for beauty and symmetry, was torn to pieces and a new Dome was constructed, which cost a million dollars. It must also be remembered that when that new Dome was constructed the most distinguished architect of our country at this or any other period of its history stated that it was a necessity to build a new façade on the east front.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am very sorry indeed that the distinguished Senator from Iowa favors this present appropriation, whatever may be thought to be desirable in the future. I would very much prefer, as we have entered upon the construction, or, rather, adopted an amendment looking to the construction of a Senate building, that we at least get under way as to that, and I can see no reason for haste in the matter of the Capitol extension. It may be found that this proposal for the extension of the east front will not be pressed in the future. If so, it would seem unfortunate that $75,000 should be expended for that which will, in such case, result in nothing of a practical character.

Ordinarily I am more than content to follow the lead of the distinguished Senator from Iowa as to any matter relating to the appropriation of money, and whenever I am in doubt I feel very safe if I vote on the same side with himself on such matters. It is therefore with very much hesitation that I make a suggestion as to anything in a matter where he has such a pronounced opinion.

For myself, Mr. President, I am like the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in my unalterable opposition to the extension of the east front. I am opposed to it on two grounds. One of them has been discussed here at length. I have already suggested the view which I have upon it. As it stands it is now recognized as one of the beautiful façades in all the world. I am opposed to any experimentation with it.

But without pursuing that reason, which has been so fully discussed, there is another thought which I have not heard suggested or commented upon here. With individuals asocittion, in the sentiment thus engendered, amounts to a great deal in their personal lives and relations; but in the case of a nation patriotic associations are not mere matters of sentiment. They are matters of great value in the inspiration which they give to the people, and in the pride and the patriotism which they incite and which they strengthen.

Sir, is there a Senator present, is there a citizen of the United States, who can for a moment ignore the value of the associations which will ever belong to the east front of this Capitol? Should such associations be destroyed except in the presence of some overpowering and controlling necessity? What is the value of the mere matter of a little extra room when weighed in the balance with the associations connected with that classical and beautiful front? For more than three-quarters of a century—I do not recall the exact date since its renovation after the war of 1812—but certainly for more than three-quarters of a century that east front has been connected with great historic occasions. How many Presidents have stood there and taken upon themselves the great oath before they assumed the duties and functions of the great office?

Mr. President, if it could be demonstrated—which I do not think it ever could be to my satisfaction—that the east front could, from an architectural standpoint, be improved, as a citizen of the United States and as a Senator, standing here charged with guarding the institutions of this country and with the preservation of the great traditions and the historic memories of this country, I would never consent that all those associations should be destroyed merely for some slight convenience or imagined architectural advantage, if such advantage could be demonstrated as the result.

Mr. President, from my boyhood I have, as a visitor, been familiar with the White House, and I can recall when as a boy I entered the portals of that building with all its historic associations pressing upon me as I stood there, awe-stricken with the recollections as I had read of what had occurred there and of those great men who had served the Government there. As I grew from boyhood to manhood the feeling of veneration that I had for that building was intensified. It was not lessened when, after coming here in an official capacity, I became more familiar with that building; but I confess that I never now enter those portals without a feeling of sadness because those associations are all destroyed and gone. I would not know, if I were blindfolded and carried inside the White House and the bandage then removed from my eyes, that I was inside the historic building. Every association connected with it has been destroyed by the changes which have been made. It may be that it has been improved, and I am not prepared to say that it has not been, but what are those improvements to be compared in value to the associations which clustered around that edifice, sacred to every lover of his country?

Mr. President, are we to have a repetition of that here? Are all the associations of more than three-quarters of a century to be destroyed ruthlessly, either to give additional room or to enter upon an experiment of increased architectural beauty? No one can be more considerate than I am of the requirements and needs and comforts of the Supreme Court judges. I desire that they shall have a building which shall be ample and commodious, and suitable in its proportions to the dignity of their office, and commensurate with their office; and it is perfectly competent to give them that in another building.

I sympathize with the sentiment of the Supreme Court which makes them desire to remain, so far as their court room is concerned, in this building; and I shall be always glad to see them remain in their present room, because of its associations, in order that, while it has been devoted to other uses than it was in the days when the great Senators made it vocal with their eloquence, it may still be devoted to the high purposes of the highest court, not only in this country, but, as we fondly think, of the whole world. But it is entirely consistent with their remaining in that historic chamber as a court room that they should have another building, ample in all respects in the way of offices, to the needs of themselves and of the officers and employees of the court.

Mr. President, I say this—and I confess that I have a great deal of feeling upon the subject—because, while it may be true, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] says, that the adoption of this particular clause as proposed to be amended may not commit us to the construction of the proposed extension of the east front, it is a step in that direction. While I never propose to go in that direction any further than I am compelled, I do not desire that anything shall be done now which shall encourage others to do so.

For myself, I will not undertake to ask the Senate to eliminate this feature from this bill, but I should be more than delighted to see it done to-day; and if we can not go to the extent of eliminating it entirely, if we must consider the action of the other House at least in some degree, let us limit it to the extent of an appointment of this commission to examine and make a report, and eliminate from it this feature which proposes that plans and estimates shall be made at a cost of $75,000, which, aside from the influence which it may exert and which I deprecate, may be money entirely and uselessly thrown away.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think that Senators who are opposed to any interference with the east front of the Capitol, to any change of it, or to any extension of it, ought to think twice before they vote for this paragraph as amended in the Senate. I understand amendments have been made.

I stated yesterday, without much thought on the subject, that it seemed to me that the enactment of this legislation would commit the Senate to some extension, to some alteration, of the east front of the Capitol, and it was suggested by other Senators about me that it would not at all. But I can not look at it in any other way. If the amendments proposed by the Senate should be agreed to by the other House; if they should take the Senate amendments, what should we then have? We should have a provision in a law which would appropriate—

Toward the extension and completion of the Capitol building, in accordance with the original plans therefor by the late Thomas U. Walter, with such modifications as may be found necessary or advantageous—

That would be law agreed to by both Houses. Who will say that that would not in all honor bind the Senate? The Senators who do not think it ought to be done, think that they would find some way out of such a law having been passed by being able not to accept any plan that should be brought here; but that is a disingenuous way, I submit, of trying to oppose such a proposition. If Senators are opposed to the extension of the east front of the Capitol, it seems to me that they ought to vote to strike all this matter from the bill. Certainly Senators do not intend to vote for this provision with the reservation in their minds that they will not vote for any plan that can be brought in here, and that as the Senate will not agree to any plan that the commission can present to the Senate, therefore there will be no extension of the east front of the Capitol.

To my mind, the appointment of a commission to get plans—and such a commission as this is to secure plans, to be presented to Congress, for the extension of the east front of the Capitol—does certainly in honor commit Congress to the building of such an extension. The language of the provision is very strong. I know that it has been amended somewhat, so I may not perhaps read it just as it will leave the Senate, but I have already spoken of the fact that we are making an appropriation, not to get plans, but—

Toward the extension and completion of the Capitol building, in accordance with the original plans therefor by the late Thomas U. Walter, with such modifications as may be found necessary or advantageous.

That is what we make this appropriation for in language; and then we have this provision:

Provided, That said commission shall report to Congress such designs, working plans, details, and specifications as it shall recommend, which shall be approved by Congress before any further action is taken toward the construction of said extension.

But it is contemplated that this commission, composed of these distinguished gentlemen, are going to act in good faith, that they are not going to try to get plans which will not be accepted, but they are going to try to get plans that will be accepted; and when that commission agrees upon a plan the chances are very great that that plan will be accepted by Congress. Then this provision is made:

And the superintendent of the Capitol building and grounds, subject to the approval of Congress as aforesaid, under the direction and supervision of said commission, is authorized to make contracts for said construction after proper advertisements and the reception of bids within a total sum not exceeding $2,500,000.

Mr. President, with that legislation passed, how can Senators stand up in the Senate and say, "We are not in favor of the extension of the east front of the Capitol; we never were in favor of it, and when we agreed to this legislation we did so for the purpose of defeating it." No Senator can take that position. He must say that he agreed to this legislation for the purpose of having this thing done, provided only the commission should get plans which were satisfactory to the majority of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

I am not going to vote, Mr. President, for any of this legislation, if I can help myself, because I do not wish now to be committed to the extension of the east front of the Capitol.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, have the committee amendments been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not been. The Chair, if there be no objection, will treat all the amendments to this one clause relating to the extension of the Capitol as one amendment. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Those I understand to be, Mr. President, the amendments to the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And to the text.

Mr. BACON. The amendments to the amendment as proposed by the committee. The committee proposed amendments, and the chairman of the committee has proposed amendments to those amendments.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And to the text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments offered by the chairman of the committee were agreed to as they were offered, and the Chair stated that there were several other amendments that were contained in the bill which were treated, without objection, as one amendment, because they had one purpose.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me before he begins, I simply desire that the clause as it has thus been amended be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Toward the extension and completion of the Capitol building in accordance with the original plans therefor by the late Thomas U. Walter, with such modifications as may be found necessary or advantageous, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $75,000; and the said construction shall be made under the direction of a joint commission composed of three Senators, namely, Hon. GEORGE P. WETMORE, of Rhode Island; Hon. RUSSELL A. ALGER, of Michigan, and Hon. ARTHUR P. GORMAN, of Maryland, and three Members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, namely, Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois; Hon. WILLIAM P. HEPBURN, of Iowa, and Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON, of Tennessee; and said commission shall employ three eminent architects jointly to prepare designs, working plans, details, and specifications, and to supervise the work, under the direction of the said commission and with its approval: Provided, That said commission shall report to Congress such designs, working plans, details, and specifications as it shall recommend, which shall be approved by Congress before any further action is taken toward the construction of said extension; and the superintendent of the Capitol building and grounds, subject to the approval of Congress as aforesaid, under the direction and supervision of said commission, whenever it shall be authorized by Congress, shall conduct the making of all contracts for said construction after proper advertisements and the reception of bids, and said superintendent, subject to the direction and approval of said commission, shall employ such services in connection with said work as may be necessary. Any vacancy occurring by resignation or otherwise in the membership of the commission shall be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House, according as the vacancy occurs in the Senate or House representation on said commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has declared the amendments agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I move to strike out the matter just read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ALLISON. On that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DANIEL. If I were to vote now, Mr. President, upon the question as to whether or not we should provide for the extension of the east front of the Capitol according to Mr. Walter's plans, I would vote "no." I would cast that vote because I am not at all satisfied that it would be a wise thing to do from an architectural standpoint. At the same time, Mr. President, I do not feel unwilling to have that question considered by the most competent architects that can be consulted.

It seems to have been the ideal of Mr. Walter's plan that the actuality of the Capitol should conform to the design which has descended from him. I say "seems," because there is some dispute on that point. I do not myself feel satisfied as to my own judgment upon the subject, because I am not expert and my mind has not been trained to the contemplation of such subjects.

With respect to the building for the Senate, I concur in all the remarks which were made on yesterday by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. Very little could be said that was not covered by his reasoning in favor of that structure. It is a minor observation, and yet it is one that need not be overlooked in considering this matter, that to construct a building similar to the Library on the east wing of the Capitol would conform this plateau to a systematic scheme and would produce that harmony in the perspective which is to be desired in so permanent a matter as the Capitol of the United States and its grounds.

There are stronger reasons, however, to be drawn in defense of that proposed Senate building from the present and certainly from the future necessities of the Government of the United States. I do not think the people of this country have at any time been in any mood to criticise or object to any reasonable expenditure which was aimed at and confined to the purposes of good government.

It is essential to the purposes of good government that those who make the laws of this mighty and ever-increasing nation should have every appliance and tool necessary to enlighten their judgment and to facilitate their work.

There is no branch of the Government which more needs all the facilities of workmanship than the Senate of the United States. More of the work of this Government is concentrated in the responsibility of one man in the Senate of the United States than in any other department of the Government. This arises from two circumstances respecting the structure of the Senate. First, that it is legislative, that it is executive, and that it is also judicial in the functions attributed to it by the Constitution of the United States. The second feature from which this condition arises is the fact that the Senate is composed of a very small number of men, two from each State, of whatever population, each representing very large and always increasing constituencies.

When a Congressional district enlarges its population, it and adjoining territory may be readjusted and supplemented by additional districts, which are entitled to additional Representatives; but whether the population which is behind two Senators of the United States be a few hundred thousand or five million men the number of representatives in the Senate is not increased, although much greater work is accumulated upon the person who is designated under the Constitution to perform it. As matters stand today, the average number of people represented by a Senator is nearly a million. In the State of New York it is two and one-half millions. There are already some Senators in this body who, out of the very necessity of their accumulated work, have to employ two or three and sometimes four clerks to give due answer and attention to their constituents and to the multifarious matters with which they must deal.

Matters which arise here, Mr. President, and in the daily transaction of the business of the United States are but in a slight measure matters that can be postponed. The great majority of them must be dealt with instantly; and in order that they may be dealt with efficiently the individual who has the responsibility of dealing with them should have every facility of room and help at hand to make his work efficient for the purposes of good government.

This Capitol is congested and crowded. There are many Senators occupying committee rooms and office rooms in this Capitol who, were they in personal control of the matter, would not occupy such rooms a single day. I do not state it as a matter of complaint, for every attention that is becoming has been shown me personally, and the best has been done that conditions permit; but in the room of the Capitol which I was forced to occupy year after year one was obliged to leave early in the afternoon lest pneumonia should be incurred by its dampness.

This Senate is not equipped as it ought to be equipped for the thorough and speedy transaction of its business, and I do not believe that a dollar of the public money of the people of the United States could be more wisely, more justly or more economically expended than in furnishing every Senator in this body with ample room, and with every convenience for the easy and efficient transaction of the multifarious business which is intrusted to his hands.

So, Mr. President, I have no apprehension whatsoever as to the judgment of the people about the structure for the Senate of a building, magnificent, if you please to call it so, which is proposed to be supplied by act of Congress.

Mr. President, as to this present question, the extension and projection of the east front of the Capitol, I think there is ample room for doubt and for hesitation; and I think the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has shown his accustomed wisdom in not forcing that question to an acute issue at an unripe time.

I would wish that this proposition as it now stands might be a little more amended before the question to strike out is put before the Senate. I do not think that any term ought to be left in that provision which could be justly construed to commit the Senate to one proposition or another about it.

The first word, as was pointed out by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], in this appropriation seems to commit us; and if we adopt the provision as it stands, it is inevitable that it will be argued and contended that Congress has committed itself to the extension of the Capitol according to this plan. This had attracted my attention before the Senator from Connecticut made the point, and I have to suggest a slight amendment which will remove this objection.

Toward the extension and completion of the Capitol building—

"Toward." The appropriation is made to include "each and every purpose connected therewith," as if it were a present payment to be simply credited upon the great scheme and each and every portion of that great scheme; as if, indeed, the framer of this proposition had himself designed, not, indeed, by emphatic and close-cutting terms, to commit the Congress, but to speak as if it were committed, and to furnish argument for the doctrine that it was committed.

It is not as clear-cut and decisive in its terms as a matter of such importance should be. So if the motion to strike out shall be voted down, and I shall vote "nay" on that proposition, I would hope, with the concurrence of the Senator from Iowa, who has conformed his views to the prevailing view of the Senate, that it might still be amended so as to make our present intent undebatable. The Senate should not now commit itself to any proposition concerning the extension of the Capitol, save to have plans prepared and submitted and architects consulted whose views might hereafter be considered.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can move his amendment now before the vote is taken on the motion to strike out.

Mr. DANIEL. I will move to strike out the word "toward," in line 9, page 83, and insert instead of it the words "with a view to considering." If there is no objection, I ask that a vote be taken on the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, page 83, it is proposed to strike out the word "toward" and to insert "with a view to considering;" so as to read:

With a view to considering the extension and completion of the Capitol building, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will be content with that. This sentence now begins "With a view to considering the extension." I hope the Senator——

Mr. DANIEL. I wish simply to make a remark.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought the Senator proposed to offer a further amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I shall content myself on this subject to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. That will end the debate as to whether or not there is here any intent or purpose of committing Congress to this idea.

There is one other subject, apparently foreign to this immediate question, but not disassociated from it with respect to the Capitol and the Senate and adjacent grounds, upon which I wish to say a few words before I sit down.

The Capitol plateau ought to present a harmonious picture to the mind.

As the place of gathering of the Congress of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States, this bit of land on this plateau is one of the seats of the mighty. The people of the United States are proud of the associations of the Capitol, and the whole plateau ought to be made to conform to it in general picturesque aspect.

Mr. President, one great building has been put in front of the south wing of the Capitol, opposite the Hall of the House of Representatives; and it is inevitable that some day another building will be constructed on the Senate east front of the Capitol as a companion piece to the one now constructed facing the House front of the Capitol. It has been suggested, and I have heard Senator after Senator intimate his favor thereof, that there should be constructed, facing the Senate of the United States, a building for the Supreme Court. It does not strike my mind that that is a fitting thing to do.

From the foundation of the Capitol of the United States the Supreme Court has had its seat under the Dome, and it is certainly a just idealism to behold the Supreme Court of the United States sitting as it were between the two Houses of Congress in the Capitol of the United States. If that court were put in a great building opposite to the Senate front of the Capitol, they would be lost in that great building; and if you were to put around them a great many other tribunals or halls or arrangements for other things, you would belittle the ideal of the Supreme Court of the United States. There never will come a day in the history of this country when the Supreme Court, with all of its paraphernalia and appendages of whatever kind, will fill a building similar to the Library building of the United States, placed on the east front of the Senate wing of the Capitol.

But, Mr. President, some public building will go there, and I shall ask to have incorporated in my remarks, for I do not wish to delay the Senate, a letter which I hold in my hand from the Commissioner of Patents, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, respecting the construction of a Patent Office and a Hall of Sciences of the United States.

It has seemed to me that such a building ought to be the companion of the Library building, and that as the theory of all arts and sciences embodied in literature is in the building opposite to the House, so such an exhibit as the United States shall make of the applied arts and sciences exhibited in its inventions should be put in a building on the other side of this plateau.

The people of the United States are the most inventive people on the earth, and the philosophical reason of their great inventiveness may be largely, if not altogether, attributed to the freedom of their institutions. The freest people on earth, and the people who have shown themselves to be the greatest architects of the implements and plans and securities of freedom, have carried their inventiveness into every art and science and have led all the nations, either ancient or modern.

This inventiveness, too, Mr. President, is one of the deepest and strongest of the roots of our prosperity.

The efficient machinery of the American people is one of the great causes of their prosperity, and while laboring men who find their vocations disturbed now and then by the intrusion of labor-saving implements which momentarily disrupt occupations are sometimes arrayed against inventive appliances, invention has been and will ever continue to be the greatest friend of labor that is to be found in the evolutions of civilization. It has put better clothing upon their bodies. It has supplied better food for their table. It has enlarged their mental scope, and it has made the laboring man of the United States the rival in power of any man pursuing any other vocation whatsoever, for as soon as he goes to labor the sciences which assist labor are opened to his mind, and he commences to climb a ladder firmly based upon the earth, rising round by round and in endless continuity farther and farther toward the heavens.

It is a noticeable fact, and I think the Congress of the United States has too long neglected it, that the Patent Office of the United States is one branch of our Government which sustains itself. Nay, more than sustains itself. It pours a surplus annually into the Treasury of the United States, showing the fecundity of our inventive element in the United States. For several sessions of Congress I have had the honor to send each session to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a bill for the purpose of condemning the plateau of ground opposite the eastern face of the Senate and for the purpose of erecting there a Patent Office and Hall of Sciences of the United States. It would prove, in my judgment, the greatest college for the instruction of the practical inventive mind that the world has ever seen.

It is a fact respecting the history of invention that whenever one man is searching for and is about to find some truth of science that has not yet been quite discovered, there are dozens and scores of other men of equal mental development who are pursuing that idea in different channels, and it may be in distant places. A certain invention seems to belong to a certain period in the maturity and development of the average human intellect. At a certain stage in that development a new discovery will be made, and when a new star is discovered in the firmament it may be that a thousand telescopes in places unknown here and there are scanning the heavens and searching for it.

Mr. President, nothing so aids this kind of investigation and this kind of research and this kind of pursuit of an idea not yet quite found as to be able to behold in a single picture before the mind the various stages of evolution and of development which have led up to the last point of discovery. To put it upon a piece of paper does not fulfill the idea, but to see the mechanism and to behold the operation in actual practical working models is the best stimulant to the human mind which wants to take the next step that it is possible for the art and wisdom of man to supply.

For this reason, Mr. President, the great nations of the earth have halls, and we had a great hall in which to display the models of inventions which were patented; and there was no place more often visited and none that attracted more interest than the model room of the Patent Office in Washington. But what is our condition now? The model room of the Patent Office is no longer representative of our work and progress in invention. It has been deliberately neglected by the failure of the Congress to provide the proper means for its extension. We no longer display the models of our ever-increasing inventions. We have no hall in which the finest fruits of the American mind in practical arts can be beheld by our countrymen. But in old garrets and cellars and in junk shops of the United States we are hiding the greatest achievements of the human mind for the empire which invention and practical wisdom will alone give to our country and to our race.

Year after year, Mr. President, with all kinds of iterations and reiterations, the Commissioner of Patents and the Secretary of the Interior have appealed to the Congress of the United States to provide accommodations for that Office. We have acted about it as we have acted about accommodations for other Departments of our Government and as we have sometimes acted with regard to accommodations for ourselves. It is a curious feature of our history, and one I do not know that anyone can fully account for, that, possessing a half continent, with illimitable lands, with "money to burn," as I heard one of our great statesmen say a few weeks ago, though I have never quite been able to rise to so high a view of our financial condition, we have cribbed, cabined, and confined nearly every working agency of the Government of the United States. The War Department, like something that has been strayed or stolen, is wandering down two or three streets in the neighborhood of the War Office.

The Navy Department is struggling about trying to get accommodations in one rented building or another. So with the Interior Department, and so with nearly every great Department of this Government. The new Department of Commerce and Labor is yet without a home. And yet with the land around us rising day after day higher and higher in value, and with a surplus in the Treasury of the United States which is tempting every manner of spoliation, the Congress of the United States hesitates and delays and postpones and postpones. Whenever a proposition comes up to make due, proper, dignified, and necessary accommodations for the Government of the United States we fall into the old Spanish vernacular and say, "to-morrow," "to-morrow."

Mr. President, as the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds feels and is kind enough to express by his countenance approbation of many of the sentiments I have uttered, I hope when the necessary things to be done for the immediate accommodation of our executive and legislative departments have been provided for, he will put forward this neglected bill for the construction—opposite to the Senate face of the Capitol—of a hall for the Patent Office of the United States, which has made its own living, which is to-day granting 30,000 patents a year, five times as many as the German Empire, and that we shall round off this plateau with the greatest college of applied sciences that the world has ever known.

New England, Mr. President, contains the most inventive portion of our population. The great State of Connecticut contains the most inventive people the world has ever known. I hope that her sons, who have led advanced lines all over the world for education and for science, will not be lacking in giving assistance to a proposition which in my humble judgment has more of practical benefit in it to the great masses of the people of the United States than any other which we have commemorated in Washington by any public monument or building whatsoever.

Mr. President, I ask that the letter to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD to accompany my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be printed in the RECORD, to accompany the remarks of the Senator from Virginia.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1903.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I have received by your reference of the 12th instant copy of a bill to provide for the construction of the Patent Office of the United States, including a hall of inventions, and for other purposes (S. 1896), with request for a report thereupon.

The bill in question provides for the erection of a fireproof building for the accommodation of the Patent Office and a hall of inventions east of the Capitol, between East Capitol street and B street north, and between First and Second streets, for the acquisition of the site, and for the preparation of designs for such building, and for the appointment of a commission, to be known as "Commissioners of the Patent Office," to take charge of these matters.

I have the honor to report that in my opinion there is great necessity for an expansion of the present Patent Office of the United States. The business of this Office is growing rapidly, and for the year 1903 the issue of patents will exceed 31,000, the largest in the history of the Office, and the number of applications of all kinds upon which this issue has been made has been about 60,000. The following table, comparing certain elements of the work of this Office for the years 1899 and 1903, will indicate the rapid growth of our work:

Class.	1899.	1903.	Increase.	Per-centage of in-crease.
Receipts	$1,209,554.88	$1,591,251.04	$391,691.16	32.4
Expenditures	$1,148,663.48	$1,423,094.40	$274,430.92	23.9
Applications and caveats filed	41,930	56,023	14,093	33.6
Letters patent, design and re-issue patents granted; and trade-marks, labels, and prints registered	25,404	33,229	7,825	30.8
Printed copies of patents furnished	1,363,971	1,914,249	550,278	40.3
Price received	$49,681.37	$64,907.01	$15,225.64	30.6
Words written in copies of records furnished	13,899,700	18,589,700	4,690,000	33.7
Number of employees	668	722	54	8.0

In the natural growth of this system it is to be expected that each successive year will surpass in volume of work the previous records, even if the system receives no further encouragement than it has in the past; but this patent system is an index, as it is an aid in the industrial development of the United States. If anybody in this country doubts this statement, it does not appear to be doubted by such careful observers as the German Government, who have adopted the examination system, following our example, and who view the protection of inventions as having contributed so largely to the advancement of the arts in this country and to be so valuable in the matter of their own commercial rivalry with us that they are planning an enormous increase in their office.

In fact, last summer, when I was in Berlin, I was shown, at the German imperial patent office, the plans for their new buildings, for which they have already acquired the site, and which are intended to house 2,000 employees. At the present time Germany issues about 6,000 patents a year, against our issue of 31,000 for this year. I had the pleasure of visiting also last summer, in Paris, the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers—an adjunct of the French patent office—and was exceedingly impressed by the extent and beauty of the collection of working models there brought together, illustrating the growth of many arts. Such a collection is of great educational value, and if this Government could have a hall of inventions, including such a set of models, or in many cases working machines, I believe the educational results would justify any reasonable expense.

The object of the patent system is something more than merely to furnish protection to the individual inventor in his invention. It is broadly to aid the arts by disclosing to others new inventions, and the education of the workers in a particular art is the final desirable result of any patent system. For this reason the opportunities to study the arts by using our scientific library, by rapid examination of records of issued patents, and by examination of illustrative models or working machines is of the greatest consequence.

Now, even without looking into the future and without adequate means for the education above referred to, the United States Patent Office to-day is crowded to an extent which greatly interferes with the transaction of its work. The space at present given to its operations is insufficient, and I have had occasion heretofore to call attention to the fact that an extension of space would result in economies in the transaction of our work.

The service of the Patent Office at the present time absolutely requires attention to this matter of extension of space for the purposes of its present business. Without attention to this matter it is difficult to see how the growing business of this office can be transacted at all in a few years of such progress as the office has experienced recently.

The American patent system has been considered by the commercial rivals of this country as having contributed greatly to its rapid progress, and when we see such a rival as Germany, who have taken their inspiration in this matter from us, expanding this system at a rate so rapid that at the present time their list of employees nearly equals ours it is time for friends of the patent system to consider whether we should be willing to see the best expression of this system of protection to inventors in their inventions in the hands of our great commercial rival. It seems to me that it will be a public calamity if our patent system can not be permitted to expand by generous appropriations for this purpose, so that it may retain its present preeminent position among these organs of the governments of the world.

It may be noted that the balance in the Treasury of the United States on account of the patent fund a year ago amounted to $5,488,984.61. This sum of money could be well used for the purposes of this office, and I am of the opinion that it should be used absolutely for such purposes, and without delay. It seems to me that such an expenditure might be considered as insignificant in proportion to the benefits which might be conferred upon the useful arts of this country by its wise expenditure in furtherance of this system. As soon as we look away from the monopoly granted to the individual and consider the records of this office, where nearly 800,000 inventions have been so recorded that they may be studied, the educational value of this work becomes apparent.

I am heartily in sympathy with the purposes of this bill, and hope that it may become a law.

The papers received by your reference are returned herewith.

Very respectfully, yours,

F. I. ALLEN, Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the motion to strike out.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I again announce that I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Maryland, and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

So Mr. FAIRBANKS's motion to strike out the clause was not agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer an amendment to come in on page 84, line 23.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will not be in order until the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I have a few amendments that I desire to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the bill is in the Senate it will be still open to amendment, and then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be in order; but it is not in order as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 83, line 4, after the word "building," I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be obliged to offer that amendment in the Senate. The whole amendment there has been agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. It can not be added to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can not be amended as in Committee of the Whole, but it can be amended when the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then I hope the bill will be reported to the Senate, because I have two or three similar amendments to offer.

Mr. STEWART. Before that is done, I should like to offer an amendment, and I ask the attention of the Senator having charge of the bill. I presume there will be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 104, after line 8, insert:

To enable Providence Hospital to obtain the amount of money necessary to pay the indebtedness incurred in the construction, reconstruction, and completion of the buildings used for hospital purposes on square 704, in the city of Washington, D. C., the directors of said hospital are hereby authorized to raise by mortgage or other incumbrance on the real estate and improvements on said square a sum not to exceed $150,000, which said sum shall be in addition to the $200,000 which was authorized to be raised by the directors of the Providence Hospital by act approved February 6, 1901, and said sums heretofore and hereby authorized shall be a first lien on said real estate and improvements.

Mr. ALLISON. To the general purpose of that amendment I see no objection; but I do not know why the last clause is inserted. I do not know why the mortgage proposed would not be a lien without inserting those words in the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. The parties who were to make the loan were consulted. I inquired for the reason of it, and they said that this language should be added.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I offer an amendment to come in after line 6 on page 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 6, insert:

Building for Bureau of American Republics: For the share of the United States toward the erection of a building to be used as permanent quarters in the city of Washington, D. C., for the International Bureau of American Republics and the Columbus Memorial Library, $71,000.

Mr. ALLISON. "And that it shall be available when the whole sum is properly deposited with the Secretary of State."

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will be modified——

Mr. ALLISON. By adding "when the whole sum of $125,000," which is the aggregate of the appropriation, "shall have been deposited with the Secretary of State."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 6, insert:

Building for Bureau of American Republics: For the share of the United States toward the erection of a building to be used as permanent quarters in the city of Washington, D. C., for the International Bureau of American Republics and the Columbus Memorial Library, $71,000, to become available when the whole sum of $125,000 shall have been deposited with the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I should like to have inserted at this point in the RECORD the message from the President and the accompanying report of the Secretary of State, showing the necessity of the appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be done.

The message and report referred to are as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State looking to the payment of this Government's quota of a fund to be contributed by the governments forming the International Union of American Republics for the erection of a building in the city of Washington for the use of the Bureau of the American Republics.

I approve the recommendations made by the Secretary of State and strongly recommend the matter to the favorable consideration of Congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, December 11, 1903.

The PRESIDENT:

The governing board of the International Union of American Republics, which is composed of the diplomatic representatives of the governments of all the American Republics accredited to the Government of the United States, and the Secretary of State, agreed by a unanimous vote in the regular meeting of January 5, 1903, that it was highly desirable that permanent quarters be provided for the International Bureau of American Republics. This Bureau ever since its creation about thirteen years ago has occupied a rented building, which is now inadequate not only for the clerical force of the Bureau but for the large and ever increasing library which the International Conference of American States at Mexico expressed itself as particularly desirous of seeing augmented and made of more use to the public.

At a subsequent meeting, held on May 23, 1903, it was decided that a sum of not less than $125,000 would be necessary for the purchase of the ground and erection of a building large enough for the purpose in view, and it was suggested that the various States composing the International Union of American Republics should contribute to said fund on the same basis as that now in force between the American Republics for the maintenance of the international bureau.

This decision of the governing board was communicated by the Department of State to the various governments, and the board has since been informed by fifteen of the governments that they will take immediate action to have their specified quotas appropriated by the legislatures and transmitted to the United States. Two of the governments have already paid the full amount of their quotas.

Under the agreement the share of the United States is $71,275.58, and I strongly recommend that Congress be asked to appropriate this sum for the purpose mentioned. It is desirable that the appropriation should be made immediately available, and subject to the order of the Secretary of State.

Considering the profound interest which the Government of the United States has always taken in the promotion of harmony and closer relations with the American States through the International Union of American Republics, and the fact as well that the international bureau, which is the active agency of the Union, is located in the capital of the United States, it would seem that this Government should do more than simply contribute its share toward the building.

I therefore make the further recommendation that Congress be asked to appropriate an additional $50,000 for the purchase of a suitable lot of ground, in proximity to the other public buildings at Washington, on which to erect the building.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN HAY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 9, 1903.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. On page 84, line 19, after the word "necessary," I move to insert——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be obliged to wait until the bill is in the Senate. That paragraph has already been disposed of as in Committee of the Whole, and it is not open to amendment until the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. All right.

Mr. SPOONER. On page 23, line 6, after the word "dollars," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 6, after the word "dollars," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That private messages may, with the consent and authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, be transmitted over any and all telephone lines controlled by the Treasury Department whenever it does not interfere with Government business, at such rates and on such terms and conditions as may from time to time be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the proceeds thereof to be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may enter into agreement with any telephone company by which, in consideration of such company being permitted such use of the Government lines as may not interfere with Government business, the officers and employees of the Treasury Department shall have the use of the line and wire of such company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the bill will now be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any desire to reserve any particular amendment for consideration in the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. The one relating to the extension of the Capitol should be reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reserving the amendment relating to the extension of the Capitol, will the Senate concur in the other amendments?

Mr. HALE. No; the one in relation to the new building is to be reserved.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from Virginia proposes to offer an additional amendment, or it is in order for him to do so now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was simply inquiring whether it is the desire to reserve any of the amendments reported to the Senate. The Chair is informed that it is desired to reserve the amendment in relation to the extension of the Capitol and the amendment in relation to the annex. Both those amendments will be reserved.

Mr. ALLISON. If special reservations are to be made, I wish to reserve one or two other amendments. I think before they are concurred in I should like to offer amendments to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote may be delayed in concurring in all the amendments.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Chair to rule that no amendments can be offered in the Senate except to those which have been previously reserved?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Any that are germane and are in order can be offered in the Senate. The Chair has just at this moment announced that no vote will now be taken on concurring in any of the amendments. The whole bill is open.

Mr. BACON. And everything will be open in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Everything is open in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment which I send to the desk may be read and agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, after the word "building," in line 4, insert:

May be used for the payment of necessary expenses in compensation or salaries of the commission hereinafter provided for, and.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment to an amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, to come in on page 74, line 18.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 74, line 18, after the word "the," strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and insert "President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" so as to read:

For the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, including salaries of one agent, at $2,500, and one agent, at $2,000, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and to be in lieu of any and all agents or inspectors now authorized by law for this purpose, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 132, line 16, in the paragraph relating to the Shiloh National Park, I move to amend the amendment made as in Commitee of the Whole by adding the word "two;" so as to read "$32,000."

The SECRETARY. On page 132, line 16, before the word "thousand," the committee amendment struck out "twenty" and inserted "thirty." It is now proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-two" before "thousand;" so as to read "$32,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no further amendments to offer.

Mr. DANIEL. I move to insert after the word "necessary," in line 19, page 84, the following words in a separate sentence:

The plans prepared shall include designs for the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States and the law library.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if there is any chance in any extension that is or possibly may be hereby authorized, this amendment would take away so many chances of committee rooms in the extension, if it ever takes place. The committee did not propose to go into that question. It is of course committing Congress to a project for increased accommodation for the Supreme Court as against committee rooms. We can not have them for both.

Mr. DANIEL. I will state that if there were a projection made to the east front of the Capitol it cuts off the light of the United States Supreme Court. The court room is a small one now, and the library room is very crowded and inefficient. A great many lawyers come to Washington in order to get the benefit of the law library and prepare their briefs with the convenience of the large collection of books there. The light of both the law library and the Supreme Court room will be excluded by any extension of the east face of the Capitol. So any architecture which contemplates that ought to include a design for the proper accommodation of the Supreme Court and law library. They are very small as they stand, and whatever elements of desirability and convenience now exist would be eliminated by the extension unless the plans of that extension were to take that matter into consideration. It would be a necessity, and if it is overlooked it will be a great deficiency in any plan of construction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say a word about this matter before it passes from the Senate. Both the Supreme Court and the law library being in the neighborhood of the east front of the Capitol, any commission, whether of civilians or architects, will of course take into account the fact that the central portion of the Capitol is now occupied by the law library and the Supreme Court. Therefore, even though the amendment of the Senator from Virginia has been disposed of, no commission will undertake to adopt any new plan that will not include proper and suitable accommodations for those who are already there.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, line 23, after the word "commission," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no action shall be taken as to the actual construction of the Senate annex herein provided for until report shall be made to Congress by the commission hereby appointed as to whether the extension of the Capitol will improve or impair the present architectural appearance of the Capitol, and as to whether such extension will provide the committee rooms and necessary office rooms for Senators.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say a word regarding this amendment. This amendment is not intended for delay. It will not delay in any particular the construction of the Senate Annex. The amendment already inserted in the bill appropriates $750,000 for a lot and also provides for the making of plans and authorizes immediate construction. Now, it will not be possible to get the title to that lot before next December, and all that this amendment contemplates is that no contract shall be let for the construction until we meet in December next and until this commission of the Capitol shall report, first, as to whether this extension can be made without impairing the architectural effect of the Capitol, and, second, as to whether if the extension is made it can be so made as to provide sufficient accommodations for Senators.

I have already stated the fact that forty-three Senators are to be provided for and that not more than sixty or sixty-five rooms will be required, that one of these extensions contemplated will provide for sixty-six additional rooms, that another one will provide thirty-three additional rooms, and that possibly, if the lesser extension is provided for, the House of Representatives may yield the space it would be entitled to and might also accord to the Senate a space in the western wing, formerly occupied by the Congressional Library. It might be induced to do this in view of the fact that Congress has already appropriated four or five million dollars, I believe, for an office building, which will be employed to meet these requirements.

If the extension should be determined upon, and should be sufficient for the proper accommodation of Senators, instead of having an expenditure aggregating pretty nearly $6,000,000, I think, for construction, we would accomplish all for an expenditure of two and one-half millions.

This will not delay the condemnation of the property for the Senate annex, because it will be required anyway for some governmental purpose in the future. This does not delay the condemnation; it simply prevents the making of a contract for construction until the commission shall report to Congress in December next as to whether the proposed extension of the Capitol will furnish sufficient accommodations for Senators.

Proceedings of condemnation are necessarily slow, and the House in similar proceedings have taken even a longer time than between now and December next for the acquisition of a site for their building. I assume that before we enter upon the actual construction there it will take at least six months to acquire land and to prepare plans. It takes a long time to prepare plans and specifications.

The condemnation of this property and the preparation of the plans can go on at the same time, and in December next, if this amendment be adopted, it will involve the presentation to Congress not only of the plans of the office building, but the plans of the Capitol extension. Then we will have an opportunity of determining whether this extension meets the requirements of Senators.

I rarely go to the Maltby Building, though my office is there. I find my Senatorial duties much more exacting than were my duties in the other House. I have been obliged to attend committee meetings at least four times a week since I have been here, and have consequently found my time taken up from half past 10 or 11 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the evening at the Capitol.

During the session of the Senate from 12 to 5 it is inconvenient to go so far away as the Maltby Building for attention to correspondence, and this proposed Senate annex means that most of us will not only have to go 300 feet or more to get to the corner of the new building, but many of us will have to go 200 or 300 feet farther to the end of the building, so as to obtain the accommodations we require. This means much loss of time and inconvenience in attending roll calls, etc.

I would rather have a room on the roof of this Capitol building than have the most gorgeous apartments in that Senatorial annex, and I believe it to be the feeling of most of the Senators who have been consigned to quarters outside of the Capitol that they would rather submit to the inconvenience of a small room in the Capitol than to have the utmost convenience in a building, however splendid, nearly a block away.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the only observation I have to make on this amendment is that if the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is indulging the hallucination that the House of Representatives will yield a single square inch of space beyond the middle of this building he had better disabuse his mind of that notion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think that is one of the possibilities.

Mr. SPOONER. One of the impossibilities.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But still the matter of the accommodation of Senators in the Capitol has never yet been submitted to the architects, and as we now propose to employ them they will probably present a plan that will meet every requirement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I wish to offer an amendment. I find on page 110, beginning in line 25, the following:

To defray the expenses incident to the erection and dedication, upon War College grounds, Washington Barracks, of the statue of Frederick the Great, the gift to the United States of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Germany, to be immediately available, $8,000.

Mr. President, I have already expressed, somewhat at length, to the Senate my views upon the subject of the erection of this statue, and I do not intend to repeat what I then said further than to say that I am still of the opinion that it is an exceedingly inappropriate statue to be erected in the capital grounds or in the District of Columbia, and that while I recognize the fact that there have been many Germans whose statues would be appropriate and acceptable, Frederick the Great was not one of them.

But my purpose, Mr. President, if we are going to have this statue, is to offer an antidote. I therefore ask that the amendment which I send to the desk may be inserted immediately after the language which I have just read from the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 111, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

That there shall be erected in the city of Washington, D. C., a statue of Thomas Jefferson; and for the purpose of procuring and erecting said statue, with a suitable pedestal, and for the preparation of a site, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of a commission to be composed of the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, and the United States Senators from the State of Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in?

Mr. STONE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

For the purpose of immediately providing additional rooms for the use of the Senate and of Senators the Senate Committee on Rules be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to lease or rent any building or part of any building convenient to the Senate Chamber for a term not to exceed five years, and at a total rental expense not to exceed $5,000 per annum; and to carry out this provision the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] will not press that amendment. Congress is about to adjourn in a few days, and I think we can get along until next winter with the project that we have already in mind. I dislike very much to make the point of order against the amendment, but it has not been recommended by any committee, and unless there is some general sentiment in the Senate that we ought immediately to rent some building, I should prefer that this amendment be not added to the bill. If, however, the matter is to be pressed, I would suggest that an amendment should be added leaving the matter in the discretion of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have no desire, of course, to press this amendment, and I shall not do so against the pleasure of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, whose judgment in matters of this kind I am disposed to yield to very willingly.

I offered the amendment simply to emphasize the importance of some provision of this kind, but I have been informed that this can be taken up by the Senate at an early day, and I therefore withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in?

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARY M. RICE.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5475) granting a pension to Mary M. Rice, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has just reported favorably with amendments a bill granting a pension to Mary M. Rice, who is the widow of the late Gen. Americus V. Rice. I feel very anxious to have that bill acted on, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5475) granting a pension to Mary M. Rice, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 8, after the words "United States," to strike out "Army" and insert "Volunteers;" and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary M. Rice, widow of Americus V. Rice, late colonel Fifty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. With reference to the last amendment, I want to make a very brief statement. Gen. Americus V. Rice was a very distinguished soldier. He had the unique distinction of having lost a leg on the battlefield, of having a wooden leg attached, and then going back and fighting for several months. His service was so distinguished that Congress granted him an increase of pension two or three years ago from $30 to $100 a month. He died very recently in this city, leaving a widow and two daughters in comparative poverty. I should very much like to have the Senator from North Dakota agree to accept an amendment to the amendment of the committee by making the amount $40. I had hoped that the committee would allow it to go at $50. It is a case of great merit and great necessity. I ask the Senator if he has any objection to that amendment?

Mr. MCCUMBER. The Senator from New Hampshire has been the chairman of the Committee on Pensions so long that I am disposed to yield to his better judgment in a matter of this kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator. I move to amend the last amendment of the committee by striking out "thirty" and inserting "forty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment reported by the committee, in line 8, to strike out "Army" and insert "Volunteers," has not yet been acted upon. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CROW RESERVATION IN MONTANA.

Mr. BARD. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11676) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. PETTUS. Would it be in order to object to the consideration of the bill now? It is very late in the evening.

Mr. BARD. The bill will not take long, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This bill is one of four bills that have been passed in the House of Representatives for the opening of reservations. This bill relates to the Crow Reservation in Montana. It does not differ substantially from the three bills which we have already passed, and they all ought to go together. I do not know but it is an unfortunate time to have it brought up.

Mr. PETTUS. My objection was not to the passage of the bill at all, but it was to the time at which it is taken up.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will let the bill be acted on.

Mr. PETTUS. Very well.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 1, page 11, line 16, after the words "provisions of," to insert "the reclamation act approved June 17, 1902;" in line 20, after the word "than," to strike out "three" and insert "four," and in line 21, after the word "acre," to insert "subject to the provisions in section 5;" so as to read:

ART. II. The reclamation act of June 17, 1902, so far as feasible irrigation projects may be found therein. The charges provided for by said reclamation act shall be in addition to the charge of $4 per acre for the land, and shall be paid in annual installments as required under the reclamation act; and the amounts to be paid for the land shall be credited to the funds herein established for the benefit of the Crow Indians. If any lands in sections 16 and 36 are included in an irrigation project under the reclamation act, the State of Montana may select in lieu thereof, as herein provided, other lands not included in any such project, in accordance with the provisions of existing law concerning school land selections. In any construction work upon the ceded lands performed directly by the United States under the reclamation act preference shall be given to the employment of Crow Indians, or whites intermarried with them, so far as may be practicable. The lands not withdrawn for irrigation under said reclamation act, which lands shall be determined under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior at the earliest practical date, shall be disposed of.

Upon the completion of such allotments and the filing of such schedule and after the sale or removal of such improvements the residue of such ceded lands, except sections 16 and 36, or lands in lieu thereof, which shall be reserved for common school purposes, and are hereby granted to the State of Montana for such purpose, shall be subject to withdrawal and disposition under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, so far as feasible irrigation projects may be found therein.

The charges provided for by said reclamation act shall be in addition to the charge of $4 per acre for the land, and shall be paid in annual installments as required under the reclamation act; and the amounts to be paid for the land shall be credited to the funds herein established for the benefit of the Crow Indians. If any lands in sections 16 and 36 are included in an irrigation project under the reclamation act, the State of Montana may select in lieu thereof, as herein provided, other lands not included in any such project, in accordance with the provisions of existing law concerning school land selections. In any construction work upon the ceded lands performed directly by the United States under the reclamation act, preference shall be given to the employment of Crow Indians, or whites intermarried with them, so far as may be practicable.

The lands not withdrawn for irrigation under said reclamation act, which lands shall be determined under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior at the earliest practical date, shall be disposed of under the homestead, town-site, and mineral-land laws of the United States, and shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the manner in which these lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof; and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands, except as prescribed in such proclamation, until after the expiration of sixty days from the time when the same are opened to settlement and entry: Provided, That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late civil and the Spanish war or Philippine insurrection, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1901, shall not be abridged: And provided further, That the price of said lands shall be $4 per acre, when entered under the homestead laws, to be paid as follows.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the the following titles in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 11963. An act regulating the practice of medicine and surgery in the Indian Territory;

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be dispensed with and that the statement be read in its place.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and that the statement be read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report, which is to be found, together with the statement, in the RECORD of April 19, 1904.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why it is that in every single instance in the report the House recedes. It seems to be nothing but a Senate bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I think if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] will read the full report, outside of the statement, he will see that the Senate has receded in a great many items.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I can not find it in the report.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not made mention of it in the statement because I have not touched on the items that the Senate has receded on, because when they receded they simply indorsed the action of the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What amount did the Senate increase it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Three hundred and sixty-one thousand one hundred and forty dollars.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And the House receded in every single instance?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. We did not recede in the appropriation for an increase of $55,000 in the road fund. We did not recede as to the full amount appropriated for experiments in breeding and feeding, and that was cut from $50,000 to $25,000. In none of these increases have we acceded to the increase demanded by the Senate. If the gentleman will read the statement, he will find the following:

These amendments (32, 37, 42, 44, 56, 58, 62, 82, 93, 98, and 118) carrying the increases above mentioned have been agreed upon by the conferees of the two Houses and simply represent a compromise between the judgment of the Senate and House as to the amounts each considered could be judiciously expended for the several purposes named.

In all these amendments a much larger amount was asked for than the House conceded.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the gentleman kindly state whether the item carrying an increase of appropriation for the Bureau of Statistics, and which was intended to provide for the collection of trucking statistics, has been retained in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has been.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, as one of the conferees, I wish to say that it is not fair to criticise the conferees. We have stood by the requirements of the House to the utmost extent that we reasonably could; and we have largely obtained concessions.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Allow me to say to the gentleman that in my remarks a moment ago I was only asking for an explanation.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I thought the gentleman was making a criticism of the conferees.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Oh, no.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to correct the statement I made a moment ago to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON]. The Senate asked a total increase of $361,140, of which increase we allowed $190,800.

I ask for a vote on the report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—DURBOROW VS. LORIMER.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Elections No. 2 I present a privileged report on the contested-election case of Durborow v. Lorimer, from the State of Illinois. I ask that the resolutions be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Allan C. Durborow was not elected to membership in the House of Representatives of the United States in the Fifty-eighth Congress and is not entitled to a seat therein.
Resolved, That William Lorimer was duly elected to membership in the House of Representatives of the United States in the Fifty-eighth Congress and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, this contest hinged upon a recount of the ballots. Upon the face of the returns Mr. Lorimer had a majority or plurality of 985. A recount of the ballots increased that number to the extent of 9 votes, whereupon the contestant declined to proceed further with the contest or to argue the case before the committee, and consented to resolutions such as I now offer.
The resolutions were adopted.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the report of the committee of conference, now lying on the Speaker's table, on the naval appropriation bill. I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the House conferees (heretofore printed in the RECORD along with the report) be read in lieu of the report.
The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection that will be done. There was no objection.
The statement, as published in the House proceedings of Monday, April 18, was read.
Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report, and upon that I demand the previous question.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it now in order to move to recede and concur——
The SPEAKER. Not at this time, because the present motion is to agree to the conference report, which covers the items which have been agreed to by the conferees. When the report is disposed of, items disagreed to will be before the House.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois.
The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Illinois withdraws for the present the motion for the previous question.
Mr. FITZGERALD. As I understand, the items inserted by the Senate to provide barracks have been excluded under the agreement of the conferees.
Mr. FOSS. Yes, sir.
Mr. RIXEY. As I understand, amendment No. 34, providing for the promotion and retirement of officers of the Marine Corps, has been agreed to?
Mr. FOSS. Yes, sir.
Mr. RIXEY. Can the gentleman tell us how many officers are affected by that provision?
Mr. FOSS. Only seven.
Mr. RIXEY. And this does not affect at all the proposition about which there was so much discussion in regard to the promotion of retired officers?
Mr. FOSS. It does not affect that matter at all. Mr. Speaker, I renew the demand for the previous question.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As a parliamentary inquiry, may

I ask whether the question is now simply on adopting those amendments which have been agreed to by the House conferees?

The SPEAKER. The question is on adopting the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. There are certain amendments still in disagreement. Upon Senate amendment No. 10, relating to appropriations for the Charleston Navy-Yard, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman state what that amendment is?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "In all, navy-yard, Charleston, S. C., $656,500" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Quay wall, $50,000; dredging, $20,000; locomotive and power house, $5,000; railroad scales, $3,000; sewers, $20,000; telephone system, $2,000; entrance gate and police station, $28,000; grading and drainage, $10,000; storehouse and storekeeper's offices, to extend, $50,000, to cost in all not to exceed $150,000; latrines, $3,000; railroad system, extension, $12,000; railroad equipment, $5,000; tools and machinery for yards and docks workshop, $8,000; one officer's quarters, $8,000; in all, navy-yard, Charleston, S. C., $880,500."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to ask the gentleman whether the Senate amendment increases or decreases the amount allowed by the House?

Mr. FOSS. It increases it by this amount, to which we have disagreed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What is the amount of the increase?

Mr. FOSS. I am informed by my colleague on the committee [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] that it is about $230,000. As the bill went out of the House it was $650,000, in round numbers. They have increased it about $230,000, so I am informed.

Mr. FINLEY. I should like to ask my friend if it would be feasible to pass over this item and take up another for the present? My colleague [Mr. LEGARE], who represents the Charleston district, happens not to be in the House now, at least I do not see him. Would it be feasible to pass over this item for a little while?

Mr. FOSS. I would rather take them up in order. This motion puts the item in disagreement.

Mr. DAYTON. It is not finally settled.

Mr. RIXEY. I will state that the provision as carried in the bill as it left the House included everything that the gentleman who represents the Charleston district [Mr. LEGARE] asked us to include.

Mr. FOSS. Everything.

Mr. RIXEY. Everything.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the House voted it in accordance with his desires.

Mr. RIXEY. The House voted everything that he asked.

Mr. FOSS. These amendments which are inserted here have not been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. RIXEY. I think the item ought to be disagreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I suppose so.

The motion of Mr. FOSS to disagree and further insist was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. There are a number of amendments, Nos. 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 24, 31, 32, 33, 35, and 38, which are still in disagreement. Is there a desire to consider any one of these amendments separately from the others?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it is thoroughly impossible to know whether we have a desire to consider them or not unless we receive some information. I think if the chairman of the committee [Mr. FOSS] would take about five minutes to explain the general effect and purport of each one of these amendments we could act more intelligently.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rise to announce that I desire to move to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 18.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. FOSS. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that at the proper time I shall move to concur in Senate amendment No. 35, which provides that the colliers authorized by the bill of the House and confirmed by the Senate shall be built in navy-yards, one on the Pacific and the other on the Atlantic coast, the same to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the motion to concur in any other amendment?

Mr. FOSS. I move to further insist upon all other amendments on which a separate vote has not been demanded.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, before that matter is put to the House I suggest that it would not take much time—about five minutes—for the gentleman to explain to the House the general purport and meaning of each of these amendments. He can do it rapidly, so that we can get some idea of it. We do not know whether we want any separate vote or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 15 relates to the consolidation of the light, heat, and power plants in our different navy-yards. The House committee were of the opinion that this consolidation ought to be under the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and left the question of consolidation in the discretion of the Secretary, but said that if he made the consolidation he must make it under that Bureau, because the committee were thoroughly and unanimously of the opinion that it ought to be done under that Bureau if at all. The Senate amendment left it in the discretion of the Secretary to make this consolidation under any bureau—for instance, under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, or the Bureau of Equipment, or the Bureau of Steam Engineering. So there is just that difference between the House and Senate upon that proposition.

The House say that the consolidation ought to be in the Bureau of Yards and Docks; the Senate leave it discretionary with the Secretary.

Amendment No. 16 is simply a clerical computation. Amendment No. 18 is the amendment with reference to the Great Lakes training station. The Senate have put in here a provision for a new board.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote is demanded on amendment numbered 18.

Mr. FOSS. And a separate vote has been demanded on this provision. Amendment numbered 19 is simply a clerical computation, dependent upon the action of the House on the previous amendment.

Amendment numbered 20 refers to a naval magazine in New England, for the purchase of land for a site for a naval magazine on the New England coast. I shall ask the House to insist on its disagreement to that provision.

Amendment numbered 21 is a clerical computation, dependent upon the action of the House on the previous amendment.

Amendment numbered 24 is as follows:

To place the frigate Constitution as near as may be in the same condition as regards hull and rigging as she was when in active service, for use as practice, training, or receiving ship, $400,000.

To that the House conferees have disagreed.

Now, amendment numbered 31 provides for an increased salary of $200 to a clerk in the office of the assistant quartermaster of the Marine Corps in Philadelphia, and the House conferees disagreed.

Amendments numbered 32 and 33 are clerical computations.

Amendment numbered 35 provides that the colliers shall be built in navy-yards, one on the Pacific coast and the other on the Atlantic coast. Upon that a separate vote has been demanded.

Now, as to amendment 38 the House proposition was:

That before any subsurface or submarine torpedo boat is purchased or contracted for it shall be accepted by the Navy Department as fulfilling all reasonable requirements for submarine warfare and shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy.

This is the Senate provision:

That before any subsurface or submarine torpedo boat or boats are purchased or accepted by the Navy Department they shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy and shall fulfill all reasonable requirements for torpedo or submarine warfare.

Here is the proviso which is really the difference between the House and the Senate on the provision:

Provided also, That the boats contracted for under this act shall be constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications of the contractor.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman what is meant by that second proviso that is inserted on the part of the Senate?

Mr. DAYTON. It ought not to be in there.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would like to know at least what it means.

Mr. DAYTON. The contractor's plans shall be taken rather than the plans of the Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think we may as well have a separate vote on that.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I do not know that I care for a separate vote, but I would like to intelligently understand the proviso before being called upon to vote upon it. The question I would like to ask the chairman of the committee is: Does it authorize the purchase of a boat on paper? If it does not, what does it mean?

Mr. FOSS. The proviso is this:

That the boats contracted for under this act shall be constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications of the contractor.

Now, in the building and construction or contracts for boats of other classes the Department has always retained the right to make the specifications and plans for them. This proviso leaves it entirely with the contractor to say upon what plans these submarine boats shall be built.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the chairman of the committee quite understands my question. What I want to know is whether under the terms of this clause it is possible for the Department to buy a boat existing merely in the imagination of the inventor upon the submission of plans; and I further want to know if that clause does not entirely nullify the preceding provision, which requires a test before purchase under the terms of the preceding proviso. Under this one the Navy Department could contract with any person that they see fit for a boat existing simply in the imagination of the individual upon the submission of plans and specifications. If it does so provide, it seems to me that the provision should be stricken out. We have a large Congressional scrap heap now. I do not believe we ought to add to it.

Mr. FOSS. Well, I will say to my friend that the House conferees are insisting on their disagreement.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I have no doubt in the world they will continue to insist if that means what I think it does.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendments than 18 and 35? The Chair hears none.

The question is on the House insisting upon its disagreement to the remaining amendments, except amendments numbered 18 and 35.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment numbered 18.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: The purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the Great Lakes, $250,000. The President is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint a board consisting of not less than three members, none of whom shall be a resident of any State bordering on the Great Lakes, whose duty it shall be to select the most available site for such naval training station on the Great Lakes, and having selected such site, to ascertain and report its probable cost and the probable expenditure which will be necessary for improving the same, including lake shore protection and construction of necessary harbor facilities; and to make a detailed report of their findings and proceedings to the President to be transmitted by the President to Congress for its final action. And to defray the expenses of said board, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, in relation to this amendment I desire to move to recede from the disagreement and concur with an amendment, which I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do recede and concur in the Senate amendment with the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all the paragraph after the word "dollars," in line 8, page 41, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That the site for said training station shall be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, but he shall not pay a sum to exceed $250 per acre therefor."

So that the entire paragraph will read:

"Naval training station, Great Lakes: The purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the Great Lakes, $250,000: Provided, That the site for said training station shall be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, but he shall not pay a sum to exceed $250 per acre therefor."

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to renew the point of order against the amendment. I will reserve the point of order if it is desired.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to know what the point of order is.

Mr. FOSS. I can not understand the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia gives notice that he will reserve the point of order. That can be done by unanimous consent. The Chair has certainly no objection, but the Chair will be glad to know what the point is for the convenience of the Chair.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I will state the point of order. This amendment of the Senate provides for the appointment of a commission by the President for the purpose of locating a training station on the Great Lakes. The amendment which is offered strikes out the commission entirely and provides absolutely for the purchase of land, I suppose in accordance with the recommendation of a board which has been heretofore appointed and acted. Now, I take it the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Illinois is not pertinent or germane to the amendment which was incorporated into this bill by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to make the point of order now or reserve it?

Mr. RIXEY. I will reserve the point of order for the present until the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin is passed on.

Mr. FOSS. I think the gentleman had better insist on the point of order.

Mr. RIXEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. DAYTON. You have read the first part of the bill, which makes an absolute appropriation for this training station?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RIXEY. No, sir; I do not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Senate amendment provides for the purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the Great Lakes, $250,000, and then provides the machinery by which an investigation shall be made and a report made to Congress. The object is the establishment of a naval station. The machinery is a mere matter of detail, and it seems to the Chair that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois is in order.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BAKER. I want to ask a question of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FOSS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], who desires to make a motion to concur.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the motion to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 18.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois yields to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 18 and concur therein. On that have I the floor, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and also the gentleman from Illinois, to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois has moved to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Chair finds, on looking at the precedents, that the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] takes precedence over the motion to recede and concur with an amendment, and the Chair therefore will entertain the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], however, controls the time.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to recede and concur takes precedence of the motion that I have offered.

The SPEAKER. It does at this stage of the bill, under the precedents.

Mr. FOSS. Now, I will ask the Speaker how much time we have on this proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, under the rules of the House, has one hour.

Mr. FOSS. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin how much time he desires?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In view of the situation and of the very great importance of this matter——

Mr. FOSS. I mean of this one hour.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can we not have that time extended by unanimous consent for half an hour?

Mr. FOSS. No; I think we ought to get along on these matters. There are other amendments here.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman give me half an hour?

Mr. FOSS. I will be pleased to divide the time, one-half hour on each side; but if any gentleman desires to speak in support of the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, then the gentleman from Wisconsin must give him that time, for I shall want to close the debate on the proposition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask that my attention be called to the fact when I have consumed twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois yields to the gentleman from Wisconsin thirty minutes, as the Chair understands.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the motion is for the House to recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 18 and to concur therein.

The amendment is an effort to settle in a fair, honorable way the vexed question of a site for the Great Lakes naval training station, by the appointment of a new board to inspect sites, to select the one most available, to prepare a statement in detail as to its probable cost and the probable amount necessary for improvements, including a harbor and lake-shore protection, and to report its findings to the President, to be transmitted to Congress for its final action.

After protracted, thorough debate in the Senate this amendment passed that body with only one dissenting vote—that of a Senator from Illinois. In my judgment it ought to pass the House without opposition.

I regret that I can not have time properly to discuss this important proposition—important not only to the Navy and to the Treasury of the United States, but also to me personally, because of the attack made in effect upon my integrity during the debate on this question in February last. During that debate I said to the House that when this board came to the city of Racine on August 4, 1902, they did not go within one mile and a half of the site which the city of Racine had to offer, assigning as a reason their lack of time and also that that visit was merely preliminary to a thorough inspection at a later date. I said also that on October 31, 1902, when they came on their second and last visit, they did not arrive in Racine until 4.30 p. m., and did not reach the site until after dark, when lamps had been lighted in the farmhouses. At the close of the debate a letter from a member of the board was read, which absolutely contradicted these statements in every essential particular. This letter is dated February 24, the day on which it was read in the House.

The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS], read this letter, prefacing it with this remark, referring to myself—I read from the RECORD:

When the gentleman made that statement he knew whether it was true or not. I have nothing to say.

Mr. Speaker, I told the House the truth on that occasion or I told it a falsehood. The facts were such and they were so entirely within my own knowledge that I could not be mistaken about them.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at this time, unless the gentleman will yield me more time.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I did not express any opinion on the matter one way or another. I simply left it between the gentleman and the board.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know what the gentleman said. The board did not write that letter. It was written and signed by only one member of the board, and the gentleman from Illinois in his remarks assumed that every word of it was true. I believe that Admiral Taylor knew nothing about it.

This letter and the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois raised a direct issue as to my veracity. The letter was read at the end of the debate, when it could not be answered. This is the first opportunity, Mr. Speaker, that I have had on the floor of the House to discuss this subject, and I propose now to demonstrate whether the writer of that letter or I told the truth to the House concerning the board's two visits to Racine and their alleged inspection of the North Point site. Fortunately the evidence is at hand to remove all doubts and to make the demonstration unanswerable.

The first visit of the board was on August 4, 1902. Concerning that visit, this letter says:

The board was met by a committee and driven in carriages to the hote in Racine. Afterwards the board and the committee, composed of the mayor of Racine and several citizens of that city, proceeded in carriages to examine the site, a short distance north of the city. The board was taken to this site by the committee, and not by the suggestion of the board, as the board understood that this was the site which the city had to offer as being a suitable site for the naval training station. The board inspected this site, and afterwards returned to the city and to the railway station.

The site at North Point was not presented to the board during this visit, except possibly in a casual way. The board was in the hands of the committee for the time being, and therefore only visited the site which the committee had to offer.

Had the site at North Point been seriously offered to the board, the board would naturally have preferred to visit this site at the time, as the North Point site is manifestly the best site for a training station in the vicinity of Racine.

After the return of the board to Washington the subject of the site at North Point, known in the board's final report as "North Point Site A," was taken up in correspondence with the representatives of interests at Racine, and the board determined on their next trip to the Great Lakes to visit this site.

As to the second and last visit (October 31, 1902), this letter says:

The board again visited Racine in October. Rear-Admiral Taylor, the president of the board, was unable to accompany the board on this visit. The board arrived at Racine late in the afternoon, and was there met in carriages by a committee in accordance with previous arrangements and driven to North Point. Owing to the fact that the carriage horses were not equal to their load considerable time was wasted in the journey from the railway station to the site.

Nevertheless the board reached the site in ample time to have sufficient daylight to see the site and to determine all the points the board had in mind. The board drove over much of the site, and as the site was for the most part cleared land, the time was ample for the inspection. Had the board not been fully satisfied as to the physical characteristics, it would have waited and made a second visit the following day or stopped at Racine on their return from their trip to the northward.

Here, in this letter, are four principal statements, namely:

First. That on their first visit (August 4, 1902) the board inspected a site at the city of Racine.

Second. That this was not the North Point site; that the North Point site was not then presented, except possibly in a casual way; and that the board would have preferred to visit the site at that time.

Third. That after the return of the board to Washington the North Point site was taken up in correspondence with citizens of Racine, and that then it was that the board determined on their next trip to visit it.

Fourth. That on their second and last visit (October 31, 1902) they arrived at Racine late in the afternoon, but, nevertheless, reached the North Point site in time to inspect it by daylight.

Mr. Speaker, the facts are as follows:

First. That in conversation at the hotel in Racine, immediately after their arrival on August 4, 1902, the members of the board informed the committee of citizens that they were pressed for time and could not remain in Racine on that day for more than one-half or three-quarters of an hour; that their visit was only preliminary.

Second. That on August 4 the board did not visit or inspect any site in or near the city of Racine, the only site suggested or thought of at that time being at North Point, sometimes called "Wind Point."

Third. That the only place in Racine where the board alighted from the carriages on the shore of Lake Michigan on that day was in the Fourth Ward, a thickly settled portion of the city, where there was no possible opportunity for a site for the naval training station.

Fourth. That while standing on the bank of the lake the attention of the board was called to North Point, a mile and a half distant, as meeting every requirement for a site for a naval training station, and that thereupon the members of the board declared that for lack of time they would not then drive to North Point, but would return at a later date to inspect the site. Admiral Taylor at the same time turning to Engineer Rousseau and directing him to make a note of what had been said.

Fifth. That after standing on the bank of the lake a few minutes the board were driven directly to the railroad station, and at no time on that day were nearer than 1¼ miles to the North Point site.

Sixth. That the board did not wait until they returned to Washington and had had correspondence concerning the North Point site to decide to visit it, but that on August 4, 1902, in the presence of the citizens' committee, and also in my presence, they promised to do so.

Seventh. That on their second and last visit, October 31, 1902, the board (only two members) did not arrive in Racine until 4.30 o'clock in the afternoon, when, because of the lateness of the hour, they were invited to remain in Racine overnight, so that the site might be inspected by daylight; that they declined this invitation, and were then driven to the site, which was not reached until lamps were lighted in the farmhouses and it was entirely too dark to make anything like an inspection, the two members of the board simply driving across the site and back in a closed carriage.

Eighth. That, as a result of all this, the board have never inspected the site at North Point.

Mr. Speaker, in support of my statement I shall offer two kinds of evidence, namely: First, my letters written to the board immediately after their respective visits to Racine; second, affidavits of members of the citizens' committee who accompanied the board during these visits.

I have here my letter-press book containing copies of all letters dictated by me from July 5, 1902, to November 26, 1902. On page 198 of this book I find a letter dated August 17—two weeks after the first visit of the board. A portion of this letter I will now read, and all of it I will, with the consent of the House, print in the RECORD. This letter shows conclusively that the board did not visit any site in or near the city of Racine on August 4, 1902.

RACINE, WIS., August 17, 1902.

Admiral H. C. TAYLOR, United States Navy,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your Cleveland letter of the 14th instant.

As I wrote you in my last letter, I hope very much that your board will not fail again to visit Kenosha and Racine. Your previous visits were too brief to permit of anything like a thorough examination of the sites. This is especially true of the site at Racine.

You will recall that your board did not go nearer than a mile and a half to the proposed site in this city, on North Point.

The House will observe that in this letter I spoke of "the site at Racine," and of "the proposed site in this city, on North Point," thus showing clearly that there was then only one site—the site at North Point—which that city had to offer. And not only did I speak of this site, but I took occasion in this letter to remind the board that during their visit of August 4 they had not been nearer than a mile and a half to it.

The whole letter is as follows:

RACINE, WIS., August 17, 1902.

Admiral H. C. TAYLOR, U. S. N.,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your Cleveland letter of the 14th instant. As I wrote you in my last letter, I hope very much that your board will not fail again to visit Kenosha and Racine. Your previous visits were too brief to permit of anything like a thorough examination of the sites. This is especially true of the site at Racine. You will recall that your board did not go nearer than a mile and a half to the proposed site in this city on North Point. This site is a peninsula from one-half to three-quarters of a mile in width, projecting into the lake about 1 mile, and forming a bay perfectly protected from northeast storms—the only severe storms of this locality. The ground is all level and from 30 to 50 feet above the lake, excepting a ravine and a slough, which can be easily converted into a commodious harbor. The site is also a short distance from the main line of the Northwestern Railroad between Chicago and Milwaukee.

While your board made a more thorough examination of the Kenosha site, I am sure that the people of that city will be much pleased to have you make another and more complete inspection of it. As requested in your letter, I will be pleased to convey your message to the mayors and committees on sites of the respective cities.

Hoping that you will not fail again to visit Racine and Kenosha,
I am, very respectfully,

H. A. COOPER, M. C.,
First District of Wisconsin.

A little later, under date of September 5, 1902, I wrote the board another letter, a copy of which is found on page 241 of this letter-press book. This letter constitutes absolutely conclusive evidence that the board did not inspect any site at Racine on their visit of August 4, 1902. In this letter I distinctly reminded the board that there were only two sites in my Congressional district, one at Racine and the other at Kenosha, and that the board had "not as yet made any inspection of the site at Racine."

The letter is as follows:

RACINE, WIS., September 5, 1902.

Admiral H. C. TAYLOR, U. S. N.,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of August 27.

I note with pleasure the statement that your board expects to complete its preliminary examination of sites some time during the present month of September, and that it will be pleased to make a personal examination of any sites suggested by me. In this connection I desire to say that there are but two sites in my district—one at Racine and the other at Kenosha. Either of these would make an admirable location for the Great Lakes naval training station. Your board made a partial examination of the Kenosha site, but has not as yet made any inspection of the site at Racine. As you will recall, these two sites are but 10 miles apart. Permit me, therefore, to urge that your board visit both of them on your September visit.

I shall be greatly obliged if in reply to this you will kindly inform me as to when your board will visit this locality.

Awaiting your reply, I am, very respectfully,

H. A. COOPER, M. C.,
First District of Wisconsin.

Mr. Speaker, the board did not again visit Racine until October 31, 1902. Only four days later (November 4, 1902) I wrote the board another letter, a copy of which appears on page 425 of this letter-press book.

In this letter I reminded the president of the board that he had never personally made an examination of the North Point site, and distinctly informed him that the two other members of the board on their visit of October 31, 1902, arrived at so late an hour as to make it impossible for them to see the site by daylight.

The letter reads as follows:

RACINE, WIS., November 4, 1902.

Admiral H. C. TAYLOR, United States Navy,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Permit me to say an additional word concerning the site for the naval training station.

Your full board has already visited the fine site at Kenosha, and two of your members have made a second visit. I shall not, therefore, refer to it in detail at this time. Inasmuch, however, as you personally have never made an examination of the North Point site near this city, I desire now to call attention to its very great merits.

It is to be regretted that Lieutenant-Commander Winslow and Engineer Rousseau on their visit here last week arrived at so late an hour (4.30 p. m.) as to make it impossible for them to see the site by daylight. It was after 5 o'clock before we arrived on the ground, too late to make a satisfactory inspection.

The North Point site can not be excelled anywhere. The ground is from 30 to 35 feet above the lake, very fertile, generally level, and in every way peculiarly adapted to the requirements of the proposed naval training station. There is ample opportunity to make a harbor, which could be easily kept in good condition. The fine harbor of the city of Racine, with a channel depth of 21 feet, is also available. Without great expense the site could easily be made an island by dredging the ravine which extends across the Point. There is a beautiful beach more than a mile in length. The point itself furnishes absolutely perfect protection from northeast storms, the only troublesome storms in this section. From the north side of the site Milwaukee is visible, 20 miles away, and from the south side there is a fine view of the bay and harbor of the city of Racine.

This shore of Lake Michigan has the lowest death rate of any portion of the United States, and it would be impossible to find a more healthful locality than North Point.

Located between Chicago and Milwaukee, the site is near the center of a great population, to which it is easily accessible.

In locality, eligibility, healthfulness, and every other essential the site at North Point is ideal.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully,

H. A. COOPER, M. C.,
First District of Wisconsin.

Mr. Speaker, these letters were written when the incidents were fresh in my mind, and at a time when there was no thought of the controversy which has arisen; and they afford indisputable evidence that the writer of the letter read by the gentleman from Illinois was at least mistaken in his statement of facts.

But, Mr. Speaker, in addition to these letters I have affidavits which I desire to present. I secured these affidavits in this way: Immediately after the gentleman from Illinois read the letter from the member of the board I mailed a copy of it to Mr. R. M. Boyd, one of the committee of citizens who accompanied the board during its visits to Racine, together with a letter from myself requesting him to forward me affidavits of the members of the committee setting forth the facts as to these visits. With the permission of the House I will insert in the RECORD a copy of my letter to Mr. Boyd, although it would have been in somewhat different form if originally intended for publication. In it there is no suggestion of what I had said during the debate, but only a request for affidavits showing the exact facts.

My letter to Mr. Boyd is as follows:

FEBRUARY 24, 1904.

Mr. R. M. BOYD, Racine, Wis.

MY DEAR MR. BOYD: Before this reaches you you will know of the two days' fight in the House and of the defeat of the naval-training-school proposition.

I never was more astonished in a debate than when to-day Mr. Foss read a letter written by Commander Winslow, saying that on the first visit of the board (August 4, 1902) they were met at the station in Racine and proceeded in carriages to examine a site a short distance north of the city; that the board inspected this site and afterwards returned to the city and to the railway station. They say that the site at North Point was not presented to the board except in a casual way, and therefore they only visited the site which the committee had to offer.

Did you ever hear of anything to surpass that? I can not imagine how Winslow came to make such a statement. I herewith inclose a copy of the Winslow letter above referred to.

I wish that you would get an affidavit from each man who was with the escort party on that day, setting forth the exact facts as to where the board were driven and how near they came to reaching either of the proposed sites. Have each affiant give his business and state his official position, either the one he at present occupies or the one he occupied on the day of the visit. Have these affidavits made before a notary public, who shall affix his seal to each one of them, or before a judge or some other court officer having a seal. Have each affidavit cover the necessary points, and send to me by earliest possible mail.

Please show this letter to Mr. Walker and other interested friends. I prefer that it shall not be made public until after I have presented the affidavits.

Very truly, yours,

H. A. COOPER.

A few days after mailing this letter I received an affidavit of each member of the citizens' committee. One of the affiants is Hon. Michael Higgins, a leading manufacturer of my city, who was at that time its mayor. Other affiants are W. A. Walker and R. M. Boyd, for the last thirty years citizens of Racine and prominently identified with its business interests. Another affiant is Mr. Henry J. Schroff, now and for several years past city clerk of the city of Racine.

Mayor Higgins accompanied the board on only its first visit, August 4, 1902. In his affidavit he swears that the board, accompanied by the citizens' committee, were driven to the lake shore at High street; that no naval training station site was offered to the board in that vicinity; but that while standing there on the bank North Point was pointed out and the statement made that on the south side of it there was a large slough or creek where a splendid harbor could be secured with comparatively little cost.

He swears that the board declined to drive up there, a distance of about 2 miles from where they then stood, assigning as a reason that they had not sufficient time. He adds that they remained at that place a few minutes and were then driven back to the railway station. He also swears that at the first visit of the board to Racine there was positively no site inspected or visited by the board, as the point where they stopped is in a densely populated portion of the city, and that no site was mentioned to them except the North Point site.

The affidavit of Mayor Higgins is as follows:

HIGGINS SPRING AND AXLE COMPANY,
MANUFACTURERS OF WAGON AND CARRIAGE SPRINGS AND AXLES,
Racine, Wis., February 25, 1904.

M. Higgins, jr., being first duly sworn, deposes and says that in the year 1902 he was mayor of the city of Racine, and that on or about the 4th day of August, 1902, he was informed by Mr. Lloyd, agent for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company in this city, that the board for the selection of a site for a naval training station on the Great Lakes was on their line of road and would reach the city of Racine along in the afternoon and would stop off here for a short time if desired to do so. The board arrived at the Chicago and Northwestern depot during the afternoon, was met there by carriages and driven over to Hotel Racine, where they were introduced to myself and to a number of other persons.

That after a few moments conversation a member of the board made the statement that they were limited for time and had but a very short time, possibly thirty minutes, to remain in the city, and that while here they desired to obtain as much information as possible in reference to our harbor and harbor facilities.

That the board, together with several citizens, including Congressman H. A. COOPER, entered the carriages and were driven up North Main street to High street and from there east to the lake bank, from which point a splendid view of Racine Bay and Harbor can be obtained. There was no naval training station offered to them at that point, but while standing there North Point was pointed out to them and the statement made that at the south side of the point there was a large slough or creek entering the lake, known locally as "Duck Creek," where a splendid harbor could be obtained with comparatively small cost. The board declined to drive up there, a distance of about 2 miles from where we stood, assigning as the reason that they had not sufficient time We remained at that point possibly from ten to fifteen minutes. The board was then driven back to the Chicago and Northwestern depot by the way of High street and Milwaukee road. That at the first visit of the board to this city there was positively no site inspected nor visited by the board, as the point where we stopped is in a densely populated portion of the city and no site was mentioned to them except the North Point site.

Upon the visit of the board at a later period, I believe some time in October, I was absent from the city.

MICHAEL HIGGINS, Jr., Ex-Mayor.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th of February, 1904.
[SEAL.] R. M. BOYD, Notary Public.
Notarial commission expires August 15, 1904.

In Mr. Walker's affidavit he swears that on the first visit of the board they were met at the station and driven to Hotel Racine; proceeded from the hotel to the east end of High street, where the entire company left the carriages and walked to the edge of the bluff to view Racine Harbor and the bay lying between the harbor and North Point. He adds that a distinct statement was made by Admiral Taylor that he could not allow Racine but one-half an hour. He says that the board alighted from their carriages at the end of High street, where there was no possible location for a naval training station; that that vicinity was never suggested as a site, and that the visit of the board to the place where they alighted from the carriages was only for the purpose of getting a view of the harbor and the general surroundings, it being understood that one-half an hour was all the time they could give Racine and that it would be impossible for them to visit North Point at that time.

He adds, however, that a promise was then made that the board would visit the proposed site at their earliest possible convenience. Mr. Walker swears that on their second visit—October 31—the board was met at the railway station at about 4.30 p. m. and driven to North Point. He says that before starting the gentlemen of the receiving party took out their watches, expressed the opinion that it would be impossible to reach the site before dusk, and asked if the board could not await a more favorable opportunity to visit it, to which they replied that it would not be possible for them to come again. Mr. Walker says that under these unfavorable conditions the party drove as rapidly as possible to North Point, arriving after the lights had been lit in the farmhouses.

The affidavit of Mr. Walker is as follows:

RACINE, WIS., February 26, 1904.

To whom it may concern:

I, W. A. Walker, a citizen of Racine for the past thirty years, at present and for twenty years past have been a manufacturer, hereby certify that as a member of the Racine Business Men's Association, I, with the mayor, city clerk, and others, met Rear-Admiral Taylor, Commander C. McR. Winslow, and Civil Engineer H. H. Rousseau, as representatives of the United States Navy, constituting an examining board for the purpose of selecting a site for the proposed naval station on the Great Lakes, on or about August 4, 1902. The said naval committee were met at the Chicago Northwestern Railway station with carriages and driven to the Hotel Racine and proceeded from the hotel to the north side of Racine, at the east end of High street, where the entire party got out of the carriages, walked to the edge of the bluff, and viewed the Racine Harbor and the beautiful bay lying between the harbor and Wind Point; that the distinct statement was made by Admiral Taylor that he could not allow us but one-half hour at that time, and in view of that fact a member of our committee pointed out our proposed site at Wind Point, stating that there was a small stream entering the lake on the south side of said site, which was splendidly protected from all of the heavy storms, and that this location at Wind Point was the only site for the proposed naval station that we had to offer at Racine, so far as I know. Where the committee alighted from the carriages, at the end of High street, there was no suitable location for a naval station; it was never suggested as such, and the visit of the committee to the place where we did alight from the carriages was solely for the purpose of getting a view of the harbor and the general surroundings, it being distinctly understood that one-half hour was all the time they could give us on that first visit and it would be impossible for the committee to visit Wind Point at that time, a promise, however, being made that they would visit our proposed site at their earliest possible convenience.

I also state that on the second visit of two members of the committee, Commander C. McR. Winslow and Chief Engineer H. H. Rousseau, about October 31, 1902, they were met at the Northwestern Railway station at about 4.30 p. m. by a committee and driven direct from the station to Wind Point. At that time Hon. H. A. COOPER, M. C.; W. H. Kranz, president of our Business Men's Association; myself, and other persons present, took out our watches and expressed the opinion that as the proposed site was 3 miles from the station, it would be impossible to arrive on the grounds before dusk, and asked if the committee could give us a more favorable opportunity to show them the proposed site, to which they replied that they did not think that it was possible for them to call again; that therefore, under these unfavorable conditions, we drove as fast as possible to the proposed site, and arrived after the lights had been lit in the farmhouses.

After this very meager examination by the board of our proposed site, the Business Men's Association felt that sufficient information was not in the hands of the committee, and therefore, at a very great expense, engineers were sent to Wind Point, and also photographers, and by photographs, maps, and drawings our Business Men's Association has endeavored to place before the naval board information that we believed necessary to prove that Wind Point and the beautiful bay lying between the Racine Harbor and Wind Point was the best possible site for the proposed naval training station on the west shore of Lake Michigan. The above statements are true and correct.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM ALLEN WALKER.

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
County of Racine, ss:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this —— day of February, 1904, by William A. Walker, who states upon oath that all of the within statements are correct and true.

C. R. CARPENTER,
Notary Public, Wisconsin.

Mr. Boyd in his affidavit swears that Admiral Taylor informed the receiving party that the board had only about thirty minutes to spend at Racine on August 4; that they were driven to the lake shore at the east end of High street, and that while standing there he (Mr. Boyd) called the attention of Admiral Taylor to North Point; that the board declined to drive to the point, which was about 1½ miles distant, assigning as a reason that they had not sufficient time, but adding that they would return later in the season and devote as much time as necessary to make a complete investigation of the site. Mr. Boyd swears that on their first visit to Racine the board inspected no site, and that there was no site offered except only the North Point site. He adds that there was positively no site offered or inspected at the point on the lake shore where the board stopped, as it is in a thickly settled portion of the city.

Mr. Boyd swears that when he mentioned the North Point site to Admiral Taylor the latter called the attention of Engineer Rousseau, the recorder of the board, to the statement which he (Mr. Boyd) had made, and requested Rousseau to make a memorandum of the same, promising to devote ample time for an inspection of the site when the board returned later in the season. Mr. Boyd swears that on their second visit (October 31) the board did not reach the station until 4.30 o'clock in the afternoon, when they were informed that because of the lateness of their arrival it would be impossible to reach North Point and thoroughly inspect the site on that day; that the board were invited to remain at the hotel overnight and make an inspection in the morning; that they declined to do this for the reason that they were traveling on schedule time and were to inspect a site at Sheboygan early the next morning; that thereupon, as fast as possible, the drive was made to North Point, but that when the board arrived there the lamps were lighted in the farmhouses.

Mr. Boyd swears that it was upon this occasion that he called the attention of the board to another possible site lying east of the highway on which the party traveled going to North Point, and beginning about three-quarters of a mile north of the city limits; that the members of the board did not stop or alight from their carriages and inspect the site, but merely looked at it as they drove along the road. It is known in their report as "North Point Site B." Mr. Boyd swears that this was the only time (October 31, 1902) that the attention of the board was called to this site, except through correspondence. As I have before said, Mr. Speaker, it is also a fact that this "Site B" was never seriously considered.

The affidavit of Mr. Boyd is as follows:

STATE OF WISCONSIN, Racine County, ss:

I, R. M. Boyd, the undersigned, being first duly sworn, on oath state that for more than thirty years past I have been a resident of the city of Racine and State of Wisconsin, and that for the past ten years I have been engaged in the real estate and insurance business in this city. On or about the 4th day of August, 1902, I met in front of my office Hon. M. Higgins, jr., then mayor of this city, and Henry J. Schroff, city clerk. They stated to me that the board created for the purpose of selecting a site for a naval training station on the Great Lakes would arrive at Hotel Racine in a few moments; that carriages were then over at the station for them. In about five minutes the carriages drove up, containing Admiral H. C. Taylor, Lieut. Commander Winslow, Civil Engineer H. H. Rousseau, and, I think, a Captain Young, together with W. H. Kranz, president of the Business Men's Association of this city, and Mr. Lloyd, agent for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. The parties alighted, but did not go into the hotel. They were introduced to his honor the mayor, City Clerk Schroff, and myself, and about this time we were joined by Congressman H. A. COOPER and Clarence Snyder, of this city, who had just returned from Kenosha. After chatting a few moments on general subjects, the question came up as to how much time could be devoted to Racine.

I think that the remark was made by Admiral Taylor that they had only about thirty minutes to spend here, and that he would like to get a definite idea of our harbor and harbor facilities. The party then entered the carriages and was driven up North Main street to High and from High street east to the lake shore, from which point a splendid view of Racine Bay and harbor may be obtained. While standing there I pointed out to Admiral Taylor North Point, and called his attention to the fact that on the south side of the point there was a large slough or creek which empties into the lake and where a splendid inland harbor could be constructed at a comparatively small cost. The party declined to drive up there, which was about a mile and a half distant, and inspect the premises, assigning as a reason that they had not sufficient time, but that they would return later in the season and devote as much time as was necessary in order to make a complete and thorough investigation of the site. On their first trip to this city there was no site inspected, and there was no site mentioned or offered excepting the "North Point" site. There positively was no site offered or inspected at the point where we stopped, it being in a thickly settled portion of the city. When I mentioned the North Point site to Admiral Taylor, he called the attention of H. H. Rousseau, the recorder of the board, to the statements which I had made and requested him to make a memorandum of the same, and promised to devote ample time for the inspection of the site when they returned later in the season.

On the 31st day of October, 1902, I received the following telegram from Lake Forest, Ill.: "R. M. Boyd: Naval Training Station Board will reach Racine about 3 o'clock to-day." We had carriages waiting at the Northwestern Depot at 3 o'clock. The members of the board were detained, and my recollection is did not reach the Northwestern Depot until about 4.30. It was represented to them that on account of the lateness of their arrival it would be impossible to reach the site at North Point and thoroughly inspect it, and they were requested to come over to the hotel, remain all night, and make the inspection the next morning. They declined to do so absolutely, for the reason that they were traveling on schedule time and must be in Sheboygan that night; that they were to inspect a site at Sheboygan early the next morning and leave for some other destination. The drive was made to North Point as fast as could possibly be done. When we arrived there the lamps were lighted in the farmhouses. We stopped a moment at the bridge that crosses the creek or slough on the south line of North Point, and then proceeded up to a point a little north of the light-house, and then drove on the highway to a point nearly to the west line of the proposed site. Turning there, we retraced our steps and returned to the city.

From a point near the light-house the electric lights in the city and the harbor lights were plainly visible. Upon this occasion I called the attention of the board to a site lying east of the highway on which we traveled going to North Point and beginning about three-quarters of a mile north of the city limits, and extending up to what is known as the "Three-mile road." The members of the board did not stop or alight from the carriages to inspect this site, but looked at it as they drove along the highway. It is known on their report as "North Point Site B." On this occasion is the only time that the attention of the board was called to that site, except through correspondence.

My commission expires February 4, 1906.

City Clerk Henry J. Schroff swears that on August 4, 1902, he was a member of the committee which accompanied the board to the lake bank at the east end of High street, from which point the site recommended to the board by the committee was pointed out as lying just west of North Point light-house; that no other site than the North Point site was referred to or recommended on that day; that after a few minutes spent in conversation the board were driven to the station, and that, to the best of his belief, not more than forty-five minutes were consumed from the arrival of the board in Racine until their departure. Mr. Schroff swears that on their second visit, the board being late in arriving, they were informed by the citizens' committee that to visit the site at such an hour would be doing injustice to it and to the citizens of Racine; that the board were invited to remain over night and view the site by daylight, but informed the citizens' committee that it would be impossible for them to do so, as they had to be in Milwaukee that evening to leave for some point farther north. Mr. Schroff adds that the board were then driven to North Point as speedily as possible, but arrived there when it was too dark to make an inspection of the site.

The affidavit of Mr. Schroff is as follows:

CITY CLERK'S OFFICE,
Racine, Wis., February 25, 1904.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, Racine County, ss:

Henry J. Schroff, city clerk of the city of Racine, deposeth and says that on or about August 4, 1902, he was one of the said officers which received the committee which was appointed by the naval board to select a site for a naval training school on the west shore of Lake Michigan, said committee being composed of Admiral Taylor, Lieutenant-Commander Winslow, and H. H. Rousseau.

The said committee on their arrival were taken in carriages from Hotel Racine across Main Street Bridge, up North Main street to High street, east on High street to the lake bank, from which point they viewed the Racine Harbor, and the site recommended to the board by the citizens' committee was pointed out to them as lying just west of Wind Point light-house. No other site than the one referred to was recommended outside of the one just mentioned. That possibly ten or fifteen minutes were spent in conversation, after which the visiting party were taken west on High street, south on Milwaukee avenue, west on State street to the Northwestern Depot, where the citizens' committee bade farewell to the visiting committee, and were promised that said board would return to Racine at a later date and give the proposition a thorough consideration. That to the best of my belief no more than forty-five minutes were consumed from the time the said committee arrived until their departure.

That on the second visit the committee were several hours late in arriving, and were informed by the citizens' committee that to go and view the site at so late an hour in the day would be doing an injustice to the site proposed and to the citizens of Racine. They were requested to remain overnight and view the site in daylight. The citizens' committee, however, were informed that that would be impossible, as the said visiting committee must be in Milwaukee that evening to leave for some point farther north.

Under these conditions the citizens' committee with the visiting committee drove out to North Point, and the trip was made as speedily as the horses could possibly make it. The horses were of a superior quality to those usually found in a first-class livery stable. In this respect there was no time lost.

It was too dark to see sufficiently to do justice to the citizens of Racine or the committee appointed to select a naval training school site for the United States Government.

[SEAL.] WM. H. ARMSTRONG,
Clerk Municipal Court Racine County, Notary Public

Mr. Speaker, there is one other bit of evidence of great significance to which I wish now to refer. It is a letter indicating with certainty that the board had selected the Lake Bluff site before it made its second visit to Racine. I have here a copy of the letter which was written by the president of the board on October 24, 1902, one week prior to their last visit to Racine. I procured it at the United States Geological Survey.

The letter is as follows:

BOARD OF GREAT LAKES NAVAL TRAINING STATION,
NAVY DEPARTMENT ANNEX,
Washington, D. C., October 24, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of the board's letter, No. 275, of September 29, to the Department, and of a letter from the Comptroller of the Treasury of August 15, forwarded with the Department's first indorsement of October 17; and, with the Department's approval, to request that the authority of the honorable the Secretary of the Interior be asked for the United States Geological Survey to make, if convenient, a topographical survey of a tract of land about 360 acres, south of Waukegan, Ill., shown on the inclosed blue print, and referred to in the inclosed letters, all expenses in connection therewith to be defrayed by the Navy Department from the special appropriation at its disposal for this purpose, and in the method outlined in the inclosed letter, if the latter is approved by the Department. The survey is desired as soon as possible. Five-foot contours should be shown on the map, which should be drawn on a scale of not less than 500 feet to an inch. The cleared and wooded portions should be distinguished, and it is also desired to have the map show the location of the 10, 20, and 30 foot contours below the level of the lake surface in front of this property.

Very respectfully,

H. C. TAYLOR,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy, Senior Member of Board.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Navy Department.

The request contained in this letter was complied with. Experts from the Office of the Geological Survey made a topographical survey of the Lake Bluff site. This survey was drawn to a scale, and showed contours of the site and of those below the level of the lake surface in front of it, the clear and wooded portions, and all other details. It was not an ordinary survey, but a topographical survey made by Government experts. These experts informed me that it was the only survey made by that Office upon the request of this board.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one conclusion to be drawn from this letter and the making of this survey, and that is that the Lake Bluff site had been selected at least one week before the board last visited the city of Racine. Concerning this I have no further comments to make.

When this subject of a site for a Great Lakes naval training station was before the House, in February last, I called attention to the fact that, in November, 1902, soon after the board's last visit to Racine, this topographical survey was made of the Lake Bluff site. I did not then know that the board had ordered it a week before they came to Racine. But such, however, is the fact, and it is also a fact that this is the only topographical survey they did order.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. In the report made by Admiral Taylor, I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, if you will extend my time——

Mr. FOSS (continuing). That he expresses his thanks to Charles B. Walcott, Director United States Geological Survey, for charts and for making topographical surveys of different tracts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but I have not heard of such a survey of any different tract being ordered by this board. On the contrary, at the Office of the Geological Survey I was informed that the board had ordered no survey other than that of the Lake Bluff site.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Racine do not object because the Lake Bluff site was recommended by the board; they object because the splendid site on North Point was never inspected by the board. They feel that nothing can take the place of a thorough inspection by daylight; and therefore I hope that the House will concur in the Senate amendment providing for the appointment of a new board and for an impartial determination of this important question.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, these documents, affidavits, and transcripts of letters which I hold in my hand, and to which I have made reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman has nine minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I should like the gentleman from Illinois to use some of his time, if he will; and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON].

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, as a member of the Naval Committee, that I have not the slightest prejudice in favor of either one of these two sites that are in controversy or any other site that may be in controversy for this naval training station.

The plain proposition that confronts this House is this: The naval service demands, or at least it is very desirable, that there should be established a naval training station on the Great Lakes. I have the greatest sympathy with the gentlemen representing the different districts that desire to secure this institution within their limits. But as Members of this House the plain duty of the House is to establish the work and to establish a training station.

Another proposition that I want to submit to the House is simply this: That the responsible head in all matters pertaining to naval affairs is the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy was a former Member of this House. His ability is unquestioned; his integrity can not be denied; his fairness is universally recognized. This amendment that has been proposed by the gentleman from Illinois proposes to leave it to this responsible head.

Moreover, it substantially, under present conditions, under the action of the board, gives the station to the district of the gentleman from Wisconsin. Why do I say that? For the reason that this statement cuts down the price that is to be paid for this land to $250 an acre, the price substantially asked at all these places except the one at Lake Bluff. At Lake Bluff the price demanded is $900 an acre, and you can very readily see if the amendment before the House is adopted that the Lake Bluff proposition will not be considered unless the owner of the land agrees to take the price specified in the amendment, or the people of the vicinity make up the difference between the price provided for in the amendment and what is demanded for it.

I insist that after the ten years' service of the gentleman the chairman of this committee, after the report of the naval officers, whether there be a disagreement or not as to what they have reported or as to their action, I insist that it is fair that the Secretary of the Navy be permitted to settle this matter and settle it at once. These reports, these delays, the appointment of an additional board involves additional expense, simply to determine the matter of a site. The Secretary of the Navy will have full authority if he sees injustice has been done by the board to make a personal investigation of this matter, if he sees fit—a thing which the President of the United States under the very circumstances can not do. I say the Secretary is the responsible head, and he can make a personal examination if he desires.

These gentlemen who represent other sites will not be cut off. They can make their appeal to the Secretary of the Navy. And I insist that common sense and reason alike dictate that we should leave this matter to the Secretary of the Navy, who is the responsible head and who can make a personal examination. He will be limited in the price which is to be given for this station. Therefore I hope the House, without extending this contest—which seems to me, without any unkind feeling or unkind criticism, is rapidly degenerating into an unseemly one between representatives of the different sites—will settle the matter. I hope the House will take the common-sense view of it, as I think I do, and leave it to the Secretary of the Navy, limiting the price, so that he will get this land reasonably and get this training station at once.

Mr. FOSS. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Michigan.

[Mr. BISHOP addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. FOSS. I yield three minutes to my colleague from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. The establishment of a naval training station on the Great Lakes is to my mind an extremely important and worthy measure. I have studied the question carefully, and I believe it should be entered upon at the earliest possible moment. We have various scientific corps in our Navy—bureaus engaged in the designing and arming of our ships—we have a magnificent school at Annapolis for the training and education of our officers; and now that we have offered an opportunity by legislation to every man in the service to reach the top, enabling a "jackie" to become an admiral, a thorough training of all recruits from early youth is a necessity. We ought to afford them every facility to acquire the training necessary to attain the highest usefulness in the American Navy. Hundreds of millions will be required for even a moderately strong navy. It requires but two or three millions to build stations and auxiliaries to train the real bulwark of the nation—"the man behind the gun."

I am free to say that the enlisting and training of the raw recruit has not received the attention it deserves. We seek the best material possible, and having obtained it, the recruit should be thoroughly trained from the beginning up, by which he may acquire the discipline, the traditions of the service, the esprit de corps, which go to make the service efficient as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that this contention—somewhat unseemly, it seems to me—should have arisen between the aspirants for the location of such a station. The board appointed to investigate the various locations for a site was composed of some of the ablest and most conscientious officers of the United States Navy.

The names of Rear Admiral Taylor, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation; Commander Winslow, and Civil Engineer Rousseau are sufficient guaranty of a fair and judicious report and fully enlighten this House as to the merits of the proposition involved. They have decided that Lake Bluff was first choice. I agree with them. I trust that the House will adopt it, but in order——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I would add, Mr. Speaker, that the provision of the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee to limit the price to be paid to $250 an acre meets any possible objection that there might be. I do not know that Lake Bluff will be selected under those conditions, but I think the opportunity should be afforded. One word more. It seems that the gentleman from Wisconsin has stated that this board did not have sufficient information; that in some instances perhaps they failed to visit the spots indicated. Now, I beg leave to submit an extract from the report, which certainly proves the contrary:

20. It gives the board great pleasure to testify to the valuable cooperation and assistance it received and for the attention shown during its travels by all with whom it came in contact, including members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, who assisted in procuring information desired, and the members of the local committees and chambers of commerce, who offered every facility to the board in furtherance of this work, whom it gave the board great pleasure to meet and for whose assistance it returns its sincere thanks; also to Rear-Admiral George C. Remey, United States Navy, chairman of the Light-House Board; Capt. Andrew Dunlap, United States Navy; Capt. Edward S. Sheen, United States Navy; Commander Lucien Young, United States Navy, light-house inspectors of the tenth, eleventh, and ninth districts, respectively, for the use of their tenders and for their knowledge of localities and valuable advice; to Brig. Gen. George L. Gillespie, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and to the officers of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, in charge of river and harbor improvements on the Great Lakes, including Maj. J. H. Willard, Maj. William H. Bixby, Maj. Thomas W. Symons, Maj. Dan C. Kingman, Maj. J. C. Warren, Capt. D. D. Gaillard, and Capt. Charles Keller, and to their assistants, for their cordial cooperation and for charts, estimates, plans, and other valuable information and for the use of the tenders that they kindly proffered; the commandants of the naval training stations at San Francisco and Newport, Rear-Admiral Henry Glass, United States Navy; Capt. W. W. Meade, United States Navy, and Capt. J. J. Nunleer, United States Navy, for plans and full information regarding the stations under their command and of the system of training apprentices, as described hereinafter; to Charles D. Walcott, esq., Director of the United States Geological Survey, for charts and for making topographical surveys of different tracts; to Hon. W. R. Merriam, the Director of the Census, for statistics regarding population; to Willis L. Moore, esq., Chief of the Weather Bureau, for temperature data and statistics regarding rainfall and prevalence of ice; to Rear-Admiral George Brown, United States Navy; to Mr. B. R. McCullough; to these and to many other individuals the board is under many obligations.

Respectfully submitted.

H. C. TAYLOR,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy.
C. McR. WINSLOW,
Commander, United States Navy.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Civil Engineer H. H. Rousseau, a member of the board, concurs in this report, but is now on duty at the Mare Island yard, and therefore not present to sign the report.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I contend that it would be useless to appoint another board. The amendment proposed by the Senate proposes a political board, in effect. It says a new board shall be appointed. It does not state it shall be composed of army officers or naval officers or experts of any kind, and we all know that during a Presidential year it is more than likely that such appointments might perhaps be controlled by political motives; but be that as it may, another board would be a useless expense. If the Taylor board was incompetent to make a proper selection or recommendation, I think it would be a waste of time and money to seek another, and I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment of the chairman of this committee will be adopted.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY].

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman if he can not yield me five minutes?

Mr. FOSS. No; I can not. There are others who want to speak.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] for the additional reason to those that have been stated that it would further commit us to the establishment of a great training station on the Great Lakes. We now have three training stations—one on the Pacific coast, one at Narragansett Bay on the Rhode Island coast, and the other at Norfolk. The enlisted force of the Navy is limited to 32,000 men. Testimony shows that one-half of these men reenlist and, therefore, need no training. The new men therefore amount only to an average of 16,000 in four years, which is 4,000 a year.

The training stations we already have are more than ample to take care of these men. In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, if we are to have a training station, I submit that the Great Lake, is not the place for it. Under our treaty with Great Britain we are not allowed to have a war ship on the Great Lakes, and the men who are enlisted in the Navy are supposed to serve upon battle ships, armored and protected cruisers, not one of which is allowed on the Great Lakes. Why stop these enlisted men at Chicago or at any other point on the Great Lakes to be trained? Why not take them to the place where they can see, at least, the ships upon which they are to serve? It seems to me a ridiculous proposition to stop these men in the interior of the country and within a few hours of the place where they ought to see service and where they can be trained upon ships upon which they are to serve.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RIXEY. I will ask the gentleman to yield me just one minute more.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, for both these reasons I am opposed to this proposition and to the proposition which will follow it, to be made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS]; but, as between the different boards, if a training station is to be established upon the Great Lakes, then I see no reason why we should not stand by the board, which has already made its report. As I have stated, I am opposed to this proposition because there is no need to establish a training station on the Great Lakes unless we expect to train our men as admirals are said to be made, "by keeping them at their desks and never going to sea."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD].

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House on a previous occasion, one thing was conclusively evidenced, and that is this, that the report made by the board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy was satisfactory to nobody except to the people of Lake Bluff, and another thing was that the report could be successfully defended by nobody in the world.

On the question of population, if that board had extended the radius 15 miles, it would have reversed its conclusions, and that was perfectly evident from the examination of the report itself. Not only that, but they maintain recruiting stations a hundred miles outside of the radius which was prescribed for their guidance in coming to a conclusion. The report can be defended by nobody, and now the proposition of the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS], as indicated by his proposed amendment, is to place the whole matter in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, who is already committed to this report. He is committed to it in his letter which he wrote in December, 1902, and he is also committed to it in his report which he wrote in June, 1903.

It will be remembered that the provision went out in the House on a point of order. Practically the same provision was inserted in the Senate committee, and when it came up in the Senate, after full debate, it was supported by nobody except one of the Senators from Illinois. This report, I repeat, can not be successfully defended here or anywhere. It eliminates in an unfair way every portion of the Great Lakes except the southern portion of Lake Michigan. There is no reason for doing this, as appears, I contend, from the report itself. Now, is it fair to recommit this question to anybody who is already committed with reference to it? That is all there is in the situation now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, there are very weighty reasons why the motion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] should not prevail, and, therefore, why we should not concur in the Senate amendment. There are equally weighty reasons why the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS], in charge of the bill, should prevail and why we should concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as offered by him. Now, this whole matter presents itself to us in four phases. First, there is the personal phase; second, the phase of locality; third, the interests of the Navy, and, in the fourth place, the honor and dignity of this House. It is unfortunate that anything in this discussion heretofore has seemed to reflect upon the honor and integrity of my good, lifelong friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. I am very sure that he will absolve me from any belief in any of these insinuations even if I oppose his motion.

Nothing that has been said or done, presented on the floor of this House or in writing, has in any way shaken my confidence, esteem, or affection for the gentleman, or my belief in his honor, integrity, and ability. And I think, Mr. Speaker, that my opinion is shared by all the Members of this House on both sides of this Chamber.

Now, there is this phase of the question in regard to locality. I think the people of this country are universally in favor of locating training stations throughout the country for training and preparing men for the Navy. I do not agree with the opinion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY]. I believe that we ought not only to have a naval training station on the Lakes, but we ought to have a naval station on the Gulf, on the Mississippi, and in the far West. The people in the interior and on the Gulf and upon the Pacific coast should in this way be more directly interested in this branch of our service.

These two phases—the personal phase and the phase of locality—ought to be dismissed in our consideration of this measure. We ought to look upon it first as to the interest of the Navy; and looking at it from that point of view, I am sure we do not want to concur in the Senate amendment. What is that amendment? We want to clearly understand the history of this matter. Some years ago a naval board was appointed, composed of three members—Taylor, Winslow, and Rousseau. That board made report, recommending the consideration of sites in this order: First, Lake Bluff; second, Racine; third, Muskegon.

One very good reason why the members of this board did not go more frequently to the site in the district of the gentleman from Wisconsin is that they knew from even a cursory examination that that was one of the best sites on the lake, and they recommend it as No. 2.

Now, the President and the Secretary of the Navy have the benefit of the report of this commission. All the researches that this commission has made are at the disposal of the President and the Secretary of the Navy.

Now, what is the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee? It is simply that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to purchase a site. It gives him his choice of all the Lakes, and it limits the price to $250 an acre, the price at which I understand the owners of the land in the district of the gentleman from Wisconsin are willing to sell.

Mr. SOUTHARD rose.

Mr. BOUTELL. I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that owing to the shortness of the time I must decline to yield.

If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois should be concurred in, we shall close this matter at once, and the purchase can be made. The President and the Secretary of the Navy have full information. Now, in the face of these facts, what is this amendment offered by the Senate that we are asked to concur in? This amendment proposes to appoint another board, not of naval officers, but of men not living on the Great Lakes. And what are they to do? After they have gone all over these Lakes they are to report their conclusions to Congress. If their conclusions do not adopt the Racine site as No. 1, then must we have another board of three members? Or if the Put in Bay site is not recommended as No. 1, is there to be another board?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FOSS. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the wisdom of this House in concurring in this Senate amendment would be equal only to the wisdom of an individual Member who when he had ordered his dinner and was prepared to eat it should ask the waiter to remove it on the ground that he had not brought the viands in the right dishes, and then kept on that sort of performance until he was starved to death.

Sir, we have the power to have this site purchased at once. Under the Senate amendment there is no knowing when we shall ever have the chance to purchase the site.

There is another reason why we ought to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin and sustain the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, and that is that the plan for a naval station on the Lakes originated in the House of Representatives, and the commission heretofore appointed was appointed under the bill which originated in the House. Now, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we accept this amendment of the Senate we are simply demonstrating the abject pusillanimity of this House in dealing with Senate amendments. I think, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that every reason of sound judgment should lead us to adopt unanimously the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has eight minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has six minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to proceed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] has made a persuasive speech, but it does not meet the issue. In reply to his objection to the appointment of another board, I desire to say that there ought to be just as many boards appointed as are necessary to get one board that will visit the sites that are offered. That is the issue.

Did the board visit the Racine site? No! The affidavit of Mayor Higgins, the affidavit of Mr. Boyd, the affidavit of Mr. Walker, the affidavit of Mr. Schroff, my own letters written at the time, (the letterpress copies of which are here), complaining of the fact that the board did not visit it, show beyond controversy that on the first occasion they did not go nearer than a mile and a half of the site, and that on the second occasion only two members came and that they did not reach the site until after dark, when lamps were lighted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have not any time. I hope the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wanted to ask if the Secretary of the Navy, under this proposition, would not have the same authority that the board had?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Before this subject first came up for debate here I called on the Secretary of the Navy, at the suggestion of the Wisconsin delegation, and inquired whether, if the matter were left entirely to him, he would inspect the Wisconsin sites. In reply the Secretary said:

> I do not want such a responsibility put upon me. I am too busy to go. I am not as well informed as is the board, and you could hardly expect me to overrule the board which I myself appointed.

Of course he could not be expected to overrule the board which he himself appointed. Nobody knows that better than do the gentlemen who are here urging that this subject be left to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. TAWNEY. Could he not appoint another agent?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In view of the facts, common justice demands that a new board be appointed by an absolutely impartial authority, one that has not prejudged the case at all and that is under obligations to nobody.

Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that the limitation of $250 per acre ought to carry it to Lake Bluff, provided the people there contribute the amount of money that is necessary.

But, Mr. Speaker, evidence has been submitted showing that the glucose factories and other great factories at Waukegan pour vast quantities of chemicals and refuse into the lake, which are cast up along the shore, and that residents of Lake Forest, farther away from these factories than is Lake Bluff, complained of the odor coming from this decaying and offensive material. Yet the board prefer Lake Bluff, although they declare that the site should have a good bathing beach.

The board say in their report that a thousand dollars an acre is not too much to pay. The Lake Bluff site was held at $900 per acre. Therefore they mean Lake Bluff and nothing else. After their last examination more than a year passed before they made a final report. They made their last examination of a site about the 1st of November, 1902. In that month they made a preliminary report; but they made no final report until December, 1903, a whole year later. Why did they hold this matter up? There is only one answer, and the House knows what that is.

Mr. Speaker, in the Senate, after a thorough debate and after photographs of the Lake Bluff site were exhibited, there was but one vote against this amendment, and that vote was by a Senator from Illinois. If the land at Lake Bluff could be bought for $250 an acre the training station ought not to be located on it. It would cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to build a harbor there.

Mr. FOSS. Have you a harbor at Racine, where your site is?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We have one now about a mile and a half nearer the North Point site than Waukegan Harbor is to the Lake Bluff site. Moreover, the proposed new harbor at North Point would cost much less to complete than the one proposed at Lake Bluff, and when completed would be a much better harbor. The mouth of the new harbor would be on the south side of North Point, which projects into the lake, forming an absolutely complete protection from northeast storms. Lake Bluff Harbor would be without the slightest natural protection from the terrific northeast storms, which sweep 200 or 300 miles down the lake.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment proposes to have an impartial board appointed to visit and inspect sites, to select the one most suitable, and to report to Congress what it will cost, and also what amount will be necessary to construct a harbor and the necessary lake shore protection. We have no such information about the Lake Bluff site. We ought to have such information before voting to buy any site.

The people of Racine do not complain because the board gave the decision to Lake Bluff. We complain because the North Point site has never been inspected, although it is a better site than the one at Lake Bluff and would cost less than one-third as much money. That is our complaint, and this attempt to put us in the childish attitude of being merely envious because the selection went elsewhere is unjust and unworthy of the gentlemen who make it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that a board was appointed nearly two years ago, and made a careful investigation of the Lakes from Buffalo to Duluth. The site which the gentleman speaks of, Racine, was thoroughly investigated by the board, and the board have reported to the Secretary of the Navy, who sent a letter to me stating that the site complained of by the gentleman as not having been investigated was investigated to the satisfaction of the board.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit one interruption?

Mr. FOSS. No; I have not time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One member of the board signs that.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; the recorder of the board, Mr. Winslow. This is what he says for the board:

> The board again visited Racine in October. Rear-Admiral Taylor, the president of the board, was unable to accompany the board on this visit. The board arrived at Racine late in the afternoon, and was there met in carriages by a committee in accordance with previous arrangements and driven to North Point. Owing to the fact that the carriage horses were not equal to their load, considerable time was wasted in the journey from the railway station to the site.
> Nevertheless the board reached the site in ample time to have sufficient daylight to see the site and to determine all the points the board had in mind. The board drove over much of the site, and as the site was for the most part cleared land the time was ample for the inspection. Had the board not been fully satisfied as to the physical characteristics, it would have waited and made a second visit the following day or stopped at Racine on their return from their trip to the northward.

And then the board go on further and say there are as many charts, maps, etc., in connection with the Racine site as any other.

Now, gentlemen, does it not seem that it is rather late in the day, after this board was appointed some year and a half or two years ago, and after these investigations were made——

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FOSS. No; I can not yield.

Mr. BAKER. This is the second time I have asked; yes, the fifth time I have asked.

Mr. FOSS. Does it not occur to you, gentlemen, that it is rather late in the day to come in here, nearly two years afterwards, and protest about it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I protested immediately, in these letters; at the time.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can not yield; I have only a few minutes more time. Now, nobody else all along the lakes has complained about not having an investigation. On the contrary, my friend from Indiana, Judge CRUMPACKER, and also the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BISHOP] have risen on this floor and said that the investigation was thorough and that the only thing they complained of was the judgment of the board—which was perfectly natural, because they would have liked the board to select their particular sites.

Now, I ask, Mr. Speaker, how long must we wait? A year ago the Secretary of the Navy sent up a provision asking us to appropriate for this naval training station. He sent it here and these same captious objections appeared, not only in this body but in another body. "How long, how long, O Lord," how long must we wait to satisfy the qualms of supersensitive gentlemen?

We are building these great ships. We want men trained for the service, and yet we will not have them if we deliberately put in this provision for a new board to go over this whole matter. What kind of a board is it? It is a board to be appointed by the President, of three members. It does not say it shall be appointed "by and with the consent and advice of the Senate." Ah, it is not necessary to say it. That advice might be freely given. I do not know. But it is a political year. Perchance it might be a political board. We do not want to embarrass the President of the United States at such a time. But what is this board to do? It has to go back and report and report and report, and all the time the naval boy is standing on the shore waiting to be trained. Is that going to be the action of this House? With another report you will have more confusion than now. You would have two reports—aye, three reports—and "confusion worse confounded."

Now, if you are going to establish a naval training station, establish it. My proposition is this: They selected the best site in my district—Lake Bluff. The land is worth $900 an acre. I have come in and said by my amendment that the Secretary of the Navy shall not pay one dollar more than $250 an acre—the price of the Racine site. Does not that show my fairness in the consideration of this matter? Not only that, but we propose to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to say whether it shall be at Put in Bay or any other place; and let us have a harmonious jubilee.

If he should say that it goes to Put in Bay, I will say I am glad of it. If it goes to Racine, I will say I am glad of it. If it goes to Muskegon, I will say that I am glad of it. Or if it goes anywhere else, I will make no captious objection, because I tell you candidly that I care comparatively little where this naval station shall be located as compared with the fact that we need it, and we must have it for the Navy, for the training of our men in order to have them trained when our ships, which we are building now in large numbers, shall be finally constructed.

Mr. Speaker, I will say the gentleman has said this was unanimously passed by the Senate—it was a unanimous consent of the Senate.

Ah, we heard that familiar sound before. We heard——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSS. We heard it in the dying hours of the old Congress; we have heard it in this——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield. I ask you, gentlemen, here and now let us vote down this Senate amendment. This is, must be, and ought to be considered, not on unanimous consent, but on its merits. The American Navy has the right to demand it, and the American people have the right to demand it. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has put in my mouth a statement which would amount to a falsification of the record. I did not say the Senate passed this by unanimous consent or anything of the kind.

Mr. FOSS. Well, I understood the gentleman to say that the Senate passed this unanimously.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; I said after the bill had been debated it passed it, with no one voting against it except one Senator from Illinois, possibly two.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to know if it would be in order at this time to propose an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, which he proposes to the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question.

Mr CRUMPACKER. Well, I desire to ask the gentleman if he will not withhold that motion until I propose an amendment? I do not care to debate it. I simply wish to have it read and voted upon.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, this motion we are voting upon is the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to recede and concur, and I hope it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the previous question on both the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin and his motion?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question——

Mr. FOSS. No; I simply demand the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the House do recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Accordingly the House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 108.

So the motion to recede and concur was rejected.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the other motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question on his motion that the House do recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I now ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will not withhold his motion until I propose an amendment?

Mr. FOSS. No; I think we have already had a full discussion of this matter.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Accordingly the House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 91.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 126, answered "present" 12, not voting 123, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 18.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. I call for the reading of the next amendment—amendment No. 35.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words:
"But the appropriations provided for said colliers shall not be used unless one of said colliers be built in a navy-yard of the United States."
And insert the following:
"Said colliers shall be built in navy-yards, one on the Pacific and one on the Atlantic coast, the same to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] to make a motion.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 35 and concur in the same.

Mr. FOSS. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana twenty minutes.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL of California. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment under discussion provides that the two colliers mentioned in the naval appropriation bill shall be constructed in the navy-yards, one on the Pacific and the other on the Atlantic coast. In the time that has been allotted to me I shall confine myself to a brief statement of the most cogent reasons for building ships in the public yards. In the first place, we can do the same work in the navy-yards for less money. This is not a mere theory or conjecture, but an absolute fact that has been demonstrated by experience. Let me cite you just one instance in support of this assertion. In 1903 the Government decided to convert the transport Grant into a dredge for use at the mouth of the Columbia River.

The Navy Department called for bids, and the lowest figure submitted by private contractors was that of the Risdon Iron Works, of San Francisco, for $265,000. The authorities at the Mare Island Navy-Yard requested the privilege of submitting a bid, which was granted. The navy-yard's figure was $235,000, or $30,000 less than that of the Risdon Iron Works. The work was given to the yard and was actually completed at a cost of only $181,985.25, a saving of $83,014.75 on the lowest private bid that had been received. In other words, the Government saved over 31 per cent by having the work done in one of its own yards. [Applause.] The quality of the work done by the Mare Island Navy-Yard in this case is best shown by the following letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 25, 1904.

SIR: Referring to the work performed by the Navy Department at the Mare Island (Cal.) Navy-Yard in the conversion of the former army transport Grant (now named the Chinook) into a seagoing hydraulic dredge, the Department is just in receipt of a report from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, stating that since her completion the Chinook has been at work, during favorable weather, at the mouth of the Columbia River, Washington, on the Columbia River bar, and has been tested sufficiently to demonstrate the care and efficiency with which the work at the navy-yard has been executed, and indicating that the boat will prove a valuable acquisition to the plant of the Engineer Department. The War Department, therefore, desires to express its appreciation of the action of the Navy Department in undertaking this work, and the ability and zeal displayed by the officers of Mare Island Navy-Yard in carrying it out.

Very respectfully,
ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Assistant Secretary of War.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Do not these facts completely refute the repeated argument that better work and better prices are secured to the Government by having its vessels of war built by private yards? Again, there are other inestimable advantages to be attained by the policy of building some of our ships in the navy-yards. It keeps up the efficiency of our yards: it maintains a high standard of workmanship and general equipment; it guarantees us prompt high-class work in the hour of emergency and need. Every argument in favor of a greater navy is an argument in favor of greater navy-yards. Our pride in the latter should not be less than our pride in the former. We ought to make it a part of the general policy of our Government to construct a portion of its ships. In this way we become a competitor of the private contractor, and thereby guard ourselves against the extortionate bids of any shipbuilding trust or combine. Once let it be seen that we intend to pursue this course and the danger of a "pool" will be overcome and reasonable contracts can be made for the work that is let to bids. England, Germany, France, and Italy have long since adopted this plan, about one-half their ships being built in public yards, and the results have fully demonstrated the wisdom of the policy.

We ought to hasten the day when the two navy-yards on the Pacific coast shall be able not only to repair our largest battle ships, but to construct new ones. Prior to the sixteenth century the Mediterranean Sea was the center of the world's maritime activities. With the exploration and settlement of America the theater of the world's commercial and naval contests was shifted to the Atlantic. But now the Pacific is the cynosure of all eyes, and upon its broad bosom must be fought out, by diplomacy or by force of arms, the great problems of the twentieth century. Does any thinking man believe that with our commercial interests in the Orient and our possessions over sea America is destined to play a light part in the settlement of these momentous questions? Let us hope that our participation in the affairs of the Far East may always be attended with peace; that our Navy may be persuasive only in its deep silence rather than destructive in its mighty power; but come what may, let us begin now to strengthen our navy-yards as we strengthen our Navy, so that our rapidly increasing fleets, in seasons of peace and in seasons of war, may have yards at ready hand in a state of constant preparedness either to repair or to rebuild.

There is another phase of this question that demands our earnest attention. The moneys expended in the construction of a ship in a navy-yard are distributed among a large number of people. It means more happy homes, more of the comforts of life for more of the people, more contentment, more prosperity. It means that many shall enjoy what otherwise a few may hoard. It means much to the laboring men of America—the men who toil for a daily wage and live by the sweat of their brow. To them it means better hours, better conditions of labor, better pay. And if we are now in favor of these things, if we really intend to act for the greatest good to the greatest number, let us right here and now take advantage of this opportunity to effect so much good; let us vote for a policy that will ultimately bring manifold blessings to many citizens of our land and at the same time bring profits to our Government. I sincerely hope that this occasion will not only witness the rallying of the old friends of the navy-yards, but will also mark the conversion of many others to our cause. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, this Senate amendment provides that both colliers shall be built in navy-yards. The House will recall that we provided when the bill was here that one collier should be built in a navy-yard. This amendment provides that both shall be built in navy-yards, one on the Atlantic and one on the Pacific coast.

I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Navy which explains the situation so far as the Navy Department is concerned. It says:

> In response to your verbal request I beg to advise you of the necessity of making some specific appropriation for equipping navy-yards for the construction of vessels should the Senate provision with relation to the building of two colliers in navy-yards be concurred in by the House.

Then the Secretary goes on and states that it will be necessary to appropriate $175,000 for each yard in order to put the yards in such a condition that they can build these colliers. That means, first, the preparation of a suitable slip. We have no navy-yard in the country where there is a suitable slip, except the New York yard, where we are building the battle ship Connecticut.

Mr. BELL of California. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. In just a moment. We must have two things. First, we must provide a slip, and then we must provide an overhead crane. These two things, the slip and the crane, will cost $175,000 for each yard.

Mr. WYNN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. WYNN. Is it not a fact that when this appropriation of $175,000 is expended for the construction of the crane and the slip, that it becomes a permanent addition to the plant for future use.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, yes; it will be a permanent addition to the plant.

Mr. WYNN. And that it could be used for any future ship-building in those yards.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; it could be used at any future time.

Mr. HERMANN. Is it permanent and durable?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; it is permanent and durable.

Mr. BELL of California. Then the expenditure of that money would go toward a permanent improvement. Now, is it not a fact that this year in the naval appropriation bill, without any reference to this Senate amendment, the following large sums were appropriated for various navy-yards in the country: New York, $371,500; League Island, $712,970; Washington, $575,000; Charlestown, $880,500; Norfolk, $1,159,000; while for Mare Island, which is one of the best yards in America to-day, we only appropriated $260,000?

Now, then, I want to ask you the further question. That appropriation which may become necessary, about which there is now some doubt, can be met at the next session of Congress in ample time if these colliers go to the navy-yards.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, yes. I am giving, as far as the committee is concerned, the facts entirely as they come to the committee from the Navy Department, and after that leaving it to the judgment of the House. If the House sees fit to concur in the Senate amendment, all well and good; or if they decide otherwise, all well and good. It is a matter entirely with the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman from Illinois opposed to building these two colliers in the navy-yards?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, I do not know that I am opposed to it particularly; only I think it is going to cost more money to build them in navy-yards than in private yards. Speaking generally, we are building a battle ship in the navy-yard at New York and comparing the cost of its construction with the cost of a similar ship constructed in the navy-yard, and we are trying to find out the difference between the two. Now, the House had this provision, which was on the bill, that one of these colliers should be built in the navy-yard and one at a private yard, so that we might thereby find out the difference in the cost of building these colliers. Now, the Senate put in this provision and say, "Let us build both of them in navy-yards."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that the Government is making its own smokeless powder, and making a great many of our firearms, and making them better and cheaper than when they had them made by private individuals? Is not that why Congress is having them made by the Government?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know how much cheaper they are making the smokeless powder. They claim to make it a little cheaper.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not Mr. Secretary Long send two communications to Congress asking it to give him money to build this factory; and did we not build it; and are we not now making our own powder?

Mr. FOSS. The Government never takes into consideration the amount invested in the plant, but the private individual takes that into consideration.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But the Government owns the improvement. The Government was held up during the Spanish war by this powder trust, and that is one of the reasons why this plant was established, and it has worked admirably.

Mr. FOSS. Is there any other discussion on it?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, the naval bill of this year as it passed the House had provision for one battle ship, two armored cruisers, three protected cruisers, three scout cruisers, and two colliers. The colliers are the smallest ships. The Senate provision provides that these two smallest ships shall be built in two of the navy-yards of the country. There is not one of the important navy-yards but what can take care of these two smaller ships. The best constructors who were in the Navy two or three years ago, including Admiral Hichborn, had recommended that there should be navy-yard construction upon the ground that the Government could construct as cheaply and as well, and that the Government should keep a trained force on hand all the time.

Now, when the repair of a ship is completed in a navy-yard the mechanics are discharged, and when another ship goes in to be repaired it is difficult to get these men back. If you have navy-yard construction they can keep the mechanics all the time. This reasoning is justified by the facts. On one occasion, two or three years ago, this House provided that a battle ship, an armored cruiser, and a protected cruiser should be built in the navy-yards of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in foreign countries every great naval power builds a portion of its ships in its navy-yards. Two years ago Great Britain was building eight battle ships and a number of cruisers in her navy-yards. Russia, France, and Germany are also building a portion of their ships in their navy-yards.

Now, as to the question of this expenditure of $175,000 to make the necessary improvements, I can not understand that. Ten years ago one of the battle ships and one of the cruisers—the battle ship Texas and the cruiser Raleigh—were built at the navy-yard at Norfolk. A battle ship and cruiser were built at other navy-yards. Since then we have spent many millions on the navy-yards, and I have no hesitation in stating that if they are not ready and prepared to build a little ship like this collier, then it must be the fault of the people who have expended the money. If the navy-yards are not prepared to build these small ships they should be put in condition, and that without delay.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the building of these small ships in the navy-yards will cost the Government any more than we are now paying. The fact is that the private contractors have about sixty vessels building for the Government, and it is reasonable to put some little of this work with the navy-yards. The Secretary in his letter calls attention to the fact that in the navy-yards he is already building at Portsmouth, N. H., a training brig, at Boston a training brig and a steam tug, and at New York a battle ship; but I want to call attention to the fact that there are yards south of New York, and it seems to me that a yard which ten years ago built a battle ship and a cruiser ought to be ready now to build this little collier. There is also an important yard upon the Pacific coast. The amendment of the Senate is so reasonable that it does seem to me that the House should with practical unanimity concur in the amendment and build these two colliers in the navy-yards.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAYTON. This clause provides that these two colliers shall be built in the navy-yards—that is, the Senate amendment provides that. The matter in controversy, as I understand it, is the question whether one or two shall be built in the navy-yards. Now the information comes from the Department that before any navy-yard in the country can build the colliers it will be necessary to enact an additional appropriation of from $150,000 to $175,000 to prepare and fix that yard to do that work. The parliamentary inquiry I want to ask is, whether it is within the power of the conferees to provide an extra appropriation under this Senate amendment, so that there will be no delay in the building of the colliers?

The SPEAKER. Well, that is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DAYTON. Well, I doubted whether the Speaker would regard it as such, but it is very important for us to understand the situation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can give his opinion——

Mr. DAYTON. I would very much like to have the Chair's opinion.

The SPEAKER (continuing). Upon the Senate amendment that will control the Chair's vote if it is necessary for him to vote, but that would not be answering his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I simply called attention to this fact because I have a desire that these colliers shall be built, because they are desired by the Department now.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair the gentleman has gotten in his speech. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] that the House do recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur therein.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Mr. FOSS. Division, Mr. Speaker!

The House accordingly divided; and there were—ayes 118, noes 57.

So the motion to concur was agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask if there are any other amendments?

The SPEAKER. This disposes of all the amendments.

Mr. FOSS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. FOSS, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio reports the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 308: "Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the bill (H. R. 7262) entitled 'A bill to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians in the State of New York, and extend the protection of the laws of the United States and of the State of New York over such Indians, and for other purposes'"—has had the same under consideration, and asks leave to report it with the recommendation that the House agree to it with the following amendment: Add after the word "purposes," in line 7, the following: "and after forty minutes of debate, to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing, such amendments as may be offered shall be voted on without debate, and thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to its final passage."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, this is a rule to bring forward a bill that was presented in the House some days ago under a motion to suspend the rules, and for which a very large majority of the House voted. If there is anyone who desires now to oppose this resolution I will yield to him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman some question in reference to the rules.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under this rule, will it be in order to offer amendments to the bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask unanimous consent that the rule may be read again.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I could not catch it as it was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the resolution be again reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman desire time in opposition to the rule?

Mr. SULZER. I do.

Mr. GROSVENOR. How much time?

Mr. SULZER. I would like to have ten minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will not the gentleman be content with five minutes?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this is the same bill which was before the House a few days ago on a motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] to suspend the rules and consider the bill. At that time I opposed the motion and the House, by an overwhelming vote, refused to suspend the rules and pass this bill. I explained the objects of the bill then, and I think the Members of this House now know about what this bill is intended to do. I have not the time to go into the matter fully at this moment, but the real purpose and purport of this bill is to take away the Indian lands in the State of New York and incidentally give a legal satus in court to what is known as the "Ogden land-grant claim." In other words, this bill divides up the lands of the Indians—fixes it so these lands will be sold to the white people and out of the proceeds $200,000 be paid to the assigns of the Ogden Land Company. That land grant claim has no more legal standing in court than the man in the moon. It is without merit and absolutely indefensible. The courts have so held over and over again.

The people of the State of New York who are disinterested in this matter are absolutely opposed to this bill. These lands are now owned by the Indians in common, and New York is opposed to taking away these Indian lands by a process of allotment, because if these lands are taken away from the Indians in this way it will only be a question of a few years when the lands will be sold, the money gone, and then the Indians will become a public charge on the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are the Indians opposed to the bill?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; they are unalterably opposed to the bill.

Now, the friends of the Indians in New York declare that much of the money that will be derived from the sale of these Indians' lands will go to pay the Ogden land-grant claim of $200,000 which has been pending in the courts for a number of years and which the courts over and over again have declared has no merit whatever. This entire proposition is unjust and unconscionable. The bill is a bad one in its every aspect and should be beaten in this House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULZER. Not just now. I only have a few minutes time. There is not, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the slightest reason why this House should waste its time considering a bill which has so little merit—an indefensible bill, which is opposed, in the first instance, by the Indians against whom it is aimed, and, secondly, by all of the people of the State of New York save a few who are to be benefited by it. These Indian lands are very valuable to-day. They contain great natural resources in oil and gas, and a considerable portion of the lands are leased to white people and to oil and gas speculators, who have much influence here.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And who are they?

Mr. SULZER. They are the people who are now leasing the lands from the Indians for homes, for gas and oil, and for other purposes, and are tired of paying rent, and who believe it will be to their material benefit to get a fee simple title. These people have much influence in western New York, in some parts of Pennsylvania, and, it must be apparent to the most unthinking, much influence in Congress. I could name some of them, but it is unnecessary. The trail of oil is all over this bill. Will it slip through? That is for you to say.

Mr. Speaker, I take it for granted that few Members have read this bill and are familiar with its provisions. It is a queer bill in more ways than one, and some of its sections would be ludicrous if it were not for the sad and deplorable results it is destined ultimately to accomplish. It provides, among other things, that these lands of the Indians shall be taken after allotment by condemnation proceedings for private use. Who ever heard of taking lands from an individual by condemnation proceedings for another individual?

The Constitution provides, I believe, that private property shall not be taken by condemnation proceedings except for a public purpose, and it is not contended here, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] will not urge, I hope, that the purpose contemplated in the bill is of a public character. It is entirely a question of a few individuals who know the value of these Indian lands, who know of the minerals, the oil, and the gas that they contain, and who want to get it all as easily as possible, and the easiest way is by the passage of this bill.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, in a word, is an outrage on these Indians—these wards of the nation. This bill has been condemned by the Historical Society of New York and by every friend of the Indian in the State. If we did our duty here, we should guard their interests and protect their rights instead of legislating them away. Pass this bill and we will pauperize them and rob them of their heritage—a crime against them and their posterity. These Indians to-day are self-supporting, happy, self-reliant, prosperous, and contented. They are educated; they maintain themselves; they have good homes, of which they are proud; they annoy no one, harm nobody; they have good farms, which they cultivate; they have good schools, and they are not now and never have been a burden upon the taxpayers of the State of New York nor the slightest expense to the taxpayers of this country.

Now, why in the name of honesty, justice, and common sense should we take away their lands by allotment, to soon be sold to a few individuals? Then the Indians, when the proceeds are spent, will sooner or later become a public charge.

I submit to this House that this rule to now consider and pass this bill in forty minutes is unjust and iniquitous, and I hope the adoption of the rule will be defeated.

Why all this haste? Why single out this bill from hundreds and hundreds of others—honest and meritorious bills—for hasty consideration? There must be some good reason for it. Will some Member tell us? No. Who will be benefited by it? That is the question. The land and the oil and the gas speculators? Yes; they will reap a golden harvest. The Ogden Land Company? Yes; it will ultimately get its $200,000 less the amounts it has assigned to the lobbyists who for years have been behind this legislation. These are some of the reasons. Should they appeal to us?

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULZER. Yes, for a question.

Mr. FINLEY. Have not the rights of this land company been adjudicated in the courts, and has not the decision been against them and in favor of the Indians?

Mr. SULZER. Yes, that is the fact; such a finding by the courts in favor of the Indians has been rendered time and again. The Ogden Land Company has not now, and never did have, any standing in court.

Now, this bill seeks to give that Ogden Land Company a legal status in the courts and compel the Attorney-General to take up its case and prosecute it. Who ever heard of such a proceeding? This bill is unjust and indefensible; it has absolutely no merit; it is hoary with age; it is looked upon by people who have investigated it and know something about it as a contemptible steal through and through. I hope the resolution will not be adopted. It ought not to be, if we do our duty and keep our contract, our treaty obligations, with the Indians, the wards of the Republic. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the argument made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], who has just taken his seat, seems to me as strong an argument as can be presented why the bill ought to be taken up and disposed of. After a long debate in this House, in which that gentleman participated, and also the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] now on his feet——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope that I may be allowed a little time upon the adoption of this rule.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will take the time on the bill itself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call attention to the gross injustice which will be done by the adoption of the rule; and I should like to have five minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not willing to yield further. The House has had this question before it heretofore, has spent considerable time upon it, and voted by almost a two-thirds majority in favor of its passage. The argument made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is conclusive as showing the necessity that something be done in this matter; and the opportune time to do it is when the bill is pending before the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman to yield me five minutes. I am a member of the committee that considered this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes, with the understanding that immediately upon the close of that time I shall ask the previous question upon the adoption of the rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this rule will be voted down. The Committee on Rules, apparently in a spirit of fairness, brings in a rule to permit this bill to be considered. It allows only forty minutes' debate, to be followed by the offering of amendments, without any possibility whatever of a word of explanation of those amendments. This is a farce, from a legislative standpoint. The bill involves vast property interests. It should be fairly considered in the House. There are many persons who believe it should be passed; but after an examination and investigation for more than three years of many of the matters connected with it I am convinced that certain amendments should be adopted in order to perfect the bill.

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes, sir.

Mr. VREELAND. I ask the gentleman from New York to indicate any amendments he would like to offer to the bill. There may be no objection to them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I can have the opportunity to offer and explain amendments which seem to me essential, I shall be glad.

Mr. Speaker, if the committee, in addition to allowing twenty minutes' debate on each side, had permitted the bill to be even read for the purpose of offering amendments, with discussion under the five-minute rule, there would be some fairness in the proceeding. Few Members of this House outside of the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs know anything about this bill. Members in general have no knowledge of what it contains; they have no knowledge of the matters which it affects; yet it is proposed to adopt this rule, which prevents the bill from being read for the offering in good faith of amendments.

When this House faces a condition like that, I sincerely hope that in the interest of fairness and justice it will vote down this proposed rule.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman explain what reason there is for this proposed division of these lands?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not "hankering" for a division of these lands at all, but a great many persons believe it should be done. If it is to be done, I hope that amendments, which I have prepared after some time spent in the examination of the bill, may be presented and explained to the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are not these Indians getting along all right now on these lands?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A great many persons think so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, no Indian bill that has ever come before this House, with the exception of the original Dawes bill, has received longer or more careful consideration from all those who are interested in the welfare of the Indians than this bill before us. The opposition to the bill comes from New York City—400 miles away from the reservations.

It comes, among others, from my colleague from New York [Mr. SULZER], who, I venture to say, never was on one of these reservations except to ride over it on the railroad; who never saw an Indian except those who have filled him up with misinformation which he has poured out upon this House; who knows absolutely nothing about Indians, unless it be the wooden Indians that they have down on the Bowery [laughter]; whose statements in regard to this bill and in regard to the author of it are absolutely untrue.

I stand behind every line of this bill. I hold myself personally responsible for every line in it. I have lived for thirty years near these reservations, and I know all about the conditions that prevail there. Every line in that bill I stand for and vouch for of my own personal knowledge. The statement that it is an attempt to steal lands from the Indians I pronounce to be absolutely untrue. Not an acre of land is taken from these Indians under this bill. No Indians in the United States have been more generously and fairly treated than these Indians. The insinuation that the Standard Oil Company is interested in this bill in any way, shape, or manner is a fact that my friend from New York must have pulled down out of the air. It exists nowhere else.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. I want to know what provision there is in this bill for the disposition of the money? Is it to be paid directly to the Indians, or invested, or how?

Mr. VREELAND. It is to be divided among the Indians.

Mr. GILBERT. Individually?

Mr. VREELAND. Individually; yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend yield a moment?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from New York says that the Standard Oil Company is trying to get this land.

Mr. VREELAND. I heard him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. On page 7 of the bill I find a line about oil.

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee (reading):

That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner affect the payment of royalties or rents under any oil lease of lands upon either of said reservations, but such royalties shall continue to be paid the same as heretofore.

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who owns these oil leases?

Mr. VREELAND. I would say that the Standard Oil Company—that is, the South Penn Oil Company—has a lease on the oil lands. The money derived from those leases belongs to the Seneca Nation. This bill provides that that land shall not be allotted, because it is evident that it could not be, but that the income from it shall continue to be paid to the United States Indian agent for distribution among all the Indians.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How did this oil company get these oil lands away from the Indians?

Mr. VREELAND. They were leased in the regular way and the leases ratified by act of Congress, the same as leases are made anywhere.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who wants this allotment made?

Mr. VREELAND. Let me state another fact to the gentleman, if he is interested in oil matters.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I only want to take care of the Indians, that is all.

Mr. VREELAND. This bill not only does not make it easy to lease their lands for oil purposes, but it makes it impossible for the Indians to lease them for oil purposes.

Only a few days ago a bill passed this House by unanimous consent, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] withdrew his objection to it. That bill provided that a whole great tract or territory there should be leased for oil and gas purposes. Under this bill, when these lands are allotted in severalty among the Indians, they are forbidden to alienate them for twenty-five years, and such a bill as that could not pass.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What right has Congress to allow the President to appoint commissioners to go up there and take charge of this land under what you may term a species of eminent domain?

Mr. VREELAND. The United States has full charge of it as the guardian of the Indians, and has been so recognized by the courts since the time of Chief Justice Marshall.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the House of Representatives last winter——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the previous question. I want to say just a word or two more in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. GROSVENOR. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SULZER. Three minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Could not the gentleman compromise on two? [Laughter.] I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in that two minutes I ask the Clerk to read a letter to me from the editor of Puck, Mr. Joseph Keppler, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, April 19, 1904.

Hon. WM. SULZER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SULZER: Your kind favor of April 15 is just received. Be assured of my keen appreciation and thanks.

The Vreeland bill is certainly a very bad one from the viewpoint of the Indian. Its provisions benefit the white land and oil speculators only. These plotters have all to gain and the Indians everything to lose.

The Indians' consent to allotment can not be obtained without fraud or forgery. They are practically unanimously opposed to this bill. Their daily prayer is to be spared its—to them—terrible enactment.

Your assurance, therefore, to strenuously oppose this bill and all future legislation detrimental to the welfare of the Indians of New York State is most welcome and gratifying to me, who have always considered you a stanch friend of our cause. I now know that I may rely upon you.

It may please you to learn that your loyalty and fearlessness in behalf of our Indian people have caused you to be referred to among themselves as "our friend who wields the tomahawk in Congress."

[Laughter and applause.]

With all good wishes, and trusting that I may have the opportunity of assuring you of my appreciation at some future time, believe me,

Very truly, yours,

JOS. KEPPLER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. VREELAND. May I ask the Clerk what the signature was?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the signature will be announced.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joseph Keppler.

Mr. VREELAND. Who is he?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Keppler is the editor of Puck.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY].

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will not use the five minutes. "The Tomahawk of Congress" has stated that there is no Member on the floor outside of the committee who knows anything about this bill. I believe I am not to be included in that. I do not know much about the bill, but I was born within a few miles of that reservation, and I live very near to it. It is a contiguous tract alongside my Congressional district. I have been over every inch of the ground on foot, on horseback, and by all means of transportation, including floating down the river. I believe that this Congress can do no wiser act for the benefit of the people living on that reservation, to better their condition, than to make an allotment of these lands. Under the provisions of their tribal relations, no matter how well a man cultivates his tract, the council may take his little farm away from him for his newly acquired son-in-law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in that statement.

Mr. SIBLEY. I think the chief and the tribal council can so determine. There are very few men, I believe, who are opposed to the bill. I believe my friend who has just risen and other Members on your side believe that this bill ought to pass, although you believe it ought to be amended; but of that I have nothing whatever to say. But I do speak of the justice of this bill. I believe as sincerely as I have ever made a statement looking into the eyes of my colleagues that there is not one vicious thing about this bill, and I believe also that my friend has offered it with the sole purpose of benefiting these people among whom he lives. If for the purpose of betterment it were to be amended, I should not object.

I believe that my friend from New York, who has been designated "The Tomahawk of Congress," makes a mistake, and he is wrong when he imputes to other gentlemen any motives other than those which ought to actuate any high-minded Member of this House who has taken an oath to respect the laws and Constitution of this country, and I hope he will withdraw his reference in this that the gentleman from New York has acted or attempted to act in any way except for the benefit of those among whom he resides and for the benefit of those men who are entitled to some property rights on the reservation.

Mr. GILBERT. What do the Indians want done about it?

Mr. SIBLEY. I believe I am not qualified to state what the Indians want.

Mr. LITTLE. The bill requires their consent.

Mr. SIBLEY. The bill requires their consent, as my friend the gentleman from Arkansas states. I think the gentleman from Arkansas has been on that committee a number of years, and I believe that he recognizes that the time has come—I think I betray no confidence when I say he has come to the belief that the time has come—when this allotment shall be made. I agree with you all that it should be made properly; but I do want to disclaim improper motives upon the part of the gentlemen who are supporting this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. VREELAND. I ask for three minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VREELAND. I stated to the House a few moments ago that no better considered bill had been brought to the consideration of the House during this session than this one. My colleague from New York [Mr. SULZER], who is undoubtedly full of kindness to the Indians, but lacks information about them, was entirely correct when he stated that this is an old matter—that this is an old steal, I think was the way he referred to it—that this is not the first attempt to bring this matter before Congress. It was once recommended by Secretary of the Interior Mr. Hoke Smith and also by Judge Browning, who was the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under President Cleveland. In that report Judge Browning, who was one of the ablest Indian Commissioners, I think, we have ever had, makes unqualifiedly and without reservation a strong appeal in favor of passing the same legislation which I am offering here to-day.

I have not time to read his report. On page 22 of that report you will find that Judge Browning takes exactly the same ground that I take in this bill.

The only previous bill that has been introduced here, so far as I know, was in 1897, which was in response to a report of Judge Browning, the Indian Commissioner at that time. It was introduced in the Senate by Senator David B. Hill, of New York.

That bill called for an appropriation to pay off a land company which claimed to have title to these Indian lands. That bill, which was introduced by Senator Hill, of New York, whose name, I have no doubt, is familiar to my colleague from New York [laughter], was introduced here and passed through the Senate of the United States. So far as I know the only previous legislation to which my colleague can refer is the bill introduced by Senator Hill and passed in the Senate in 1897.

The same bill as we are now considering, with some changes, was introduced by myself in the last Congress. It was fully considered for many weeks, with many hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs; it was reported favorably from that committee; it was discussed in this House and passed under a suspension of the rules. The board of Indian commissioners in this city, appointed by the President, has passed resolutions, which I have here, in favor of this bill for two successive years. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, on page 196 of his last report, favors the passage of this legislation.

The Conference of Friends of the Indians at Lake Mohonk, which is known all over the country, has for two successive years passed resolutions in favor of this particular bill. The United States Indian attorney, the missionaries among the Indians, the Indian Rights Association, Mr. Philip Garrett, of Philadelphia who represents the interest of the Friends—all of these various bodies have time and time again considered this legislation in detail and recommended its passage.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House accordingly divided; and there were—ayes 139, noes 81.

Mr. SULZER. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Twenty gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number; and the yeas and nays are refused, and the resolution is agreed to. The resolution provides for forty minutes' debate—twenty minutes to be controlled by those in favor of the bill and twenty minutes by those opposed to it, members of the Committee on Indian Affairs having preference.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to control the time on this side in favor of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may control the twenty minutes' time of those in favor of the bill. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the gentleman from New York on the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. FITZGERALD] will control the other twenty minutes. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, it has been the policy of this Government for more than twenty years to allot lands among the Indians and eventually to make citizens of them. This policy has been pursued for years throughout the West with the Indians who were only semicivilized and with many who were not civilized at all. Ever since the passage of the Dawes bill, introduced by Senator Dawes nearly twenty years ago, that has been the established policy of this Government.

We have had, Mr. Speaker, several different stages of treatment of the Indians of the United States. We have had the first stage, where the policy of the Government seemed to be to consider that the only good Indian was a dead Indian. That, Mr. Speaker, has long since passed by. Then we had the second stage, where it was considered to be for the benefit of the Indians to herd them upon reservations and keep them by themselves and maintain their tribal relations and keep white men away from among them and maintain them as tribes of Indians. I say, Mr. Speaker, that that stage has also passed away.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VREELAND. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman if we have not passed several bills this session of Congress, coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs, providing for breaking up reservations and allotting lands among the Indians?

Mr. VREELAND. I understand that that is true.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And I will ask if it is not also a fact that we have spent more time upon this bill than any other bill before the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VREELAND. I think, Mr. Speaker, I may say in reply to the question of my friend from Texas, who is also on the Committee on Indian Affairs, that it is true that in this session more time has been spent in hearings and consideration upon this bill than any other one bill or two bills before that committee.

Not only that, but in the last House, at the session a year ago last winter, many weeks were spent by the members of the Indian Committee of the House in hearings and in considering every detail of this legislation. I want to say that I am interested in this legislation for two reasons, and I am perfectly frank to state to the House what those reasons are: In the first place, every Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the last ten years has been urging upon Congress to pass legislation looking to making citizens of these Indians and allotting their lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask another question, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware of the amendments to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who is a member of the committee?

Mr. VREELAND. I know of some of the amendments to be offered by the gentleman from New York, and I do not know that I would object to them. Some of the other amendments, in my judgment, would be fatal to the bill.

Mr. BREAZEALE. How many Indians are affected by this particular bill?

Mr. VREELAND. About 2,700 Indians, who are living upon about 56,000 acres of land; living under tribal relations; living outside the law of the State of New York; living where their property and domestic relations are outside of the laws of the State of New York and of the United States. These Indians, Mr. Speaker, are perhaps more civilized than any other tribe of Indians in this United States.

For nearly a century they have lived there, in the State of New York, surrounded by civilization, occupying in their reservations, following the Allegheny River, about half a mile on each side of that river a strip nearly 40 miles long, stretching through an old and rich and thickly settled part of the State of New York. Now, it has been impossible to prevent white people from interfering with and from mixing in business relations with these Indians. The railroads had to be built over these reservations in order to get by the hills and through the valleys on their way to the great West.

Therefore, in 1876, after the Erie Railroad had been built through western New York, on its way to Chicago, the railroad men were obliged to settle along the line of raiiroads and obliged to settle on these reservations. There was no way to get around them. In that way these communities of white people that are now contained in villages first settled on the Indian lands.

It was done with the consent of the Indians. These Indians are as intelligent, in my judgment—many of them—as the farmers throughout western New York. They are men who know how to do business. They are men who know how to protect themselves in their business intercourse with white men. These Indians voluntarily made leases with the white people and permitted them to settle upon the reservations in the so-called "villages."

In 1876 these villages had become so large that Congress ratified the leases and authorized the Indians to make further leases with the white people.

So then to-day we find that there are about 8,000 people, who are constituents of mine, who are residing upon these reservations, upon lands which they have leased from the Indians under leases which have been ratified by act of Congress. These leases are perpetual, having been so decided by the supreme court of the State of New York, and are renewable once every ninety-nine years for the purpose of readjustment of rent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, outside of these villages, which the Indians have parted with in perpetuity by their own action, not an acre of land is taken away from them, except that which they have voluntarily parted with. Not only that, but all of the provisions of the Dawes Act have been put around this bill to protect the interests of the Indians. Before introducing the bill in Congress I submitted it to the board of Indian commissioners, to the Indian Rights Association, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I asked them to suggest any provisions which should be added to care for the rights of Indians under this bill.

Many amendments were made, and I say here, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is a perfected bill, made jointly with all of these societies that make it their business to look after and protect the interests of the Indians.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman what is the necessity for the bill at all?

Mr. VREELAND. I will say to my friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] that all of these societies that are urging the passage of this bill are doing it entirely on account of the Indians. I will say to him that here are 2,700 people who are civilized people, people who take newspapers, who cultivate their lands, who have their own parties among themselves and conduct their elections, who have a tribal government, who are as intelligent as nine out of ten of the immigrants who land on our shores to become American citizens.

Here are 2,700 of these Indians settled down in one of the old States of this Union, outside of the law, without any law to govern their own property relations, without any property rights which go to the individual, but all of them possessed only of tribal rights. All of their domestic relations are outside of the law. There is no law of the State of New York that can reach one of these Indians. If the husband of a woman deserts his family and goes and lives with some other woman, they are entirely outside of the law.

I say that it has created a condition of affairs here which has attracted the attention of all the societies that exist for the benefit of Ind ans and has caused these societies to urge here, year after year, the passage of this legislation. Now, I say that I want to be entiirely frank with this House. I am not sure that that reason alone, while I understand and believe in it and know the necessity of this legislation on account of these Indians, is what has prompted me to spend so many days in urging this legislation.

I am not sure that I would have done it had it not been for the 8,000 white people who live there and who are asking of me that I endeavor to settle up these affairs; that I endeavor to put these Indians where, while every right they have is to be respected, they will be brought under the laws of the State; that each one shall have his own lot of land, protected against alienation for twenty-five years, so that these lands in the State of New York shall be made a place of peace and prosperity and contentment for their Indian owners.

Mr. GILBERT. What about their mining or mineral rights?

Mr. VREELAND. I will say to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] that about eight years ago oil was found on their reservation; that oil has been developed. The Indians leased those oil lands in the ordinary way, under a lease ratified by Congress, and they are now receiving from that oil property the royalty, amounting to a good many thousand dollars a year.

So far as I know—and I am familiar with the subject—there is no other land in that reservation—and I am familiar with the oil business—that I would take and put down a well upon if they would give me a lease of the whole of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In allotting the lands to these Indians, is any provision made in this bill for segregating the developed oil lands from those which are to be allotted to the Indians?

Mr. VREELAND. There is provision that the oil lands shall be allotted the same as the other; but the money coming from the oil lands is to be paid to the United States Indian agent, as is now done, for distribution among the Indians.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then the benefit of the developed oil lands will accrue to the entire nation?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] explain to the House how the claim of the Ogden Land Company is to be disposed of? There seems to be some question about that claim.

Mr. VREELAND. The reason why these lands were not included in the original Dawes bill was because there is a question in regard to the title to these lands. I wish to read a letter in relation to this matter, which I received from ex-Senator Dawes shortly before his death. He says:

> No man can be more impressed than I have been for the last dozen years with the deplorable condition of the New York Indians, as well as the incubus of these reservations upon the future development of western New York. There is no cure that I know of but allotment. They would have been included in the operation of the severalty act of 1887—

That is the allotment act, known as the "Dawes bill"— but for the trouble about their title.

There is a company—not a corporation, but the heirs of four or five men of Revolutionary times—that claims to hold the preemption right to these reservations; that is, that claims to have the first and sole right to buy these lands when the Indians shall be through with them.

Not only that, but all of you gentlemen who are familiar with Indian laws know that the right of the Indians to occupy lands which are preempted exists as a tribal right; that the United States Supreme Court has decided that the Indians must exist as a tribe in order to hold their rights to these lands. Therefore, it has been necessary through all these years that these Indians should maintain their existence as a tribe in order to protect their title from the company called the "Ogden Land Company."

I referred a moment ago to the bill which the late Senator Hill introduced in the Senate of the United States in 1897, upon the recommendation of Secretary Hoke Smith and Judge Browning, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. That bill provided that the claims of the Odgen Land Company should be paid off and that $270,000 should be appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What provision does this bill make in regard to adverse claims? Does it impair or validate them?

Mr. VREELAND. This bill provides that the Attorney-General of the United States shall bring suit to quiet the title to these lands; that he shall endeavor to find out whether the Odgen Land Company has any interest at all, and if so, how much; and if that company has no interest, then the allotments shall go on.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This bill does not confer any rights upon that company?

Mr. VREELAND. Not the least; it simply proposes to find out the existing legal status of that company, whatever it may be.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has now reached the third and, I trust, the last stage in its treatment of its Indian wards; that is, to them not as tribes of Indians, but as individuals capable of development along civilized lines. To develop habits of industry among them, to awaken among them the property instinct by giving to each one his own individual allotment of land, there must be among them a survival of the fittest. They must either survive as individuals or perish as tribes of Indians. The present policy of the Government aims to develop them into useful citizens, who shall be absorbed into and become part of the citizenship of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is proper to state at the outset that while a great many people favor the passage of this bill, yet there is one gentleman, at least, who opposes it, whose knowledge of the conditions of the Indians affected by the bill is as accurate and as great as that of any other person, with the exception, perhaps, of the gentleman who introduced the bill. Bishop Walker, of Buffalo, an Episcopalian, whose diocese includes the reservations affected by this measure, is heartily opposed to the bill.

The bill provides for the allotment of the lands of the Seneca Indians in New York State in the Allegany and Cattaraugus reservations. It first provides that the consent of a majority of the Indians shall be obtained before anything can be done to render the legislation effective. Although the United States Supreme Court has decided in the Lone Wolf case (1 U. S., —) that Congress has the absolute power to dispose of Indian lands as it deems proper without the consent of the Indians affected, yet I deem it advisable to make provision for the obtaining of their consent to any proposed legislation unless there be peculiar reasons to dispense with such consent, so that their interests may be properly safeguarded and their just demands respected.

With the addition of certain amendments that I shall ask the House to adopt, the bill is less objectionable than any that has ever been urged for the allotment of the lands of these Indians. I am inclined to believe from investigations made as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs that a condition exists on the reservations that should in some way be changed. Many who have given close attention to the matter—persons who are entirely disinterested—insist that legislation along the lines suggested in the pending bill is imperative.

Could I have my way, Mr. Speaker, I would not at this time provide for the allotment of the lands of these Indians. Since the bill is before the House, however, I shall endeavor to have adopted some amendments that in my opinion will somewhat improve it. The following provision is found on page 5 of the bill:

> Provided further, That at any time after the expiration of six years after such allotments have been made the Secretary of the Interior, upon presentation of a certificate signed and acknowledged by the county judge, the surrogate, and the clerk of the county in which any such allottee may reside, stating that such allottee in their knowledge and opinion is temperate, industrious, competent to manage his affairs, and qualified for citizenship, may cause such patent in fee simple to issue at once to such allottee under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

I shall ask the House to adopt an amendment striking out the following language:

> Upon presentation of a certificate signed and acknowledged by the county judge, the surrogate, and the clerk of the county in which any such allottee may reside, stating that such allottee, in their knowledge and opinion, is temperate, industrious, competent to manage his affairs, and qualified for citizenship—and inserting after the word "cause," in line 23, the words "in his discretion."

The effect of this amendment will be to give the Secretary of the Interior authority to issue a patent in fee to any allottee after six years if he deems it proper so to do. I shall ask to have the provision for a certificate from the county judge, clerk, and surrogate eliminated, for a reason very obvious to those who are familiar with the conditions about Indian reservations.

Before I call attention to that phase of the matter, however, I desire to point out that in no legislation allotting Indian lands, where, for any cause, the power to alienate the allotment has been permitted within twenty-five years from the date of the allotment, have the local authorities been clothed with power to pass upon the qualifications of the allottees for citizenship, so that a patent in fee to their lands might be obtained.

The reason is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker. In this case, for instance, the lands to be allotted are rich in gas, in oil, and in minerals. So long as the power of alienation is suspended the Indian is in no danger of having his land taken improperly. In the communities wherein the lands affected by this bill are located the interests of the white people are considered much superior to those of the Indians. It is the same in all communities under similar circumstances.

The officials named in the bill to furnish the certificate required would be so strongly predisposed in favor of the whites and the desire to have the Indian land given to him with such a title as to make it part of the taxable property of the county would be so strong that the entire matter might better be left to the Secretary of the Interior, so that a thorough investigation by an Indian Office inspector may be assured for every application made for a patent in fee by an allottee.

It can readily be seen that if an allottee be permitted to come to the Department with such a certificate as is required by this provision of the bill that there shall be less disposition on the part of the Department to make the thorough and independent investigation that each case should have.

Another amendment that it is my purpose to offer will place in the bill a provision contained in the bill as it passed Congress on a previous occasion. It is provided that none of the land in the villages of Salamanca, West Salamanca, Red House, Vandalia, Carrollton, and Great Valley shall be allotted; but the lessees shall be permitted to obtain a patent to the leased lands by paying a sum of money which, if invested at 4 per cent, would yield the annual rental of the leased land.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. VREELAND. I did not understand the gentleman exactly. Did he say that he wished to offer an amendment in regard to the terms under which an individual after six years could become a citizen?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have already stated that.

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state it again?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will move to strike out on page 5 all contained in lines 18 to 23, commencing with the words "upon presentation" and down to the word "citizenship," and after the word "cause," in line 23, I shall move to insert the words "in his discretion," so that the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion may have that power.

On page 7, in line 2, after the word "Provided," I shall offer an amendment which will restore to the bill a provision which was in it when it passed the last Congress. As I have already stated, the lessees in these villages, who pay in rent for lots from six to ten dollars a year, may obtain patents to those lots upon paying a sum of money which, if invested at 4 per cent, will yield the annual rental they now pay.

In the former bill it was also provided that in case $200,000 was paid to the so-called "Ogden Land Company" to extinguish the interest or lien or claim which it is said they have to these reservations, the lessees should pay in addition a sum which would be so proportionate to the sum paid to the Ogden Land Company as the area of the land that they have under lease would bear to all of the land covered by the claim of the Ogden Land Company.

It was estimated by the gentleman from New York that if $200,000 were paid to extinguish this so-called claim, the lessees in the villages would be compelled to pay at least $20,000 in addition to the other sums.

I know of no reason for omitting this provision from this bill. If the lands are to be allotted; if by any possibility the so-called "Ogden Land Company" has any interest in these lands for which compensation must be made; if the lessees in the villages are to obtain patents in fee to the lands occupied by them, they should pay their proportionate share of the amount required, if any, to acquire the interest of the Ogden Land Company.

There is one other amendment which I shall offer to the bill. The right or claim of the so-called "Ogden Land Company" has been the subject of controversy for many years. Some contend that the persons known as the "Ogden Land Company" have the fee of these reservations, subject to the tribal right of occupancy of the Indians; many others insist that the so-called "company" has the right of preemption or, as it is described, the first right to purchase from the Indians if the tribal relation is to be destroyed.

If there be any right whatever possessed by this so-called "company" in these lands, I am quite satisfied, after an exhaustive examination of the authorities, that it is merely a right to negotiate with the Indians for the lands before they are otherwise disposed of. With a former Member of this House, who gave the subject much consideration, a man eminent on the bench, a Republican, and of great legal acumen, the late Charles H. Daniels, I believe that the Ogden Land Company's claim is a myth, for it has been repeatedly defeated in the courts of the State of New York, with the exception of the case of Chrystie against The Seneca Nation (126 N. Y.)

In that case it appears that to lands apart from those contained in the reservations affected by this bill the company had negotiated with the Indians, had agreed upon terms, had fully complied with the conditions of the agreement, and under the circumstances were held to have a good title. That is not the condition of the lands in this bill.

The bill in its present shape provides that the right or claim of the so-called "Ogden Land Company" shall be determined in the courts in an action or proceeding brought or participated in by the Attorney-General of the United States. Then if it be found that the Ogden Land Company has some interest that has some value this bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain the value of the interest and negotiate for its purchase in the name of the United States and in trust for the Indians.

If unable to agree with the so-called "Ogden Land Company" within four months, then provision is made to condemn the interest or right that may be found to exist. I shall offer an amendment that will take from the Secretary of the Interior the power to negotiate for the purchase of any right that may be found to exist, and leave the bill in such a way that the right or interest, if any, shall be obtained by condemnation. I shall do this because of the very great difference of opinion that exists regarding the value of the supposed rights of this company.

In the language that I shall ask to have stricken out, too, there is, in my opinion, words which may give a right never urged by the representatives of this so-called "company." The bill directs that if it be adjudged that the company have "a valid interest to, or vested interest in, said lands, or entitled to recover damages as for a breach of contract for the purchase of such lands," the interest shall be acquired.

Should it be determined that this company has a right to negotiate for the purchase of these lands, before it could be entitled to recover damages it would be obliged to show that it was in a position—able to purchase—to acquire the land. The language just read would make such proof unnecessary. It should be stricken out.

Mr. VREELAND. I would ask my colleague from New York if this bill does not provide that the Ogden Land Company must prove their claim in court, whether they have any title, and, if so, how much?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It provides that they may recover damages for a breach of contract of purchase, and that is reading into their claim something that they have never made.

Mr. VREELAND. Has the gentleman prepared an amendment to cover that? If so, I will not object to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to strike out the provision which permits the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate for the purchase of any interest it may be determined the company has. If he is to do that, there should be some limitation upon the amount he shall pay; or, better, leave it to be acquired by condemnation proceedings.

Mr. VREELAND. I do not want to interrupt my friend unless with his permission. I would ask him if the Secretary of the Interior can do anything more than negotiate under this bill, providing the Ogden folks can establish the claim, without coming back to Congress to obtain money whereby to carry it out?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know, I will say to the gentleman. Although I have read this bill carefully, I do not know.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask my colleague on the committee if he thinks it is possible that the rights of the Ogden Land Company could be reached by condemnation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think so.

Mr. LACEY. How could they take private property for private use?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think we could make it a public use merely by declaring in the bill that it is a public use.

Mr. LACEY. I would also like to ask the gentleman if there is not a suit pending in the supreme court of New York in which this same question is involved, and in which they directed the attorney-general to investigate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is, and that meets with my approval. I ask, Mr. Speaker, if it be necessary that amendment be offered during the discussion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLMSTED). They can be offered when the discussion is closed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eleven minutes remaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield ten minutes to my colleague [Mr. SULZER], who is opposed to the bill in its entirety.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the real purpose of this bill is to take away the Indians' land, and incidentally to revive and give a legal status to what is known as the "Ogden land-grant claim." I speak from personal knowledge, having been more or less familiar with this subject for the last fifteen years, both as a member of the New York legislature and as a Member of Congress, and I stand here to-day and declare that if this bill becomes law in less than twenty years the white people will have the Indians' lands, the Indians will not have a dollar of the money left, and then they will be a public charge on the taxpayers of the State of New York or on the citizens of the United States.

The Government of the United States more than a hundred years ago gave these lands to the Indians under a solemn treaty, by which it was agreed that the Government under no circumstances nor at any time would ever take these lands away from the Indians. That is a contract. We should not break it now. The Government never would attempt to take these lands away from the Indians, and the few people in the western part of the State of New York, represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND], would not now want to take these lands away from the Indians if it were not for the fact that recently it has been discovered that these lands contain valuable deposits of oil and natural gas. This is the chief reason this iniquitous bill is now to be jammed through this House by a special and peremptory rule.

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SULZER. I have not time now, for I want to read what a distinguished Republican, a former Member of this House, a gentleman who occupied for many years a very conspicuous position on the other side of this Chamber, a man who is well known in the State of New York, who has given this subject a great deal of careful study and who knows whereof he speaks—I say I want to read what the Hon. John Van Voorhis, formerly a Member of this House, from the city of Rochester, says in regard to this bill. He says in a recent address:

Mr. VREELAND says he represents 100,000 people in his district. That means white people, of course. It doesn't mean a single Indian, because an Indian has no vote and no representation. As a matter of fact, the Indians are against Mr. VREELAND'S bill. They dislike its terms and its features. And if the Indians don't want it, what have the rest of us to say? By a treaty made with the Indians at Canandaigua in 1794 this Government has guaranteed to them the absolute ownership and control of those lands in question.

Why, then, should white people poke their noses into this affair under the pretense of bettering the Indian's condition? Because the white people have an interest of their own in this matter. They are trying to get these lands away from the Indians. There has never yet been a Representative from that district who wasn't inimical to their interests, in fact, if he wanted to be elected to Congress. I look upon this bill of Mr. VREELAND'S, therefore, as an entering wedge in an effort that is about to be made to drive those Indians off their lands.

White speculators want to get at the valuable oil privileges that are on those reservation lands, as they have in the past secured most of them for nothing. I would like at this moment to put Mr. VREELAND on the witness stand under oath, and ask him if it is not a fact that he himself has got rich off these very Indians, and if one corporation formed to exploit these lands was not formed by himself.

I state these things only to show the animus which brought forth this bill. There is always some measure of this kind before Congress, and the Indians are continually being compelled to go to Washington to fight these things, until it appears almost that the Government, instead of being the guardian of the Indians, is in reality their oppressor.

Mr. Speaker, that is from a Republican—from a recent speech of John Van Voorhis, a former Member of this House. He knows, no doubt, whereof he speaks. But let me read what Charles T. Andrews says in the New York Sun in regard to this bill. I have only time to read the concluding paragraph. Mr. Andrews is the New York State inspector of Indian schools. He says:

But let not Congress, deceived by sophistry or overpersuaded by importunities, dishonor itself, disgrace the nation, and make its last transaction with the Iroquois Indians infamous by robbing the helpless remnants of that once powerful tribe of $200,000 for the benefit of the most unscrupulous land speculators, who for two-thirds of a century have robbed, cheated, and debauched the Indians of the great Six Nations.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

I wish I could read all of this masterly article, but I have not the time. Now, you listened a few moments ago to a letter written to me by Mr. Joseph Keppler, the editor and proprietor of Puck. Mr. Keppler is a patriotic and disinterested citizen; he is a public-spirited man who has taken a great deal of interest in these Indians; he has looked into this matter and he knows the evil this bill will accomplish if it becomes a law. He raises his voice to-day as a citizen of this country in protest to this bill, and says:

The Vreeland bill is certainly a very bad one. * * * Its provisions benefit the oil and land speculators only. These plotters have all to gain and the Indians everything to lose. The Indians' consent to allotment can not be obtained without fraud or forgery. They are practically unanimously opposed to the bill. Their daily prayer is to be spared from its enactment.

Let me now read, Mr. Speaker, a brief extract from a letter to me from W. H. Samson, the president of the Rochester Historical Society, a very distinguished gentleman of New York, who resides in Rochester. He says:

The purpose of the Vreeland bill, in my opinion, is to get the Indians' land and not to Christianize the Indians, not to civilize them, and one of the saddest and most discouraging things about the whole business is that Mr. VREELAND has deluded a whole lot of good people into the idea that its purpose is strictly philanthropical.

Mr. Speaker, I quote from these statements and letters to show how utterly iniquitous and indefensible this legislation really is. This bill should be defeated. It has been in Congress in one shape or another for years, but the purpose is always the same—to get the lands of the Indians and out of the proceeds of their ultimate sale pay the Ogden land-grant claim.

When De Witt Clinton was governor he told the Indians that "all the right which the Ogden Company has to your reservations is the right of purchase when you deem it expedient to sell them." In 1840 the committee of the general council of Massachusetts said, in regard to the claim that under the agreement with New York, "Massachusetts held the sole and exclusive right to purchase the lands whenever the Indians should voluntarily dispose of them. * * * The sole and exclusive right to purchase the lands of the Indians gave no other title or interest in the land whatever. * * * Such interest or title could be assigned only by a sale or conveyance thereof by the Indians."

The Constitution of the United States provides that "all treaties shall be the supreme law of the land." On November 11, 1794, a treaty was negotiated at Canandaigua between the United States and the Six Nations of Indians. It was ratified by the Senate of the United States on January 21, 1795. The council with the Indians was solicited by the United States, and the purpose thereof, as stated in the treaty itself, was to remove from the minds of the Indians "all cause of complaint and establishing a firm and permanent friendship with them." The treaty described in detail the boundaries of the Seneca Indian lands, and then said:

Now, the United States acknowledge all the land within the aforementioned boundaries to be the property of the Seneca Nation, and the United States will never claim the same nor disturb the Seneca Nation nor any of the Six Nations or their Indian friends residing thereon and united with them in the free use and enjoyment thereof, but it shall remain theirs until they choose to sell the same to the people of the United States, who have the right to purchase.

This treaty is a part of "the supreme law of the land," is as binding as any treaty with a foreign power, and it gives to the Seneca Indians a much stronger title to their lands than that of aboriginal occupancy. This point was emphasized by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1866, when it declared that the rights of these particular Indians do not depend upon statutes, "but upon the treaties," and "it is to these treaties that we must look to ascertain the value of these rights and the extent of them." (5 Wall., 768.)

And so the matter stands. The Indians of western New York own their lands, and the United States has not only said so, but has solemnly pledged itself never to claim the lands and never to disturb the Indians "in the free use and enjoyment thereof." The Ogden Land Company has the first right to buy, but it has nothing more than that. To compel the Indians to pay $200,000 for the extinguishment of the right would be a monstrous outrage. It seems to me, therefore, that it is the imperative duty of all friends of the Indians and of all who believe in honesty and fair dealing to oppose the passage of the Vreeland bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend for one moment. The Chair feels it his duty to remind the gentleman that the rule of the House forbids reference to Members by name, and it is just as much a violation of the rule to read something somebody else has said as if the gentleman had stated it himself. It is also against the rules of the House to impugn the motives of other gentlemen.

Mr. SULZER. I am not impugning motives. The gentleman's own statement does that. I am stating facts. These letters I read violate no rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I ask for a few minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has one minute remaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have only one minute, and I promised that to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. SULZER. Then one word more, Mr. Speaker. I think I have made this matter clear to the House. I have no more to say. I leave it now to the judgment and conscience of Members. My vote now, as in the past, will be cast against this infamous and iniquitous Indian land steal. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for one minute.

Mr. LITTLE. Could the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] yield me some time?

Mr. VREELAND. I have five minutes, and I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise principally for the purpose of expressing the hope that the amendments offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will be adopted by the House. With these amendments on the bill I have no hesitancy in saying that in my opinion it ought to pass. I say that in the face of the extravagant statements made by my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. The trouble is that the oil companies have already got the reservation under leases approved by the Congress of the United States, so that question is not in this proposition at all. It simply is a proposition to divide the lands of these Indians among themselves, each getting the part to which he is entitled. That can not be done except by their consent, according to the provisions of the bill; and if they are all opposed to it, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] suggests, there will be no division of the lands.

In the next place, there is no such thing as a $200,000 steal proposition in this bill. There was at the time the statement was written which the gentleman has just read to the House. A bill was reported to pay the Ogden Land Company $200,000 for its claim, which I believe was a wild-cat claim, and if the gentleman wants to use that word as referring to that claim I have no objection; but I know the gentlemen upon the Committee on Indian Affairs all know that for five years I have stood against the payment of that claim and in part contributed my influence to defeat this bill, both in the committee and in the House. It is not treating either the committee or the House fairly to charge them with infamy in regard to this matter. [Applause.] I know that we investigated it, and that we investigated it carefully, day after day and week after week, and the charge is wholly unjust and unfounded, and the bill that we are now asked to vote upon provides that whatever claim the Ogden Land Company has or claims to have shall be determined by the courts of the country, as they have a right to have it determined, and then if that company has any just claim let it be paid.

So far as I am concerned, I do not believe it has any just claim; but it insists upon the justice of the claim which it asserts, and it is necessary to clear the title to these lands in order to give the Indians a clear title to their lands, so that they can dispose of them in the future if they desire to do so. If the white men propose to rob these Indians of their little allotments when they get them, if the laws of the country are enforced they will wait twenty-five years before they get many acres of it under the provisions of this bill. As to the sale of the town lots in the villages and the provisions for the payment in this bill, I am not sufficiently familiar with the facts to be prepared to speak with reference to their sufficiency. Those who are familiar with it, more so than I am, think it a just compensation, so I do not hesitate, especially on that score. But one of the amendments offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] provides that in the event in the future it is determined that the Ogden Land Company has any claim and it must be paid, the people who own these town lots shall pay their pro rata share of the money to go to the Ogden Land Company. That was in the bill last year. With these amendments I hope the bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I desire to occupy any more time except to say that the communication read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] emanates from the lawyer for the Indian council—the officeholders who would be out of a job in case this bill passes, and who are therefore against it. He is a man of somewhat violent expressions, who lives about 125 miles away from the reservation and never was there, I think, but once.

He was at one time a Member of this body and was on the point of being turned out of it for the violence of his expressions in this House.

I now yield whatever time I have remaining to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS]. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it will be impossible for me in the brief time I have to address the House to explain this bill. I will therefore content myself with the statement that I think the bill should pass. It has been well considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and has passed the House once, and with the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who is also a member of the committee, I think that it would be nothing but right to pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate fixed by the rule having elapsed, the question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have some amendments which I wish to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. OLMSTED]. Do the amendments of the gentleman propose to amend the amendments of the committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. One of the amendments is an amendment to a committee amendment.

Mr. VREELAND. I ask that the vote be first taken on the amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those will be first in order. Additional amendments, unless offered as amendments to committee amendments, will be reserved until all the committee amendments have been disposed of. The Clerk will read the first committee amendment.

The following amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to:

On page 5, in line 17, strike out "one year" and insert "six years."
On page 6, in line 14, strike out "and one-half."

The following amendment reported by the committee was read:

On page 6, at the end of line 23, insert, after the word "patent," the following:

"Provided, That to secure the said patents, payment must be made by the lessees of said lands within four years from the date of the extinguishment of the said Ogden Land Company's title or claim, if such title or claim be found to exist by the decision of the courts as herein provided."

Mr. FITZGERALD. As an amendment to that amendment, I offer what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, at end of line 2, add:

"And provided further, That in case it shall be determined that the so-called Ogden Land Company has a valid claim, lien, interest in, to, or upon the lands to be allotted hereunder, each lessee in the towns shall pay in addition to the sum to be computed as aforesaid a further sum, which shall bear the same proportion to the sum which shall be paid in extinguishment of the claim, interest, or lien of the so-called Ogden Land Company as the area of the lands so leased by him bear to the total area of the lands to which the claim of the so-called Ogden Land Company attaches on the Cattaraugus, Allegany, and Tuscarora reservations."

The amendment of Mr. FITZGERALD was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was adopted.

The following amendments, reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, were read and adopted:

Page 7, line 12, after the word "pending," insert "or such other action as may be hereinafter authorized."

Page 8, end of section 5, insert "or such other action, either in State or Federal court, as will, in his judgment, best determine the question."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee amendments are now concluded.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, strike out from the "upon" in line 18, down to and including the word "citizenship" in line 23; and insert, after the word "cause," in line 23, the words "in his discretion."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer a further amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, strike out, commencing with the words "or entitled" in line 2 down to and including the word "land" in line 14.

Mr. VREELAND. I offer an amendment to an amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out on page 8, in line 2 to line 4, the words "or entitled to recover damages as for a breach of contract for the purchase of such land."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, that is not an amendment to my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One moment. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] proposes an amendment to the amendment offered by his colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Or does he propose a new amendment?

Mr. VREELAND. As I understand it, my colleague from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offers an amendment, that on page 8, line 2, commencing at the word "or," the remainder of the page shall be stricken out down to and including the word "land," in line 14. I offer as a substitute for that on page 8, commencing at the word "or," in line 2, that all shall be stricken out down to and including the word "lands," in line 4, and that the balance shall stand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation to be that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offers to amend by striking out certain words. The other gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] offers an amendment, which is to strike out certain words which are within and much less than the part proposed to be stricken out by the first amendment.

Mr. VREELAND. I offer that as a substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And under the rules the amendment offered by the second gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] is in the nature of a perfection of the paragraph, and is therefore a preferential amendment, to be voted upon before the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is put. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND].

The amendment of Mr. VREELAND was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon the adoption——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will modify the amendment. As a part of it has been adopted already, I will now move to strike out all that part of the bill commencing with the word "then," in line 4, down to and including the word "land," in line 14.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning with line 4, strike out the following words: "then, and in that case, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to ascertain the value of such interest and to negotiate for the purchase of the same in the name of the United States and in trust for the benefit of said Indians, as provided in this act; and in case the Secretary of the Interior is unable within the period of four months from the final determination of said action to agree with the said Ogden Land Company, or the individuals composing the same, upon the value of its or their right, title, interest, claim, and demand in and to said land."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment originally offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will be modified as he has suggested.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that we devote about five minutes to the explanation of this, to be divided between my colleague and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that there may be five minutes debate upon this subject, the time to be equally divided between himself and his colleague from New York. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON (from his seat). Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VREELAND. A parliamentary inquiry. Was there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]? If so, who made the objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the regular order was demanded, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. VREELAND. By whom?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I submit that nobody arose to demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question, in order that there may be no doubt. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that five minutes may be devoted to debate upon this amendment, one-half to be used by himself and the other by his colleague [Mr. VREELAND]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I will take two minutes and give my colleague three.

The language that I desire to strike from this bill permits the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate for the acquisition of any right or interest that the courts may find the Ogden Land Company to have. It also provides that if he can not get an agreement on the price within a certain time he shall ascertain the value of the interest by condemnation proceedings.

It seems to me, considering the wide difference of opinion that has been expressed regarding the value of this so-called "right," that it would be unwise to leave it, without any restriction whatever, in the power of the Secretary to negotiate for the purchase of the rights, if any. If the amendment offered by me is adopted, the right or interest of this company, if any, will be fixed by condemnation. I believe that that is the proper way to do it.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the desire of my friend and colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD] in this matter, this does just what he proposes to do.

In the first place, this bill sends the Ogden people to the courts to prove their claim, if they have any. Many gentlemen for whose opinion I have much respect declare that they believe the courts will decide that this company has no claim.

I trust that they may be right about it. But suppose that the courts declare that they have a vested interest there which must be disposed of before allotment can take place, what then? Under the provisions of this bill, instead of waiting to come back to Congress for the passage of further legislation, the Secretary of the Interior is directed to find out what their interest is worth to the best of his ability.

He is directed to do just what Congress would direct him to do if we came back here for further legislation under this bill. Therefore I say that the amendment of my friend from New York would mean nothing but delay in carrying out the provisions of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken about the amendment. The amendment I offer compels him at once to condemn this interest, instead of permitting the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate for its purchase. It merely strikes out that part of the bill which empowers the Secretary to negotiate, and in case he does not get an agreement within four months, to proceed to condemnation. My amendment compels him to condemn, at once, without negotiation.

Mr. VREELAND. I sympathize entirely, Mr. Speaker, with the object desired by my colleague; but from my understanding of the bill, which has been reached after many years of familiarity with it, I think that the object which he desires would better be arrived at by defeating the amendment to strike out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 110.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to know whether the bill has been engrossed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair states that the bill has been ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and has been read a third time. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SULZER. My point of order is that if the bill has not been engrossed it can not be passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided: and there were—ayes 187, noes 55.

So the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended.

On motion of Mr. VREELAND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 13298.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13298) to amend section 2327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to lands.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2327. The description of vein or lode claims upon surveyed lands shall designate the location of the claims with reference to the lines of the public survey, but need not conform therewith: but where patents have been issued for claims upon unsurveyed lands, the surveyors-general, in extending the public survey, shall adjust the same to the boundaries of said patented claims so as in no case to interfere with or change the true location of such claims as they are officially established upon the ground. Where patents have issued for mineral lands, those lands only shall be segregated and shall be deemed to be patented which are bounded by the lines actually marked, defined, and established upon the ground by the monuments of the official survey upon which the patent grant is based, and surveyors-general in executing subsequent patent surveys, whether upon surveyed or unsurveyed lands, shall be governed accordingly.

The said monuments shall at all times constitute the highest authority as to what land is patented, and in case of any conflict between the said monuments of such patented claims and the descriptions of said claims in the patents issued therefor the monuments on the ground shall govern, and erroneous or inconsistent descriptions or calls in the patent descriptions shall give way thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to direct and prescribe the practice with reference to determining the relations of patented mining claims to the public domain and ascertaining, in case of controversy, what land the Government has really conveyed. It amends section 2327 of the Revised Statutes, which is the section now in force with regard to this matter. But in thus amending the statute it does not, in the opinion of its framers and supporters, change the existing law or do anything more than to put in statutory form what the law really is and always has been since the time of the yearbooks. The bill is substantially the same as Senate bill 3596, which passed the Senate on March 5 last. Indeed, the language of the two bills is identical to and through the word "accordingly," in line 7, page 2, of the bill. Thereafter the Senate bill reads as follows:

The said monuments shall at all times constitute the highest authority as to what land is patented, and erroneous calls in the patent description shall give way thereto.

And the bill now under consideration reads as follows:

The said monuments shall at all times constitute the highest authority as to what land is patented, and in case of any conflict between the said monuments of such patented claims and the descriptions of said claims in the patents issued therefor the monuments on the ground shall govern, and erroneous or inconsistent descriptions or calls in the patent descriptions shall give way thereto.

It will be seen that the only difference between the two bills is that the language of the House bill is slightly more specific and seeks more in detail to correct the evils which both bills are designed to remedy. Both bills prescribe that the patented area shall be held and considered to be that ground which is actually marked, defined, and established on the ground and inclosed within the actual monuments, and the House bill merely follows this requirement to its conclusion, and provides that erroneous and inconsistent "calls" and descriptions in the patents shall not prevail as against the actually established physical boundaries of the property patented. The proposer of the Senate bill has accepted the amendment effected by the House bill, and, indeed, it seems transparent to anyone who considers it for a moment that the language of the Senate bill limited to erroneous "calls" might be held to be inadequate to reach the point of an inconsistent description.

In other words, the "calls" in the patent, which are the ties or distances to corners of the public survey, may be absolutely accurate, and yet, for some reason or another, the description itself may be erroneous or inconsistent with the actual ground. Thus a patent description may describe accurately a segment of the earth's surface correctly connected with the public survey and still may not be the claim which the miner thought he was patenting.

The evil that these bills seek to remedy is one that can hardly be appreciated in its full extent by those not familiar with the great and growing industry which has been so potent in the wonderful growth and prosperity of our western country, namely, the development of our mineral resources.

The matter, however, has received the consideration of three committees of this Congress and has been made the subject of strong favorable reports from each one. The Senate bill was passed after an elaborate report from the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining. That bill, when brought to this House, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands. Meanwhile the House bill, introduced prior to the passage of the Senate bill, was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and the favorable reports of both these committees are now on file in the House. The committees of both Houses have also had the benefit of the views of eminent counsel who have made mining rights and litigation their specialty, and these gentlemen also urge very strongly the adoption of some such measure. I quote from the language of the chairman of the House Committee on the Public Lands:

> The general rule of law is that where there is a conflict between the description in a conveyance and an actual, natural, or artificial boundary that the monuments prevail over the description in the conveyance.
> This rule of law, we believe, is applicable to patents as well as in every other kind of conveyance. There is some conflict with this rule of law in the administration of the law in the Land Department, so it is claimed; and it is further claimed that in construing the effect of a patent, where there is a conflict between the monuments and a patent, that the patent is held to control as against the actual location of the monuments as located upon the grant.
>
> In a matter of this kind there should be uniformity between the courts and in the Department.
> Your committee believe that this bill is only declaratory of existing law; but to secure uniformity of construction your committee believe that this bill ought to be enacted into law.

The difficulty which is thought to justify this legislative action is of comparatively recent origin, but it is growing, and unless something is done very promptly almost incalculable injury will be done to the mining interests of the country and a cloud and uncertainty will be cast over the security of ownership in mining property that will be absolutely ruinous to individuals and work great detriment to those large, progressive, and rapidly growing sections to whose prosperity the mining industries have contributed in so marked a degree.

The mining laws require, in addition to a discovery of mineral and the several acts of location of a claim, the expenditure of a considerable sum of money upon the claim and then a formal survey and location by an officer of the Government—viz, a deputy mining surveyor—as prerequisites to the issuance of a patent.

This surveyor is required to permanently mark by substantial boundaries the ground which the prospector and locator has thus appropriated and for which he is seeking a Government title. The claim then becomes a definite, certain tract of ground, whose boundaries and extent can be ascertained by the eye or by physical inspection. The act of the survey and the determination of its position is hedged about by many formalities, and it should be and is, under the intention of the law, the conclusive determination of that which the owner claims and holds. Conflicts and intersections with existing claims are required to be set forth, and every possible step is taken to render the location definite and certain. So far all is well. But the laws further require the deputy surveyor to report the results of his work to the surveyors-general in the various States and Territories, and then official maps of the public domain upon which the claims are situated are made from these results, and these become a part of the permanent records of the Interior Department.

These surveys are required to be connected, when situated upon surveyed public domain, with corners of the public survey. It often happens that these surveys, made many years ago and indistinctly marked, are in themselves faulty, and that the corners of the ground are not in the places indicated on the maps. The plats of these surveys, however, as they appear in the offices of the surveyors-general in many cases show these surveys as they hypothetically should be, regardless of the real facts. All the errors which attended the original survey and all the possibilities of error therein become applicable to the survey of a mining claim, or rather to the written description of it, and these errors are aggravated, when transcribed, by the above-mentioned discrepancies, sometimes occurring between the real and the assumed position of the monuments of the public surveys. Add to these difficulties the fact that the deputy surveyors do not always agree in their work; that the surveys are often made, particularly in periods of rapid development and mining excitement, in great haste and in exceedingly rugged and difficult country, and it is not to be wondered at that many and serious errors do creep in.

In the last few years it has been the practice of the Interior Department to regard the official data collated from various sources and then transcribed upon plats, showing the positions of the boundaries of the public surveys according to the office memoranda with regard thereto and comprised in what are called "extended sheets," as the final authority for the location of a mining claim. When an application is made for patent on supposedly vacant ground and the preliminary surveys are made, the question as to whether or not the ground is open to appropriation and patent is determined by what is shown upon the plats, regardless of what may be the fact on the ground. In this way it is claimed that in actual cases mining locations which are many feet, sometimes appreciable fractions of a mile, apart are made to show a paper conflict; and, on the other hand, ground which is located, appropriated, and patented, and in actual physical occupation, shows as unappropriated ground, subject to location and patent.

The statement of these conditions is enough to show how great is the hazard and what a disastrous effect this ruling has and is bound to have upon the mining industry of the country.

Time and again have we heard that one of the great causes of our recent national prosperity, which is our common cause of congratulation, is the wonderful increase in the mineral output of the country in the last decade—an output which for the fiscal year ending January 1, 1903, reached the tremendous aggregate, according to the very conservative figures of the Director of the Mint, of $151,758,000 in gold and silver alone, or nearly three times as much as it was for the corresponding period thirty years ago. The influx of this great amount of precious metals into the avenues of trade and the marts of the world is agreed by all to have been one of the great determining factors of our national wealth and progress during the last decade.

The further continuance of this source of wealth is absolutely dependent upon the security which the investor has in the safety of the title to his mining property, and anything that Congress may do or fail to do which interferes in any way with this feeling of security is bound to have a prejudicial influence far wider than the particular industry affected. Moreover, not only will the developing of mines and prospects be retarded by the continuance of this uncertainty, but the search for minerals and the discovery of new mines will be even more seriously interfered with.

Hitherto the hardy prospector who has braved all the hardships and inclemencies of a mountain region in his search for wealth at the hand of nature, a wealth, too, that is untainted by any oppression of the sweat shops and the grinding down of labor, a wealth the acquisition of which makes no one poorer but everyone richer, will have little reason to continue in his arduous labors. Hitherto he has had sublime confidence in the protection which the Government has thrown around his little holding so soon as it has given him his title thereto. If, now, this faith is shattered and if he must maintain a constant watch and ward to protect his property, he certainly will find other avenues for his enterprise, and the country must suffer accordingly.

Every consideration of justice, prudence, and wise legislation, every regard for simply self-interest, demands the immediate enactment of this measure.

Mr. Speaker, before the bill is ordered to be engrossed I would like to offer a formal amendment, which is to change the language on the first page.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend by inserting in line 9, page 1, after the words "have been," the words "or shall be."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BROOKS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CLERKS OF COURTS AT NEWBERN AND ELIZABETH CITY, N. C.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H. R. 14467) to amend chapter 508 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 32, part 1, Fifty-seventh Congress, entitled "An act to establish and provide for a clerk for the circuit and district courts of the United States held at Wilmington, N. C."
>
> Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 508 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 32, part 1, Fifty-seventh Congress, entitled "An act to establish and provide for a clerk for the circuit and district courts of the United States held at Wilmington, N. C.," approved April 15, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the same shall read as follows:
>
> "That section 3, chapter 282, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 17, be amended by adding thereto, at the end of said section, the following:
> "'And the circuit and district judges for the eastern district shall appoint, besides a clerk of said court, held at Raleigh, additional clerks, who shall reside and keep their offices at Wilmington, Newbern, and Elizabeth City, and be clerks both of the district and circuit courts held at Wilmington, Newbern, and Elizabeth City, and who shall have the custody and control of the records of said courts, shall give the same bonds required of the clerk of circuit and district courts of said district, and shall receive the same fees and compensation for services performed by clerks of such courts now fixed by law.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina, a motion to reconside rthe vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING LAWS RELATING TO SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3118) to amend the act approved February 18, 1895, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners,' approved August 19, 1890, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act approved February 18, 1895, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners,' approved August 19, 1890, and for other purposes," as reads "shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $100" is hereby amended to read "shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500, or both."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, as the law now stands——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (to Mr. BAKER). The bill is all right.

Mr. BAKER. This makes a misdemeanor for what the penalty is now a fine, and we have already got penalties enough.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, the gentleman is flying in the face of all the friends of organized labor all over the country. Does the gentleman want to hear an explanation?

Mr. BAKER. I do. I am listening to an explanation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. As the law now stands, for fraud on a sailor in undertaking to secure him a job by the man ordinarily called "a professional crimp" the penalty is in a civil action.

Mr. BAKER. This makes that a misdemeanor, and if so I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It does exactly that thing. Mr. Speaker, I guess we can go on. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LOCK AND DAM IN THE TENNESSEE RIVER NEAR CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill as amended, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15014) to enable the Secretary of War to contract for the erection of lock and dam in aid of navigation in the Tennessee River near Chattanooga, Tenn.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, fully authorized and empowered to grant permission to the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., or to a private corporation or company, or to individuals, as provided in section 5 of this bill, to build and construct a lock and dam across the Tennessee River at "Scott Point," near Chattanooga, Tenn., under his direction, supervision, and control, and in accordance with and conformity to the plans and designs made by Maj. Dan C. Kingman, an engineer of the United States Army, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed on March 3, 1899, with such changes and modifications as the Secretary of War may direct: Provided, That the said contracting municipality or parties shall purchase and pay for all lands on either side of the river that may be necessary to the successful construction and operation of said lock and dam, including flowage rights and rights of way for ingress and egress from public highways, and deed the same to the United States, and make all excavations, erect all stone, concrete, and timber work, furnish all materials of every character, and pay for all labor employed in the construction of said lock and dam, and give said lock and dam to the United States completed, free of all cost, expense, claims, or charges of any kind whatsoever, except for expenses connected with the preparation of plans and the superintendence, as provided in section 5 of this act, and further excepting the cost of the lock gates and ironwork and machinery necessary to operate the lock when completed, which shall be furnished by the United States.

SEC. 2. That the said municipality, corporation, company, or individuals undertaking the construction of said work shall begin the building of said lock and dam within eighteen months from the passage of this act, and the same shall be completed within four years from the date of beginning the construction, the right being reserved to the United States to enter on the construction of said lock and dam if deemed advisable at any time before the work is commenced by said contracting parties; or if begun and not carried on in strict accordance with the directions of the Secretary of War, then the United States may assume the further construction and completion of said work at its option, the cost of such further construction and completion to be paid by the said contracting municipality, corporation, company, or individuals.

SEC. 3. That the deed to the United States to the land to be purchased and donated to the same, as mentioned in the first section of this act, shall be executed and delivered within twelve months after the passage of this act; and, further, that the Secretary of War shall determine from time to time whether the work is being properly done, and may require an increase in force to be employed by the contractor so as to force the work to completion within the limit mentioned in the act.

SEC. 4. That in consideration of the construction of said lock and dam, free of cost to the United States except as provided in section 1 of this act, the United States hereby grants to the municipality, corporation, company, or persons constructing said lock and dam under the provisions of this act such rights as it possesses to use the water power produced by said dam, and to convert the same into electric power or otherwise utilize it for a period of ninety-nine years: Provided, That it or they shall furnish the necessary electric current while its or their power plant is in operation to move the gates and operate the locks and to light the United States buildings and grounds, free of cost to the United States: And provided further, That the plans for the necessary works and structures to utilize said water power shall be approved by the Secretary of War, and that nothing shall be done in the use of the water from said dam or otherwise to interfere with or in any way impede or retard the proper and complete navigation of the river at all times, nor in any way to interfere with the use and control of the same by the United States for the purposes of navigation: And provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations to govern the use of the said water power and the operations of the plant and force employed in connection therewith; and no claim shall be made against the United States for any failure of water power resulting from any cause whatever.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War in contracting for the erection of the said lock and dam to give the preference, option, or first right to contract to do said work to the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., but if said city of Chattanooga shall fail within four months from the passage of this act to formally notify the Secretary of War of its intention to construct said lock and dam and to enter into contract to do so, then to C. E. James and J. C. Guild, residents of Chattanooga, Tenn., their heirs and assigns. In case of failure on the part of said C. E. James and J. C. Guild, residents of Chattanooga, Tenn., their heirs and assigns, for a further period of eight months to formally notify the Secretary of War of their intention to proceed with the construction of the lock and dam as herein provided, then it shall be lawful for the Secretary of War to contract with any private corporation, company, firm, or persons for the construction of said lock and dam on the terms and in the manner herein provided: Provided, That the Secretary of War may require the contracting party to execute a bond, with proper sureties, before the commencement of the work in such amount as he may consider necessary, not exceeding $100,000, to insure the commencement, prosecution, and completion of the work herein authorized and compliance with the terms, conditions, and requirements of this act: Provided further, That the plans, including specifications and drawings for the work, shall be prepared at the expense of the United States, under the direction and subject to the approval of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, by the officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, having under his charge the work of improving the Tennessee River, who shall at the expense of the United States maintain a suitable force of inspectors upon the work to see that the plans and specifications are strictly carried out, and such conditions or safeguards as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may deem essential to securing proper results shall be made a part of the contract.

The expense for plans as well as for the maintenance of the force of inspectors herein referred to shall be paid from the amount appropriated for preliminary examinations, surveys, contingencies, etc., made in section 2 of the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902.

SEC. 6. That in the event the city of Chattanooga undertakes the erection of said lock and dam the Secretary of War shall extend the time provided herein for beginning the work on the same for a period not exceeding twelve months from the passage of the enabling act that the general assembly of the State of Tennessee may pass at its next regular session, enabling said municipality to undertake said work, if the same be necessary; and in the same event he shall extend the time for the completion of said lock and dam twelve months.

SEC. 7. That the right is expressly reserved in the United States to revoke by act of Congress the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred by this act; but in the event of such revocation the United States shall pay to the municipality, corporation, company, firm, or persons who may erect said lock and dam under the provisions of this act, as full damage, the reasonable value of all properties erected and lands purchased by them necessary for the enjoyment of the benefits conferred upon them by the provisions of this act: Provided, That to insure compliance with the terms of the contract and of this act, or to protect the interests of navigation, the Secretary of War shall have power at any time, before or after the completion of the work, to order a suspension of all privileges granted by this act: And provided further, That compliance with such order of suspension may be enforced by the injunction of the circuit court of the United States exercising jurisdiction in the district in which the work is situated, and proper proceedings to this end shall be instituted by the Attorney-General upon request of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed as in any way interfering with the exclusive jurisdiction over and control by the United States of the Tennessee River and the lock and dam therein to be erected for the purpose of navigation, nor as repealing or modifying any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of navigation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the substitute is to be adopted in place of the original bill. I did not follow exactly the different amendments prescribed, but take it for granted they have all been enumerated.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman the amendments are those that the gentleman and the Secretary of War placed in the bill, and the bill as now read to the House is identical with the substitute.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended.

LAWS RELATING TO AMERICAN SEAMEN.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I sent up to the Clerk's desk the wrong bill. I sent up a bill relating to the clothing of the seamen, which bill already has been passed by the House. I now ask unanimous consent to vacate the order.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order will be vacated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And I now ask unanimous consent to pass the bill S. 4375.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4375) to amend section 24 of the act approved December 21, 1898, entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce."

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of paragraph (a) of section 24 of the act approved December 21, 1898, entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," as reads "If any person shall demand or receive, either directly or indirectly, from any seaman or other person seeking employment as seaman, or from any person on his behalf, any remuneration whatever for providing him with employment, he shall for every such offense be liable to a penalty of not more than $100," is hereby amended to read "If any person shall demand or receive, either directly or indirectly, from any seaman or other person seeking employment as seaman, or from any person on his behalf, any remuneration whatever for providing him with employment, he shall for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect on and after July 1, 1904.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

OZARK AND CHEROKEE CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY AND ARKANSAS VALLEY AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass the bill (S. 5454) which is now on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and pass the Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5454) permitting the Ozark and Cherokee Central Railroad Company and the Arkansas Valley and Western Railway Company, and each or either of them, to sell and convey their railroads and other property in the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company or to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Ozark and Cherokee Central Railroad Company may sell and convey to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company or to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company all that part of the railroad of said first-named railroad company extending from Fayetteville to Okmulgee which is situate in the Indian Territory, together with all the property, rights, privileges, and franchises appurtenant or relating thereto, such sale and conveyance to be made upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the boards of directors of the respective companies parties thereto.

SEC. 2. That the Arkansas Valley and Western Railway Company may sell and convey to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company or to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company all of the railroad of said Arkansas Valley and Western Railway Company extending from Tulsa Junction, Ind. T., to Enid and Avard, Okla., together with all the property, rights, privileges, and franchises appurtenant or relating thereto, such sale and conveyance to be made upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the boards of directors of the respective companies parties thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask for some explanation of this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. This bill was recommended by the Department and unanimously reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SULZER. What Department?

Mr. CURTIS. Department of Interior, and simply permits two short railroads to be sold that now belong to the stockholders of the parent companies. The stock is all owned by the stockholders of the Rock Island and Frisco Company. They are not competing lines, but are feeders. They consist of 200 miles of road.

Mr. SULZER. These are competing lines?

Mr. CURTIS. Not at all. They are branches of the same company now. They are feeders; they are not parallel lines.

Mr. SULZER. Why does not this bill provide this transfer shall be made upon consent of the stockholders or two-thirds of the stockholders? Why should it be on consent of majority of the board of directors?

Mr. CURTIS. Because they have control of the matter under their charter.

Mr. SULZER. Are there no individual stockholders outside of the directory?

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, I suppose there are a few.

Mr. SULZER. I do not care to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

HARRY C. MIX.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass the bill H. R. 875.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to pass the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 875) for the relief of Harry C. Mix.

Be it enacted, etc., That Harry C. Mix, of Bibb County, Ga., be, and he is hereby, relieved from any and all liability to pay a certain recognizance given by A. F. Holt and the said Harry C. Mix as security for the said A. F. Holt on the 23d day of January, 1895, in the penal sum of $1,500, by which recognizance they acknowledged themselves to be held and firmly bound to the United States of America that the said A. F. Holt should personally appear at the then next term of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Georgia, to be held at Savannah, Ga., in said district, on the first Monday in January, 1895, and at the succeeding term or terms, should the case be continued, the said A. F. Holt being charged with the embezzlement of postal funds: Provided, however, That the said Harry C. Mix shall first pay to the Government of the United States all costs that may have accrued upon any proceeding instituted for the purpose of forfeiting such recognizance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REIMBURSING GOVERNORS OF STATES AND TERRITORIES.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which he sends to the desk and of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1343) to amend an act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain,' approved July 8, 1898," and so forth, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of making a statement, that punctually at and after twelve minutes past 5 o'clock I shall object to any more unanimous consents. I do not want to be invidious, but I think this is rather important. I now withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain,' approved July 8, 1898, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking therefrom the words "nineteen hundred and two" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "nineteen hundred and six;" so that the same shall read:

"SEC. 6. That all claims for reimbursement under this act or the act approved July 8, 1898, shall be presented in itemized form to the Treasury Department on or before January 1, 1906, or be forever barred."

SEC. 2. That any claim or any item of a claim heretofore presented under the provisions of said acts approved July 8, 1898, and March 3, 1899, respectively, and disallowed by any Auditor, the Comptroller, or any other officer of the Treasury Department, shall, on application of the governor or other duly authorized officer or agent of the State or Territory, made on or before the 1st day of January, 1906, be reopened, considered, audited, and settled anew by said officers of the Treasury Department in accordance with the provisions of said acts.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all of section 2 and insert the following:

"That where the governor of any State or Territory has furnished military transportation, or has purchased or authorized the purchase of supplies, or incurred expenses for services rendered, and which purchases of supplies and expenses for military transportation and services rendered have been certified by the governor of such State or Territory as necessary, just, and reasonable for the organization, maintenance, transportation, and comfort of troops raised by him and accepted into the service of the United States Army in the said war with Spain, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow in the settlement of claims for reimbursement now on file in the office of the Auditor for the War Department, such items or parts thereof as have been disallowed in the consideration of said claims, for the reason that they appear to have been for stores furnished or expenses incurred or transportation furnished after the troops raised had been mustered into the service of the United States, and the certificate of the governor of any such State or Territory that such expenses were incurred in good faith, for the sole purpose of aiding the United States in the raising, organization, transportation, and equipment of troops, shall be held to be sufficient to authorize the final settlement and payment in full of such claims for reimbursement."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to send forward an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear from the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, this bill interests nearly all of the States. During the war with Spain the original act required the governors of States by the 1st of January, 1904, to have their claims in. The Comptroller of the Treasury made his decisions about the time the act was expiring, but the governors did not receive or have any knowledge of those decisions. It is merely to let in two classes of claims. These troops were in the field. The States had their troops in their different camps. The United States mustering officer went to these camps and mustered them into service.

By telephone message the Secretary of War requested the governors to take care of these troops until they could be taken and moved by the United States War Department. These governors did so. When it came to the Comptroller of the Treasury, he suspended all these claims—he did not reject them—holding that under the original act he could not allow any money for the maintenance and support of the troops after they had been mustered into the United States service. This is simply to authorize the Treasury Department, on claims that have been suspended, to pay these governors the amount they paid for clothing, food, and for taking care of these troops.

I want to state further, Mr. Speaker, that when the Senate bill came to the Committee on War Claims section 2 of it provided that all the accounts should be reopened and reaudited. The Committee on War Claims struck that section out and confined it to the claims that I have just mentioned.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], this is a bill which provides on what terms the Auditor shall audit these accounts?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And it is intended to allow the claims of soldiers from the time they went to the mustering camp and not from the time they were actually mustered in?

Mr. MAHON. No, no. They have been paid up to the time they were mustered, but these troops were held in the State camps, and by order of the Secretary of War the governors took care of them for some ten or twelve days or two weeks, until the United States Government marched them out of the State camps. The States provided all the rations and food, and took care of them during that time. The Comptroller holds that after they were mustered in he can not pay them, under the original act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And that is all that is covered under this bill?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether, if unanimous consent is given, he will yield for an amendment?

Mr. MAHON. That depends on what the amendment is.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I sent forward an amendment which I think will improve the bill.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no; the gentleman submitted that amendment to the committee, and the committee rejected it unanimously. Its adoption would open up the whole matter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does this bill apply to all the States alike?

Mr. MAHON. All the States alike.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if the Indianapolis claim is embodied in this?

Mr. MAHON. There are nothing but State claims.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I mean the claim now growing out of the fact of soldiers being taken to Indianapolis and destroying property at the camp. Would this bill open up the matter so as to allow that kind of a claim?

Mr. MAHON. No; the claim must come from the governor of a State.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to permit the amendment to be read. No harm can be done by that.

Mr. MAHON. Well, read it. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. POU rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for the offering or for the reading of the amendment?

Mr. MAHON. Just for the reading.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that if the amendment is voted down I propose to support the bill in its original form.

Mr. MAHON. Let it be read for information.

Mr. POU. I do not care to withdraw my objection unless the gentleman will agree to permit me to offer the amendment.

Mr. MAHON. Well, read it.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, we want also to have some arrangement or understanding about being heard on this amendment. We desire, on behalf of the State of North Carolina at any rate, to be briefly heard.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think the House has gotten into a little confusion on this subject. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] is asking for unanimous consent, and, as I understand, no unanimous consent has been granted. Yet I think some gentlemen are laboring under the contrary impression. I ask the Chair what is the parliamentary status?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has not been given. And now the Chair will ask, Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I reserve the right to object unless some arrangement such as I have indicated can be made.

Mr. POU. There is an agreement, as I understand, that my amendment may be read.

The SPEAKER. During the delay of ascertaining whether there is unanimous consent, many other gentlemen are waiting to submit their propositions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In order to dispose of this matter for the present, I object.

RICHARD T. CORBIN.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back with amendments House resolution 279, which was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House (miscellaneous items, 1903), to Richard T. Corbin the sum of $60, for services rendered as a laborer in the Doorkeeper's department during the month of April, 1903.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 3 strike out the words "miscellaneous items, 1903."
In lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "during the month of April, 1903."

The amendments were agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

STENOGRAPHER IN OFFICE OF JOURNAL CLERK.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back House resolution 314, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That for the remainder of this session there shall be employed and paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $6 per day, a stenographer in the office of the journal clerk.

The resolution was agreed to.

CAMPBELL SLEMP.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably House resolution No. 322, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to CAMPBELL SLEMP, the sum of $1,500, being the amount expended by and recommended to be paid to him, as shown in House report from the Committee on Claims, No. 2374, second session Fifty-eighth Congress, on account of mandamus proceedings before the supreme court of the State of Virginia in the case of Slemp against Rhea, growing out of the election in 1902 of a Representative to the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Ninth Congressional district of said State of Virginia, said amount to be paid upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I should like to understand something about this resolution.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say for the information of gentlemen that this is merely a resolution for the payment of the expenses of CAMPBELL SLEMP in connection with the election contest of Slemp v. Rhea for his seat in the Fifty-eighth Congress. The claim was favorably reported by the Committee on Claims in this Congress, but on account of the difficulty of getting a bill for payment considered, the session being so near its close, the matter was re-referred to the Committee on Accounts.

The committee has carefully investigated the whole matter and has unanimously reported this resolution, and while the committee hesitated to consider this resolution to be paid out of the contingent fund, as the Committee on Claims has stated in their report, it is unquestionably a saving to the Government of the difference between $10,000 and $1,500. Had Mr. Slemp left this contest to be settled by the House of Representatives, which he had a right to do, each one of the contestants would have been entitled to $2,000, and Rhea would have drawn the salary for at least one year, making a total cost of $10,000, and this resolution pays all for $1,500.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is this for the payment of any expenses which have been incurred in connection with the House of Representatives?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. In connection with a Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, suppose a Member incurs a board bill. Does that give the Committee on Accounts jurisdiction? Is this item for anything that has occurred in connection with the House of Representatives?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Only in this way——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the time has gone by. I make the point of order against this being a privileged resolution.

Mr. MADDOX. I am glad the gentleman did that, because I was going to make the same point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks unanimous consent that the matter go over until to-morrow morning, so that the point of order may be passed upon. It has proper clothing from the contingent fund, but the point of order is made, and the Chair is not prepared to rule upon it. The Chair asks unanimous consent that the matter may go over until to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FOLDING SPEECHES AND PAMPHLETS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the sum of not exceeding $3,000 is hereby authorized to be expended, under the direction of the Doorkeeper of the House, for the purpose of folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to make payment hereunder out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an additional clerk to said committee, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per day during the remainder of the present session.

The resolution was agreed to.

B. B. HARE.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to B. B. Hare the sum of $32.26, for services rendered as clerk to the late Representative G. W. Croft, of South Carolina, from March 1, 1904, to March 10, 1904, inclusive.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOEL GRAYSON.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Joel Grayson, for services and expenses incurred by him on the compilation of the antitrust laws, the sum of $800, to be paid out of the contingent fund.

A committee amendment, striking out $800 and inserting $400 was read.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is this a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that under the rules it is. The rule is very broad. It covers all matters—

Touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does this matter properly come under the head of an expenditure from the contingent fund?

The SPEAKER. On its face it is for an expenditure from the contingent fund, for an employee of the House.

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to have the Chair tell us what it is for and what it is about.

The SPEAKER. The Chair yields to the gentleman from West Virginia. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I will say for the information of the gentleman that it is for compiling the antitrust laws. No doubt the gentleman has received some copies of this book for distribution through the folding room. As I am not an attorney I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] to make the explanation more full.

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to inquire who authorized this gentleman to do this, and why he now comes here to ask payment for it?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to explain this resolution to my colleague and to the House. The compilation is a very valuable one. It was made by Mr. Grayson, a House employee in the document room. It is a compilation of all the antitrust laws. It took a great deal of work. It has been printed by the Government, and this simply pays for the work of the compilation. I do not know that it was authorized by the House in the first place, but the Government has accepted the compilation, has published it as a document, and has put it to the credit of Members of the House in the folding room. This is simply to pay $400, the amount that the committee have recommended.

Mr. MADDOX. And all this was done without any authority of law up to date.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think so. The House has had it printed—ratifying the work—has accepted it; and on the quantum meruit this gentleman, I should think, would be entitled to what it was reasonably worth. The resolution as introduced provided for the payment of $800; but after hearing the evidence on the matter the committee concluded that $400 would be a very moderate and reasonable compensation.

Mr. MADDOX. I agree, if I may be allowed a minute or two, with all you say as to the document being a valuable one; but, gentlemen, this is an infamous system of business. Now, the idea that a man may undertake to do a work that he thinks is valuable and then come to Congress and unload it upon us!

Mr. BARTLETT. He has not unloaded it upon us?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that there was some so-called "antitrust" legislation enacted in the closing days of the last Congress?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Grayson went to work and got up all this compilation. He made no pretense that Congress was pledged to pay him anything for doing it. He never has made any pretense that Congress has to make any payment. It was necessary to make the compilation, not only for the benefit of Congress, but for the country, and it was distributed very widely, because there was a very great demand for such information. Now, the question simply is, having made that compilation, without any claim of liability on the part of the Government, whether it is our part to recompense him for that service.

Mr. MADDOX. Your explanation is full and satisfactory. But what I want to fight as long as I can is the idea of a man getting up a publication and then coming to Congress. But if this was done voluntarily, why that does away with my objection, and I am just as willing to pay him as any man in this House.

Mr. BARTLETT. My colleague will understand me, and he understands me as well as any man in the House, so far as I am concerned I am fully in accord with him. This compilation was made at the end of last Congress at the suggestion of some very prominent gentlemen who took part in the antitrust legislation. Mr. Grayson went to work and overhauled the statutes and collated them and made them easily accessible. It was necessary in order that the country might know what really were the laws upon this subject.

Mr. PAYNE. The suggestion is whether this ought to go over with the other and have it decided whether the Committee on Accounts have jurisdiction to pay claims for which there is no law and no employment. I think that is a matter that ought to be determined. I think the thing ought to be determined here and determined now, whether the Committee on Accounts may make expenditures from the contingent fund of the House and have them privileged where there is no law upon which they are based.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say to the gentleman from New York, the Chair can have no doubt about this being within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Accounts, because it proposes——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will allow the Chair, it is not necessary for the Chair to hear the gentleman from Georgia further. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New York that the Chair is quite well satisfied, after something of an examination, that this is a privileged report and that it is not upon all fours with the other resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest right there whether the chairman of the Committee on Accounts can under the law make payments that are not in pursuance of law. If this contingent fund, which is provided by law, can be expended for all sorts of purposes, it ought to be known to the House. As I understand it, this man was never employed by the House in any capacity, but was employed by one Member of the House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. He is an employee of the House all the time, provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill by name, because he is the most valuable man connected with the House as an employee. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Was he employed for this purpose?

Mr. MANN. He was not employed for this purpose. He voluntarily did this work in the document room.

Mr. PAYNE. Because he happened to be an employee of the House he did this work. Now, the question is whether that is a proper expenditure for the Committee on Accounts to make.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I want to say for the information of the gentleman from New York that the Committee on Accounts does not bring in any resolution appropriating money out of the contingent fund until they have carefully investigated each case. They have done so in this case, and they think this gentleman entitled to this money; and therefore they bring in this resolution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is this document in the nature of ammunition for the trust busters to send out?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I guess you might consider that it was.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the House will not refuse to pay for it, then.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in reference to the services that this employee rendered that these laws were passed at various times. There were some of them incorporated in appropriation bills, and this employee, at the suggestion of some very prominent gentlemen of this House, went to work and compiled them. This work has been one of the most valuable that has been done. It has been distributed by Members of the House to their constituents all over the country. It is now ready for distribution, and is accessible. The House has availed itself of the work, and the sum proposed to be paid is a very reasonable one, and the man who performed the work ought to receive it.

The SPEAKER. Is the point of order made against the resolution?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the point of order has been raised against the other resolution which is to be considered in the morning, and I want simply a decision as to what the rights of the Committee on Accounts are.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman from New York——

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will not make the point of order on this.

The SPEAKER. It seems, on second thought, it is perhaps too late to make the point of order, because this matter has been debated. Now, a motion to postpone would be in order.

Mr. HAY. Regular order, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. PAYNE. I understand there is but one other report from the Committee on Accounts; therefore a motion to adjourn will be in order and take it over until to-morrow morning. [Cries of "Let us vote!"] I will not press the motion.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I say a word? Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, as a member of the minority of the Committee on Accounts, we have been very careful and have never undertaken to attempt any legislation on any matter which we did not believe we ought to have, and we have refused time and time again and have sent bills back which were referred to us upon the ground that we had no jurisdiction, and both the majority and minority members have endeavored to confine themselves strictly——

Mr. PAYNE. I am making no reflection upon the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

G. S. W. LEWIS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. There is one more report, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 273.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, G. S. W. Lewis, colored, for services rendered as a laborer from January 12, 1904, to and including January 16, 1904, at the rate which he was receiving on January 12, 1904.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 3, after the word "colored," insert the words "the sum of $10."
Strike out lines 6 and 7.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SENATE DOCUMENT NO. 235, FIFTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following House resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana presents the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, to be distributed through the House document room, 100,000 copies of Senate Document No. 235, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is that?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. This is a document including the order of the Commissioner of Pensions, under the date of March 15, 1904, concerning pensions under the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many thousand?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. One hundred thousand. I will say that the superintendent of the document room states that—

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It has been printed twenty-five or thirty times in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, about 15,000 daily copies of which go out all over the country——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I do not. I was saying the superintendent of the document room states from the demands already made he is satisfied that 100,000 copies of this order will not be sufficient.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Sufficient for whom?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. For the people—for the demands of Members of Congress, and the demands on the Pension Bureau.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How are you going to distribute them?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. They will be distributed through the House document room.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman they be put in the folding room.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. No; they will be distributed from the House document room.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if they are to be distributed through the House document room, it is the most industrious Member, the one who gets there first, who will get as many as he wants. I believe they ought to be distributed through the folding room and distributed equally among the Members.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say the total cost of the 100,000 copies will not be in excess of $500, and if an additional demand is made more will be printed.

Mr. GIBSON. Let one-half be distributed through the document room and the other half through the folding room.

Mr. MANN. If it goes through the folding room the expense of distribution will be a good deal more than $500 and if it goes through the document room anyone will get as many as they want without trouble. I think 100,000 will do and leave plenty over.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The committee thought it best to have them distributed through the House document room.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, ETC.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following conference report, to be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed under the rules.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 4769, entitled "An act validating certain conveyances of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede.

JOHN F. LACEY,
JOS. M. DIXON,
Managers on the part of the House.
KNUTE NELSON,
CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
E. W. PETTUS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The effect of the agreement is to place the conveyances of lots in the railway right of way in the even sections on the same footing as those in the odd-numbered sections.

The United States Supreme Court in its decision holds that the right-of-way title is a base fee with reverter to the Government, and that no title has vested in the owners of the adjacent land. This being the case, it is deemed necessary and proper to validate the conveyances in all the sections.

JOHN F. LACEY.
JOS. M. DIXON.

That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the street railways or public highways leading to the said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal telegraph purposes.

Nelson for extra services as mail messenger in United States Senate post-office from July 1, 1900, to March 1, 1903, inclusive, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

INVESTMENT OF CAPITAL INDEPENDENT OF TRUSTS.

Mr. BACON. I desire to submit a proposed amendment to the following resolution, which is now pending, submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] on the 18th instant:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to prepare and send to the Senate a statement showing what companies have been incorporated in the United States and what investments of capital made by individuals or copartnerships since the year 1900, outside and independent of the so-called "trusts," and the aggregate capital, compared with the total capitalization of the trust combinations.

I offer a proposed amendment, which I ask may be read and printed and lie on the table with the original resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

Resolved further, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to procure, so far as practicable, the information hereinafter specified, and report the same to the Senate during the present session of Congress if practicable.

First. What classes of goods manufactured in the United States have, during the year ending December 31, 1903, been sold or offered for sale in foreign countries, or for export to foreign countries, by the manufacturers thereof, or through their representatives or agents, at prices less than the same classes of goods were during the same period sold in the United States by the manufacturers thereof, or through their representatives or agents; the said report, while including so far as practicable all classes of goods so manufactured and sold, to have special reference to manufactures of iron and steel and other metals, of glass and crockery, textile goods and the manufactures thereof, boots, shoes, and other manufactures of leather, hats and caps and other wearing apparel, household and kitchen utensils and wares, household and kitchen furniture, sewing machines, vehicles of all kinds, farm implements and farm machinery and other machinery of all kinds, cutlery and tools of all kinds, watches, jewelry, and other articles for household and personal use, comfort, or adornment; and the said report to give the comparative prices in said sales separately for each of the said classes of goods, and the fore gn countries in which or for export to which said sales were made.

Second. What, separately stated as to each class of goods, was the general average during the said period of the said comparative prices in sales in the United States and in the several foreign countries.

Third. If, during the said period, the said comparative prices in any instances fluctuated materially from said average, then stated separately, what were, in such instances, the comparative prices in said sales, in the several classes of goods embraced in such instances, at different periods in the year when said fluctuations occurred.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is further directed to make said reports as soon as practicable, and if, when the same shall be completed, the Senate shall not be then in session, he is hereby directed to file same with the Secretary of the Senate, and there shall thereupon be copies of said reports immediately printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

LAST SPEECH OF THE LATE PRESIDENT M'KINLEY.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask an order for printing 5,000 extra copies of Senate Document No. 268, Fifty-eighth Congress, being the last speech of President McKinley, delivered at Buffalo, September 5, 1901. The demand for the speech is very large and the copies authorized are insufficient to meet it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator any idea of the cost?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I understand that it is comparatively only a small sum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Less than $500?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Considerably less than $500.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 5,000 extra copies of Senate Document No. 268, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, being the last speech of President McKinley, delivered at Buffalo, September 5, 1901.

THOMAS J. CAMPTON.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 10046) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Campton, the beneficiary of the said bill having died.

GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a bill on the table introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] day before yesterday, which was read once.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask that it be read the second time, and I ask also for its present consideration. It is a very brief amendment, to which there is no objection, I presume.

The bill (S. 5583) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs," approved March 3, 1901, was read the second time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks that the bill may be now considered. It will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend the act approved March 3, 1903, by adding thereto one section, to be designated as section 4, which will read as follows:

SEC. 4. That said corporation be, and it is hereby, authorized to hold its biennial meetings at such places outside of Washington, in the District of Columbia, as it from time to time may deem best.

Mr. BACON. May I ask the Senator a question? I do not know whether I caught the phraseology aright. The bill limits the meeting to the District of Columbia, but authorizes it outside the city. Is that it?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Their biennial meetings are held in different cities throughout the United States. Under the charter as it was enacted by Congress the opinion prevails that they are forbidden from holding their biennial meetings in different cities throughout the country. This amendment simply makes that clear, giving them the authority to do so.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection, of course, to the bill, because the character of the organization is such that no harm can come from it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. No.

Mr. BACON. But as a principle, it is beyond the power of Congress to give any corporate powers in a State, unless it is some matter which relates to Federal functions or the public necessities of the Government. With that statement I am willing that the bill should pass, it not being designed, I understand, to confer any power in the States.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. None whatever.

Mr. BACON. I was sure that was not the reason, but I thought it better that the bill should not pass without this statement, because otherwise it might be taken as a precedent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF SVEN J. JOHNSON.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 2009) for the relief of the estate of Sven J. Johnson.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue duplicates to the legal representative of Sven J. Johnson, also known as John Johnson, in lieu of United States 4 per cent registered bonds, funded loan of 1907, Nos. 45369, 45370, 45372, 45373, for $100 each, inscribed in the name of John Johnson, and alleged to have been stolen after having been assigned in blank.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8690) to amend the law relating to taxation in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. 875) for the relief of Harry C. Mix was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 7262) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians in the State of New York, and extend protection of the laws of the United States and of the State of New York over them, to provide for the sale of lands now leased in perpetuity, and to provide for disposition of the so-called Ogden claim, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 14467) to amend chapter 508 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 32, part 1, Fifty-seventh Congress, entitled "An act to establish and provide for a clerk for the circuit and district courts of the United States held at Wilmington, N. C.," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 15014) to enable the Secretary of War to permit the erection of a lock and dam in aid of navigation in the Tennessee River near Chattanooga, Tenn., and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ESTATE OF WARREN MITCHELL.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate take up the bill (H. R. 1700) for the relief of the legal representatives of Warren Mitchell, deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 1700, which will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not think that bill ought to be considered hastily. It is an old acquaintance of mine. When I was chairman of the Committee on Claims a number of years ago it was considered, and the claim has been considered a number of times. I remember making a very elaborate and laborious report adverse to it, and I supposed it had gone to sleep. If there is some new evidence, I should want to look it over.

Mr. WARREN. I observe the Chair stated that I asked unanimous consent. I moved to take up the bill. It is one that has passed the House unanimously. It is a bill too large in amount, perhaps, to be considered in an omnibus claims bill, and one that I should like to have the sense of the Senate upon. I believe it is worthy of consideration. I therefore moved to take it up.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the motion been adopted? Of course the motion is not debatable, I know.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us have a vote by yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the bill is taken up at this time on motion, the Chair would hold that it would be under Rule VIII.

Mr. WARREN. And subject to objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which would subject it to objection and also to a limitation of debate.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if I may be allowed, I desire to say a word in regard to the conduct of the business of the Senate. It does seem to me that where a bill has passed the House after a thorough consideration it ought at least to have the sense of the Senate taken upon it.

I think the Chair and the Senate will understand the embarrassment under which the Committee on Claims is laboring in attempting to bring in here an omnibus claims bill, which should naturally be confined to Court of Claims findings and such bills as have passed one or the other of the Houses of Congress, and which are for small or moderate amounts.

Here is a bill which is clearly within the rule adopted by the committee, clearly within all committee rules, as to going upon the omnibus claims bill. But I think it too large in amount and too important to be put in an omnibus with a lot of others, and therefore I consider that it ought to be treated alone.

I have no remarks to make upon the bill unless debate is provoked by others. I hope the Senator will let it come to a vote of the Senate, and I will be content.

Mr. SPOONER. It can not come to a vote of the Senate in five minutes. It will be necessary to read the report which was years ago made on the bill. I then spent a great deal of time on it. I was at first favorably inclined to the bill. It had been reported a number of times favorably. But my investigation made it very obvious to me that the bill ought not to pass; and it can not pass now without debate, and full debate.

If there is any new evidence, that is another proposition. I have no objection to the bill being taken up, but it will be debated.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, one word further. I want the attention of the Senate to this matter, so that Senators may understand where we are as to this and similar bills.

It seems useless to have the Committee on Claims burn up time day after day and the midnight oil night after night and after careful, laborious, and painstaking work bring matters in here favorably reported for which we can not get consideration. I care not whether the bill passes or does not pass, as may be the sense of the Senate upon it. I should not have presented the bill here on a favorable report unless I had given it sufficient study and sufficient attention to convince me that the bill was equitable and ought to pass. But be that as it may, I am willing to submit it to the Senate for a vote.

If we are in the condition the Chair assumes we are in and which of course I grant we must be, as the Chair is always correct—that a bill of this kind can not be taken up except subject to objection and for only five-minute speeches—then of course every claim against the United States is subject to the capricious objection of any one Senator. That is the condition a creditor of the United States is in if there is the least point of controversy about his claim. If, unfortunately, some one has a claim against the United States and comes to the Senate for relief, any one man occupying a seat in this body as a member can prevent even the consideration of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not wish to be misunderstood. The Chair would hold that bills taken up before 2 o'clock are subject to objection, and that they are to be debated under Rule VIII. But if an objection is made and then a motion is made to proceed to its consideration notwithstanding the objection, and that motion prevails, it is not under Rule VIII.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, just a word as to the order of business in the Senate. We are approaching the end of this session. There are two general appropriation bills now before the Senate awaiting action. It seems to me that it should be the policy of the Senate——

Mr. BERRY. There are three, I will state to the Senate. There is the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are three now awaiting action. It seems to me the Senate should proceed with the public business first and pass the appropriation bills which are now pending. There certainly will be ample opportunity for any bill that receives the approval of a majority of the Senate to be considered and acted upon after the appropriation bills are out of the way.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Rhode Island knows very well that practically that is not true, while technically it may be true. He knows that there will not be ample time to take up the Calendar, because he knows from the pressure we have upon us——

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator did not quite report my language correctly. I said any bill that the majority of the Senate is in favor of and desires to have considered.

Mr. WARREN. And that nobody objects to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not say that. It is always within the power——

Mr. WARREN. Practically that is what the Senator said.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon. It is within his power as chairman of the Committee on Claims at any time, either in the morning hour or after the morning hour, to move to displace any order of business, any appropriation bill, or other bill which is before the Senate, and to proceed to the consideration of claims bills or a claims bill.

Mr. WARREN. I have just made the motion to take up a claims bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. And if a majority of the Senate is with the Senator, then he has a right to have the bill considered. But if a majority of the Senate should think that the public business should be proceeded with first and that private claims should be considered afterwards, his remedy will not be a good one.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the appropriation bill that is supposed to just now have priority stands on the Calendar this morning as the unfinished business to come up at 2 o'clock. This leaves the time up to 2 o'clock for the consideration of any other bill or bills. I took the very course the Senator from Rhode Island suggested in moving to take up this bill, presuming that it would be disposed of soon, one way or the other. I have made a motion to take up the bill, and that motion is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the request of the Senator from Wyoming, the Senator now moves——

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Chair's pardon; if he will permit me, the request was not made for unanimous consent. The Senator from Wyoming moved to take up the bill. He did not ask to have it considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair put the question to the Senate in that way. Whether he did it understandingly or not the Chair does not know.

Mr. WARREN. The President of the Senate did put it as a request for unanimous consent, and that having been denied, I now move to take up the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. That was not the suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. That is very true. I made the motion to take up in the first place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes have it.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MONEY. Before the yeas and nays are called, let us have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the legal representatives of Warren Mitchell, deceased, late of Louisville, Ky., the sum of $128,692.22, being proceeds of captured property and found to be in the Treasury by the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to ask for information, Is this one of the so-called "cotton claims?"

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that it is not one of the so-called "cotton claims" in the sense he perhaps considers it, with reference to other cotton-claims bills.

Mr. MONEY. If the Chair will bear with me for a minute I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if this is a claim for the proceeds of cotton captured under the act of March 13, 1863, called the "captured and abandoned property act?"

Mr. WARREN. It is for the payment of cotton which the books of the Treasury show was taken from this man Mitchell, particularly, and for which the Government received one hundred and twenty-odd thousand dollars in gold.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I think I shall have to object to the consideration of the merits of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I see that he is not present. I therefore transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. PETTUS. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. MALLORY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], who is necessarily absent from the city. I inadvertently voted, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BATE. I do not think that is necessary, this not being a political question.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well. Then, with the announcement that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is necessarily absent, I will allow my vote to stand in view of what his colleague [Mr. BATE] has said.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 19, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. WARREN was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1700) for the relief of the legal representatives of Warren Mitchell, deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand that this bill is now to be considered under Rule VIII?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not, having been taken up by motion after objection was made.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then it is now open to indefinite debate. I ask for the reading of the bill. Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the bill be reread. Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WARREN March 2, 1904:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1700) for the relief of the legal representatives of Warren Mitchell, deceased, having carefully considered the same, hereby report it back to the Senate and recommend its passage without amendment.

The facts as set forth in House Report No. 21, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, sustain your committee in its favorable action.

The report of the House is adopted by your committee and made a part of their report, as follows:

[House Report No. 21, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session.]

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred House bill 1700, respectfully submit the following report:

"At the breaking out of the war of the rebellion Warren Mitchell resided at Louisville, Ky. He was a merchant with extensive interests and connections, and had large amounts owing him in various sections of the South. General Anderson, commanding the Department of Kentucky, gave him a pass to enter the Confederate lines, and he went South 'solely for the purpose of saving himself from financial ruin, leaving his wife at Louisville,' and engaged in the proper and legitimate occupation of collecting, in the most available commodities, the amounts due him.

"His base of operations was Memphis and Nashville, Tenn., and by December, 1864, he had gathered together 724 bales of cotton and had the same stored at Savannah, Ga., where it was seized by General Sherman, sold, and the proceeds, amounting to $128,692.22, turned into the Treasury.

"Mr. Mitchell's character for loyalty, truthfulness, integrity, and honor is amply sustained by such men as Virgil McKnight, ex-Senator John W. Stevenson, Hon. Benjamin H. Bristow, and Maj. Gen. L. H. Rosseau, nor is it to be presumed that General Anderson would have issued a pass to a Confederate sympathizer.

"Mr. Mitchell promptly brought his suit in the Court of Claims under the 'abandoned and captured property act,' and the court being equally divided upon his right to recover his petition was dismissed. On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the sole issue was, not his loyalty, nor the amount of his loss, but the question of his domicile. Attorney-General Williams thus stated the proposition:

"'If Mitchell acquired a domicile within the Confederate lines his business there was legitimate, and he is entitled to recover; if not, his business there was illegitimate, and he is not entitled to recover.'

"The Supreme Court stated the question thus:

"'Hence this case turns upon the point whether the appellant was domiciled in the Confederate States when he bought the cotton in question.' (21 Wall., 353.)

"As a matter of fact, Mitchell resided for over three years in Tennessee in the laudable endeavor to protect his property, and he exercised many of the rights of citizenship, and it may well be questioned whether, if the case had been differently presented, the decision would not have been different.

"In commenting on this feature of the case it is plain that the Supreme Court, in view of the petitioner's equities, must have felt a strong desire to be freed from the harsh rule of law under which they felt constrained to act, when they frankly tell us, at the end of their opinion, that 'obviously important further facts bearing on the question might have been put in evidence by either party. We regret that this was not done. As the case is presented, our conclusion must necessarily be against the appellant.'

"The court held, however, that it appeared from the record Mitchell was a citizen of the State of Kentucky at the time of the seizure, and that therefore and for no other reason his business was illegitimate and he acquired no title to the property taken in payment of debts due him, because Kentucky was a loyal State, and the nonintercourse laws prohibited traffic between its citizens and citizens of States in rebellion.

"In his brief before the Supreme Court John M. Harlan, now one of its justices, made the following unquestioned but startling proposition, when considered in the light of the court's decision:

"'Had Mitchell, upon his entering the Confederate lines in July, 1861, joined the rebel army and become the owner of this identical cotton while he was endeavoring to overturn the Government of the Union, it could scarcely be doubted that under the present course of decisions his right to recover the proceeds of the cotton could not be questioned.'

"The decision of the court, therefore, was to the effect that if Mr. Mitchell had denied his allegiance to the United States and had become a citizen of Tennessee, instead of remaining loyal to the Union and to the State of his birth, he could have recovered in his suit, because he would not have been amenable to the nonintercourse laws, and his disloyalty would have been condoned by the President's amnesty proclamations. (U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall., 128.)

"The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that the proceeds of the abandoned and captured property now in the Treasury are merely 'trust funds' (U. S. v. Padelford, 9 Wall., 543), and millions of dollars have been distributed to the legal owners upon that theory, and since the decision in the Klein case, above, it has not been questioned that the amnesty proclamations restored all property rights, even to disloyal persons. If, as said by Mr. Harlan, this decedent claimant had been an active rebel in the field, he could still have recovered under the Klein decision. In this case the return of these 'trust funds' by the trustee, who holds and claims nothing but the naked legal title, is not prevented by disloyalty or fraud, but by the mere accident of domicile.

"Your committee does not doubt or criticise the decision of the Supreme Court, harsh and technical as it is, but the question now presented is, Shall this Government, by the mere exercise of an arbitrary power, longer keep from this claimant the proceeds of property which, in every sense except the technical one that the courts of law can not recognize his right to sue for it, is rightfully his; property to which the Government can make and does make no lawful claim; not confiscated or confiscable; not in its possession or control under any law except one that has been declared by its courts to make it a trustee of such property? The claimant appeals to the sovereign, whose citizen he is, for that justice which is his due.

"Here no technical construction of law can be held to overthrow the real merits or equities of a case. To do absolute justice is the highest duty, as well as the undisputed power, of Congress. It is hard to conceive upon what moral principle this money can be longer kept in the Treasury of the United States or the hand of arbitrary power be placed so heavily on the children of this man, who passed his old age and died in poverty merely because of the accident of his residence in the loyal State of Kentucky instead of the disloyal one of Tennessee.

"Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage."

In Cutner v. United States (34 U. S., 517-520) the material facts were identical with those in this case. The Supreme Court held that:

"The sale being illegal, the suit can not be sustained for the benefit of the venders. It can not be sustained for Cutner's own benefit, because he received the full consideration of the cotton and has no interest remaining."

The Supreme Court has also held, in numerous cases, that the proceeds of abandoned and captured property in the Treasury constitute a trust fund, and that the title to the property was not divested from the original owners by operation of that act. (U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall., 128; U. S. v. Padelford, 9 Wall., 531; Wylie v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cls., 295.)

The application of these rules to this case estops Mitchell's venders from maintaining an action for the value of the property, for the reason that they had received full consideration from Mitchell; they also prevent Mitchell from recovering, and thereby present practically the anomalous proposition that a trustee can, by his own acts, convert a trust estate into a fee, or in other words, that he can destroy the rights of a cestui qui trust by confiscation of the trust fund.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I assume that it is due to the Senate that I should state some reason for reporting favorably this bill from the committee. I want to be absolutely fair with regard to it and to say that it has been reported adversely as well as favorably heretofore, both to the Senate and the House of Representatives. So far as I was personally concerned, I did not feel called upon to give the claim attention for the some nine years and over that it had been pending before Congress after I became a member of the Committee on Claims, because I noted that my honorable friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] had once reported it adversely and that other Senators had done the same. But when it was considered in another place in this Capitol, fully debated, and finally unanimously passed, I felt it my duty to give it an examination, and I have given it a great deal of time and attention.

The circumstances are these: Warren Mitchell, at the time of the breaking out of the war, was a citizen of Kentucky, doing a mercantile business. He had something like $116,000 due him in Southern States, and was owing money himself. In a consultation with bankers and other creditors of his at his place, Mr. Mitchell was advised by them to go South and undertake to collect for the merchandise that he had sold, in merchandise or in cash, or to make the best settlement he could, in order that he might in turn pay his own creditors.

He received a pass from the highest officer and authority available—General Anderson, who was in command of that division—and crossed the line. He approached his debtors, taking cotton for their debts in some cases, and taking Confederate currency in others, and then exchanged that currency for cotton. He was thus engaged south of the line until 1864, when Sherman's army arrived at Savannah. His cotton was taken under the captured and abandoned property act.

Mr. Mitchell was a loyal supporter of the Union. His cotton is accounted for. I have here on my desk a statement from the Treasury Department showing an account of every bag of cotton and stating upon which particular books of the Treasury it is listed, and also a statement that the cotton was sold for the exact amount which this bill proposes to pay.

Mr. Mitchell went before the Court of Claims, as was provided——

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for just a moment?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Was the amount of money for which the cotton was sold turned into the Treasury?

Mr. WARREN. It was; and it is there now. Mr. President, I wish it distinctly understood that this bill does not propose to pay one dollar of the money of the United States to this man. It simply restores to him, after some thirty-five or forty years of waiting, the exact amount of money that the United States got from the sale of his cotton and put into the Treasury.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Wyoming is willing to admit that that is not conceded either by the Treasury Department or by a number of gentlemen who have given this subject consideration.

Mr. WARREN. What is not conceded?

Mr. ALDRICH. The fact that the money is in the Treasury of the United States belonging to this man.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island intends perhaps to be captious, but the Secretary of the Treasury does say that that amount of money was received and put into the Treasury of the United States and that it has not been paid out to this claimant.

Mr. ALDRICH. It certainly has not been paid out to this man.

Mr. WARREN. Or to anybody else.

Mr. ALDRICH. There was unquestionably a large amount of money received into the Treasury of the United States, the proceeds of sales of captured and abandoned cotton, but that it belongs to Mr. Mitchell or to anybody else, or that Mr. Mitchell or anybody else has any legal or equitable right to it is denied both by the Treasury Department and by others who have examined this question.

Mr. WARREN. Well, the Treasury Department acknowledges a certain amount of money received from cotton, and states that it is accounted for as being captured from the Confederacy. But as to this particular cotton, the Treasury Department does not maintain that position, because it traces the cotton and money all the way through. I have papers here from the War and Treasury Departments which account for this particular cotton and tell upon what pages of the Treasury books it is entered up. So there is no kind of question—I repeat, there is no kind of question—but that this cotton was sold by the United States and the amount stated received for it. It is so stated by the courts, as to the exact amount of money, and that that money went into the Treasury of the United States and has not been paid out to Mitchell or to anybody else for this cotton.

The Court of Claims divided evenly on this case. It is not stated how, but the Court of Claims report states that they divided equally, and the Supreme Court makes the same statement. I am assuming that there were four judges—two and two. Therefore the suit was lost, and it was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court, after a hearing, decided against the claim on the sole ground that Mr. Mitchell was a resident of Kentucky, and therefore the court must apply the nonintercourse act, and it denied him the restitution which he sought.

This is the only question in this case. It may be well to note that Mr. Mitchell obtained his permission and went South before there was any proclamation carrying into effect the nonintercourse act; and in equity it may be well to note that he did not go down there to buy and sell cotton, with a capital in cash to speculate with and to make money, but went down there to collect his debts; and it is well also to note that the amount of the debts he went South to collect corresponds very closely with the amount the Government received for the cotton sold.

It is true—and any lawyer can state that much better than I—that the Supreme Court has passed on this question, but there are a great many such cases that come before Congress. That is what we have a Committee on Claims for, I assume, and I assume that is the reason why we take cases up here for settlement, because the Departments or the courts do not find themselves always able under the exact technical terms of the law to do that which is entirely and palpably equitable.

The Supreme Court, in trying this case, at the end of its opinion makes this significant statement:

> Obviously important further facts bearing on the question might have been put in evidence by either party. We regret that this was not done. As the case is presented, our conclusion must necessarily be against the appellant.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not find that quotation in the opinion.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator doubts it, I will send it to him.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not in the opinion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not find it.

Mr. WARREN. As it comes to a matter of veracity, the Senator will allow me to show him whether I am right or he is right.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not see it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not see it.

Mr. PETTUS. Would it interrupt the Senator from Wyoming if I asked him a question about this case?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly not.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to know the difference between this case and the hundreds of others that have been pending here for years and years.

Mr. WARREN. I will get to that in a moment.

Mr. SPOONER (to Mr. WARREN). Here is the opinion.

Mr. WARREN. That is not the entire case or opinion. I have the complete opinion here for the inspection of the Senator if he wishes to see it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have the complete opinion as published.

Mr. WARREN. I have it as published in the Court of Claims report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Oh, the Court of Claims!

Mr. ALDRICH. The decision of the Court of Claims!

Mr. LODGE. That is not the Supreme Court.

Mr. WARREN. Quoting the Supreme Court.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish the Senator would read it, if it is there.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing in Wallace about it.

Mr. WARREN. Was Mr. Justice Swayne on the Court of Claims or was he on the Supreme Court?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On the Supreme Court.

Mr. WARREN. Very well. Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court. It passes along, and here in the syllabus is the last paragraph:

> Obviously important further facts bearing on the question might have been put in evidence by either party. We regret that this was not done. As the case is presented, our conclusion must necessarily be against the appellant. The judgment of the Court of Claims is affirmed.

Mr. LODGE. It is not in Wallace.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Some one must have edited the opinion, then, because in the regular official edition of the United States Supreme Court Reports that language does not appear.

Mr. WARREN. That, in Wallace, does not claim to be a full report. This from which I am reading gives the argument and the entire report, and that is Judge Swayne's opinion, as I have read it. I am informed that another edition of Wallace, the one in the library of the Cooperative Association of Lawyers, or whatever it is called, publishes opinions in full as they are uttered and written. But certain I am that the opinion as written and in the archives of the court is as I have read it and as it is published in the volume from which I read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is simply a syllabus.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This is the way the reports are published. That has been edited.

Mr. LODGE. Those are the Court of Claims Reports.

Mr. WARREN. This is not a Court of Claims Report.

Mr. LODGE. It is marked on the back "Court of Claims Report." It is not the official Supreme Court Report.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; but it quotes verbatim the opinion of the Supreme Court as uttered. If it is a question of veracity, we will leave it to the Supreme Court files; but I assert again that the Supreme Court found just that which I have stated.

Mr. LODGE. It is not in the Supreme Court Report.

Mr. WARREN. Here is a book which gives the entire argument and the entire finding or opinion. The other does not.

Mr. LODGE. That is the Court of Claims Report. They cite an opinion of Justice Swayne. The opinion of Justice Swayne in the official report of the Supreme Court—Wallace, the only official report—does not contain what is cited there.

Mr. WARREN. It does not pretend to contain the entire finding of the court.

Mr. LODGE. Then the Senator disputes the authenticity of the Supreme Court Report.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all. As far as it goes it is correct, but it does not include it all. That is the difference, as I have already explained.

Mr. SPOONER. Then it is not correct.

Mr. LODGE. It is not correct.

Mr. WARREN. I submit to the Senator the document I have here. The question may be between the Senators and the Court of Claims as to whether the Court of Claims forged an opinion of Judge Swayne. But the files of the Supreme Court will substantiate me in what I have asserted.

Mr. LODGE. If the correct report of the opinions of the Supreme Court is published in the Court of Claims Reports and not by the official reporter of the Supreme Court, it is a very serious matter indeed, because it invalidates all the Reports of the Supreme Court.

Mr. WARREN. There is no question of difference, except that the one is more ample than the other, and the one states the salient points of the opinion and the other is complete—the argument, as well as the finding and opinion.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me the more ample one should be the Supreme Court Report.

Mr. WARREN. I will leave that with the Court of Claims and the Senator. I think as to the matter of verity between myself and the other Senators, I at least have already proven the authority from which I quoted. I will submit further proof later.

Mr. FULTON. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming, although I have not examined either of these opinions, that oftentimes the opinion as published in the Supreme Court Reports gives only that portion of the opinion which deals with the issues, and this was not concerning any issue in the case. It may have been omitted from the report as published and still may be in the opinion of the Supreme Court on file.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] has asked me the difference between this and other claims. I have not had my attention called in my short service of nine years in the Committee on Claims to any similar case. The difference in this case and others is, first, that the party was loyal; second, that there is no evidence that he went into this cotton operation to take advantage of his Government, or to intentionally break or evade the law, but simply to collect the amount due him for merchandise previously sold. He was not caught trying to get cotton across the line surreptitiously. He was there pursuing his business. The cotton was taken under the abandoned-property act. As I said before, he did not allow the matter to rest, but took it promptly to court. The only question is whether the equities are persuasive enough to allow this man the money that undoubtedly belongs to him, the decision of the court against him on law points notwithstanding.

There is no claim, no shadow of a claim, made by anybody but Mitchell's heirs against this amount of money. The question is simply, Shall the United States take a bludgeon and go out on the streets and hold a man up and take from him a hundred and twenty-odd thousand dollars and use and indefinitely hold it, or shall they return it to its proper owner, it being trust funds?

There is another matter. Mr. Mitchell, before the war, was in partnership with a man by the name of Armstrong. Armstrong had gone south at a prior date. While Mitchell was in the South he discovered that Armstrong had made a contract to do certain things—that was, to butcher cattle and to deliver the meat for parties who were in rebellion. He immediately protested against the use of his name and that of the partnership, but finding himself, by the use of his name by his partner, responsible under a large bond, he stayed there for nearly a month until he could get relieved from the contract and the work. For this suspicion or shadow of suspicion of disloyalty he took advantage later on, as many another did, to apply and receive a full and free pardon.

It is intimated in the trial all through that if Warren Mitchell had made his residence south of the line, there would have been no question; he would have received the pay for his cotton. On the other hand, others who were not loyal did receive money for cotton on the ground that general amnesty granted afterwards cleansed them from their disloyalty. So had he been disloyal, he could have been paid. Had he lied and claimed his home South, where he spent his time those two or three years, he would have been paid. Shall we rob him because he was honest? Mr. Mitchell is spoken of in the highest terms as an honest, worthy man by men like General Bristow, former Secretary of the Treasury, numerous former Senators in this body who knew him, Members of the House, and others; and I am impressed from all the evidence that he was a highly respected, straightforward, honest citizen, who would not stoop to any deception to undertake to prove he had moved his home south of the line, whatever might be the results of the trial. So in the Supreme Court the case turned on that one question alone—I think I can state it that strongly—of nonintercourse; that he lived on one side, and that his property was on the other.

Now, it is for Congress to say whether the United States, which at best and most was simply a trustee in fact for the abandoned and captured property which was taken, shall retain the money. The United States paid various people, certainly all the noncombatants. But such of the cotton as belonged to the Confederacy it confiscated. There is the whole question. The United States as trustee has this much cash. This man in pursuit of his business had that much cotton which produced the cash. Shall harsh and strict adherence to the rule cause him to lose that money and the Government to retain it? That is all there is to the case.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I knew the claimant in this case intimately pretty nearly all my life. He is entitled to every encomium that has been passed upon him, whether by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] or by former Senator Stevenson, of Kentucky, or former Secretary of the Treasury, General Bristow. They were all intimate personal associates of the claimant, and their testimony as to his character, as to his honesty, as to his status politically is all embraced in the record before the court.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will it be too much trouble to ask the Senator to put that into the record of the Senate?

Mr. BLACKBURN. To put what?

Mr. ALDRICH. To put those statements into the record of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would be very glad to do it, but I would have to get them from the records of the court. The report filed by the Committee on Claims in the Senate shows the Senator where they are. The report which I have in my hand recites the statements of all these gentlemen—Senator Stevenson, General Bristow, Virgil McKnight, the oldest and leading banker of the city of Louisville, and many others of similar character and standing, and this claimant was entitled to——

Mr. ALDRICH. As to his respectability.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; as to his personal integrity, his high character, and all that. It is testified to in the record of the court by all these witnesses, and he was entitled to everything they said on his behalf.

The only objection I can see that can be fairly urged against the payment of this claim would be that there are many other claims equally as just and meritorious as this one which have not been favorably acted upon. I can not see how any other objection can fairly be urged against the passage of this bill. The Senator from Wyoming has stated the facts as developed in the record, and he stated them truthfully and candidly.

This case presents, then, this state of facts: Here was a citizen of Kentucky who had, at the outbreak of the war, a large amount of debts due him in the seceding rebellious States. He went there to collect those debts. I am not traveling outside of the record, nor am I perverting the testimony at all. He went there to engage in no business except to collect the debts that were due him before the outbreak of the war. In the prosecution of that effort he found it impossible to collect his debts in money, but the debtors advised him of their readiness and willingness to discharge their obligations if he would take it in cotton, which they owned, at an agreed price; which he did. Thus he succeeded in his mission. I repeat it was not a commercial or a business venture. It was simply an effort to collect what was due him from parties who were unable to pay in cash, but who were able to pay in the product of their labor and their farms.

He collected his debts in the shape of cotton. The record shows that the Federal Government came into possession of his cotton. Even the technical requirements of the law have been complied with, and the proof was furnished to the satisfaction of the Federal Government that his identical cotton was sold and the proceeds, amounting to a hundred and twenty-eight thousand dollars—I speak in round numbers—were covered into the Federal Treasury, where they are to-day. No man nor government has ever asserted an adverse title to that money. The fact that this is the identical $128,000 which the Senator——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I am just now informed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] that during this debate he has visited the Supreme Court, examined the original opinion, and found it as I have said, and I am therefore assured again that the Supreme Court finding is exactly as I stated it, the abridged Wallace notwithstanding. Must I, a layman, instruct the lawyers of the Senate concerning the law? It seems there are times when I must.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, resuming, there is no claimant to this amount of money except the one represented in this report and by this bill. It is denied by no one that the $128,000 in round numbers which this bill proposes to appropriate to pay off this claim is the identical $128,000 which the Government received as the proceeds of the sale of his cotton, and no adverse claim has been presented by anybody in this world.

Now, this bill has passed the House. It has been here, as the Senator from Wisconsin has told you, for many years. When he was the very efficient and able chairman of the Committee on Claims it was here. He did not at that time approve of the payment of this money. He has stated that fact to the Senate and stated it correctly.

The bill has been for all these years under the searchlight of the two Committees of Claims of the two Houses of Congress. It has at last passed the House. The severest scrutiny possible to which you may subject any measure this bill has endured, and here is the result—the Committee on Claims unanimously reporting in favor of the passage of this House bill. The question of loyalty was settled. The question of ownership was settled. Every bar that could be pleaded was interposed, and this is the result.

Now, I appeal to the Senate. If the Senate shall refuse to pass this House bill, thereby insisting upon the Government holding still longer the $128,000 which it is conceded the Government holds to-day as a trustee for the benefit of the owner, and there is but one claimant to the property, and there has been but one, I submit that it would be a declaration of a purpose of confiscation of private property. There is not a test to which this claimant has not been subjected in the courts of our country. He has gone through the Court of Claims, and he has gone through the court of last resort—the Supreme Court of the United States—and the result summed up in a single sentence is that his money lies in the vaults of the Treasury unclaimed by anybody, and when I say "unclaimed by anybody," I mean to include the Government of the United States, for it has no shadow of claim. Under these conditions it does seem to me that this bill should pass.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I can not give my concurrence to the proposition so often advanced here by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and repeated by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], that the Senate should pass this bill because the House has passed it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not say that.

Mr. SPOONER. Practically that. This bill, the Senator said, was unanimously reported by the committee in the House—I assume that his statement is an accurate one—and that it was passed by the House. Of course, we know that. But the question is whether it shall be passed by the Senate. It never has been the rule of legislation that either House blindly passes a measure because it has passed another, and it never ought to become the rule.

Each House is confronted with its own obligation of duty and its own responsibility to the public, just as each and every member of each House is; and every measure which is presented to the Senate, as every measure which is presented to the House, should have the benefit of independent investigation and debate, and it should be, when it passes, the result of the intelligent judgment of Congress.

Mr. President, the vice of the statement so often reiterated by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], whose absence I regret——

Mr. WARREN. I am not very far off.

Mr. SPOONER. Whose presence delights me, and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], that the $128,000 in the Treasury is the property of Warren Mitchell, and therefore his legal representatives are entitled to it, is this: There is not the slightest foundation in law or in fact, whatever conclusion the Congress might reach on general considerations, for that statement. The truth is that the pendency of this bill in the Congress is an appeal from a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Supreme Court of the United States decided in a case between the United States and Warren Mitchell, res adjudicata, a matter of eternal verity from the standpoint of the law, that Warren Mitchell was a citizen of Kentucky. He claimed, until an examination of the Confederate archives disclosed to the contrary, that he was a loyal citizen of Kentucky. He left Kentucky, being a member of the firm of Mitchell, Armstrong & Co., shortly after the proclamation of nonintercourse instead of before it, as I recollect the fact.

Mr. WARREN. I can say that his pass from General Anderson antedated the nonintercourse act, and I think his departure South also antedated the proclamation of the President putting into effect the nonintercourse act.

Mr. SPOONER. I care nothing about that. The Senator refers to leaving——

Mr. HALE Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. This is a very important matter, and the Senator's statements are most important. I think the Senate ought to hear them. I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Frye,	Long,	Platt, Conn.
Alger,	Fulton,	McComas,	Platt, N. Y.
Bacon,	Gallinger,	McCreary,	Quarles,
Bard,	Gamble,	McCumber,	Scott,
Bate,	Gorman,	McLaurin,	Simmons,
Berry,	Hale,	Martin,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell,	Stone,
Burnham,	Heyburn,	Money,	Teller,
Burrows,	Kean,	Morgan,	Warren.
Daniel,	Kearns,	Nelson,	Wetmore.
Dietrich,	Kittredge,	Penrose,
Dryden,	Latimer,	Perkins,
Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Pettus,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, it is a matter of no consequence when Mr. Mitchell received the pass which enabled him to go across the line, or when he carried the pass in his pocket across the line.

That pass, although it was not offered in evidence, had the effect of necessity to prohibit him—and it was issued upon that condition, as all such permits were—from violating the nonintercourse act and from giving, of course, aid and comfort to the enemy.

Now, there is a wide distinction between this case and the cotton claims that are pending here.

Most of those claims, indeed all of them, so far as I know, are claims for the proceeds of cotton seized from individual owners who lived within the limits of the Confederacy, who were citizens of the Confederacy, and many of whom of course were loyal to the Confederacy, and therefore disloyal to the United States.

The Supreme Court of the United States did hold, as the Senator from Wyoming said, that the amnesty act as to such claims was an act of oblivion equal in measure to a pardon, and that disloyalty could not be, therefore, asserted by the Government against a claim by the individual owner who had been disloyal and who had been amnestied for the proceeds of cotton which had been captured or seized by the Government and sold and the proceeds deposited in the Treasury.

The court having held that to be a trust fund, not the property of the United States, what stands now between those claimants and that fund in the Treasury, if there be such, is the statute of limitations. In none of those cases has any question been raised, so far as I remember, as to the validity of the claim which is asserted. The ownership of the property claimed, of the cotton, the proceeds of which are claimed, of course must be proven.

But in this case the difficulty is that under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which the Senate is asked to reverse, Warren Mitchell was not the owner of that cotton, and therefore he is not the owner of the proceeds of the sale of that cotton in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, will he state who does own the proceeds of the cotton?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that is another question. This property, as I recollect it, was seized at Savannah; and if Warren Mitchell did not become the owner of it, it may be that some other citizen of that State is the owner of it and would be entitled to the proceeds. That is an additional reason why this money should not be paid to the representatives of Warren Mitchell.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, the papers from the Treasury Department show there is no question as to that, and the court does not raise that question at all. The court admits the taking of the cotton, the amount of the proceeds, and rules against Mitchell upon the ground, as the Senator has stated, of the nonintercourse act.

Mr. SPOONER. That I need not question.

Mr. WARREN. The cotton certainly belonged to Mitchell and certainly was claimed by nobody else.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator made a very capable statement of this case from his standpoint, as good and thorough as a layman could be expected to make; yes, better than the ordinary layman; but the Senator begs the question. The nonintercourse act being violated, Mitchell acquired no title in law to the cotton.

Mr. TELLER. Who had the title?

Mr. SPOONER. I think the United States probably had the title. At any rate, the court held that Mitchell did not have it, because he was a citizen of Kentucky trading across the lines in violation of the nonintercourse act.

Mr. WARREN. No; not trading across the line.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. He made no attempt to trade across the line.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, he did.

Mr. WARREN. He went across with his pass and did not cross the line to acquire the cotton there, and the United States came down and took it.

Mr. SPOONER. He could not go across with his pass without going across, and what he went across was the line which divided the forces of the United States from the forces of the Confederacy.

Mr. TELLER. He had a permit.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; he had a permit to go across, but he did not have a permit to go across and trade with the enemy.

Mr. ALDRICH. Which he did.

Mr. SPOONER. And with the purpose of sending within the Union lines the cotton which was purchased of the enemy.

Mr. WARREN. There is no proof of that.

Mr. SPOONER. I think there is proof of it.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin hold, then, that the cotton belongs to the United States or does it belong to some person other than the United States?

Mr. SPOONER. It belongs to the United States certainly as against Warren Mitchell, and that is all that is involved in this discussion. The whole question raised in the Court of Claims and upon which that court evenly divided and carried to the Supreme Court of the United States was the question of Warren Mitchell's ownership of this cotton, and therefore the validity of his claim to the proceeds of the cotton sold to the Government.

That question turned on the question whether he had lost his residence in the State of Kentucky and had become a resident within the Confederate lines, a citizen of the Confederacy. If he had gone South, as his partner Armstrong did, when the war broke out, to cast in his fortunes with the Confederacy and aided it to his uttermost, his acquisition of this cotton would not have been a violation of the nonintercourse act, and this impeachment, absolutely irrefragable in law, of his ownership could not have existed.

His attitude, then, would have been the same as the attitude of some of the constituents of my friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who, in their acquisition of cotton, did not violate the nonintercourse act, and whose offense of disloyalty was obliterated, under the decision of the Supreme Court, by the amnesty. But that is not this case. Does the Senator from Wyoming contend that a contract made in violation of the nonintercourse act is valid as against the United States?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has very kindly admitted that I made a very fair statement for a layman. Sometimes a lawyer makes a fair statement from a business point of view, but as a business man doing business with his brother business men it is natural to look at the equities of the case.

If this man went South to defraud anybody, to be disloyal to his country, to take advantage of anybody, there would be no equity. If he went South to save and collect the debts due him where he had previously given credit and thus obtain means with which to pay his debts where he owed them, then in equity, as a noncom-
